Epsilon Phi Delta

The Epsilon Phi Delta Cosmopolitan Club will meet at a called meeting tonight on the second floor of the Y. M. C. A. at ten-thirty. The meeting was originally scheduled for nine-thirty, but the time has been changed.

Experimental Writing Class

Phillips Russell will conduct his conference class in experimental writing tonight at seven-thirty in room 302 on the top floor of the Alumni building. This class is scheduled to meet at the same hour and place on Monday and Tuesday of next week.

LIBRARY RECEIVES HARGRAVES' BOOK

A History of Playing Cards and a Bibliography of Cards and Gaming was recently presented to the University by the United States Playing Card Company. It was written by Catherine Perry Hargrave, librarian of that organization.

In this volume the authoress has brought together an exceptional amount of information about the ancestry of the contemporary queens, knaves and pips on our playing cards. The subject is treated with a graphic thoroughness. Approximately four hundred and fifty illustrations are included, reproduced from the world's largest playing card collection, owned by the United States Playing Card Company of Cincinnati.

Egyptians, Arabs, Chinese, and Hindus all have the origin of the playing cards attributed to them. Miss Hargraves believes that playing cards and chess sprang from the same general source, and quotes the authority of the theory that both cards and chess go back to the use of the arrow in divination, and that one or both of the games were carried into China by an outcast tribe of Hindus.

Many interesting events of the development and various sorts of card games are described by Miss Hargrave.

This book concludes with a seventy-nine page bibliography which lists every work on the subject of cards through the centuries and which should prove of distinct reference value.

Post-Election Sidelights

the Co-ed shack. This was the cause of further disruption later in the day.

Don Conklin, candidate for the office of president of the rising junior class on the Non-Frat ticket spent Monday night in Greensboro at a dance, arrived in Chapel Hill at five in the morning and slept through the election.

One of the freshmen when asked whether he would vote an All-Campus ticket, looked at the names of candidates and replied that he would except for the boy with the sissy name. A by stander inquired as to whom the sissy name belonged and received answer "McBride Fleming-Jones." The inquirer was "Mac" himself, and when the freshman learned this he was very apologetic and consoled the candidate by promising to vote for him.

Ellis Fysal, policeman of the Non-Fraternity party threatened to use his prowess unless the opposition proceeded to conduct themselves in a more "gentlemanly manner" and keep better order.

One voter was given the third degree for two solid hours by groups of politicians in relays, only to have him go to the polls and cast his ballot for the other side.

About ten pledges stayed up all Monday night going through the dormitories with coat hangers pulling Gil Pearson circulars out from under doors and distributing E. Carrington Smith's "Confession" in their place. They kept warm by building a bonfire of over two thousand of those red circulars.

J. C. "Red" Williams was kept up all the night before by cries of "Fleecy" which resounded across the campus.

Several of the freshmen got off to a fast start in their political careers by posing as seniors, by selecting the names of seniors who had dropped out of school for this quarter.

Three students, who lived out in town, refused to vote unless their laundry bags were carried out to the laundry. As the time was getting short and the outcome in doubt twenty minutes were spent in collecting and delivering the parcels. Then, and then only would the three votes be secured.

A squad of the weaker sex were on hand lending their support for their respective candidates. One of them was heard to ask a prospective voter whether he was voting for the All-Campus for Non-Campus party.

Southern chivalry came to the front when many of the co-eds were allowed to avoid the rush and waiting in line. (Providing that they voted with these polite gentlemen).

And all the while John Albert Lang, chairman of the All-Campuss party, sat at a desk in the lobby calmly eating apples and oranges.

The heaviest voting of the day was for the office of president of the student union, 1525 ballots being cast. "Spec" McClure, elected editor of the Carolina Magazine, received the largest number of votes cast for any one candidate and also had a larger majority over his opponent than any other man.

The shutting of the door of the ballot room promptly at five o'clock was the signal for all the politicians to toss their circulars in the air letting out one vociferous yell and give a sigh of relief. In five minutes the "Y" lobby was empty except for the sea of colored paper the remains of the fight, covering the floor and the janitor already beginning a "clean campaign."

BOB MADRY EDITS TAR HEEL EDITION OF A.C.P.A. PAPER

Does Good Job of Advertising Publicity Convention Here April 23, 24, 25.

PUBLICIZES UNIVERSITY

A group of six distinguished men will address the hundred or more delegates who are expected to attend the convention of the American College Publicity Association in Chapel Hill, April 23, 24, and 25. On April 1, a "Tar Heel Edition" of Ink Slings, official bulletin of the association, was sent out by Bob Madry of the University news bureau, who is the convention secretary.

Although it is dated on April Fool's Day, the Tar Heel Edition is fool-proof job of newspaper editing. Besides being a whale of a good publicity man for the University, as he is recognized, Madry has done excellent work in advertising the convention, as well. Furthermore, the issue of Ink Slings "thrown by Robert W. Madry" carries considerable information about the University. It seems that Madry never forgets his primary concern, that of advertising the school.

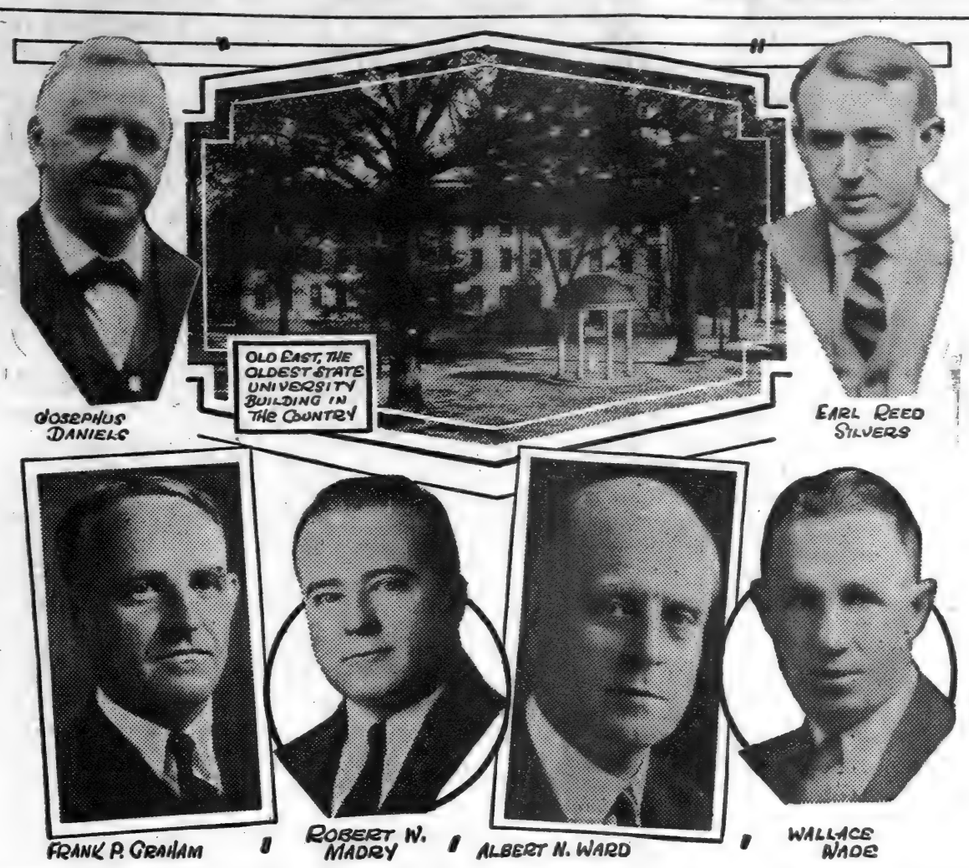
An incredable amount of information and ballyhoo about the convention is contained in the edition, which is similar in appearance to the old triweekly Tar Heel and was printed on the Orange Printship presses. It tells every thing from how one may get to Chapel Hill to what one may expect when he gets here.

Various sessions of the convention will be addressed by the following men, whose pictures are printed elsewhere in this paper: At the banquet, the Honorable Josephus Daniels, editor of the Raleigh News and Observer and Secretary of the Navy in Wilson's cabinet, and President Frank P. Graham of the University will speak.

Madry himself will appear on the program, welcoming the convention to Chapel Hill and the University.

The general session on the Friday morning, April 24, will be addressed on "Publicity and the Liberal Arts College Movement" by President A. N. Ward of Western Maryland College.

Presiding over the convention will be the association president, Earl Reed Silvers, who will deliver the opening address. Silvers is director of publicity at Rutgers College.



Madry himself will appear on the program, welcoming the convention to Chapel Hill and the University.

Sessions of the convention at which different phases of athletics as related to the college publicity man's work are to be discussed by Wallace Wade, new football coach at Duke, and by Bob Fetzer, University athletic director.

The entertainment being arranged by Madry for the visitors provides for a banquet and dance, with music by the Caro-

Speakers for Publicity Association Convention, April 23, 24, 25

Above are shown six of the outstanding speakers who will appear on the program of the American College Publicity Association which convenes in Chapel Hill April 23, 24, and 25. The Honorable Josephus Daniels is editor of the Raleigh News and Observer and was Secretary of the Navy in Wilson's cabinet. Earl Reed Silvers, publicity director for Rutgers College, is the president of the association. Speaking for the first time in Chapel Hill since he came to North Carolina is Wallace Wade, new football coach at Duke University, recently of the University of Alabama. Another man who is not in publicity work but who will address the convention is President A. N. Ward of Western Maryland College. Robert W. Madry, director of the University news bureau, and President Frank P. Graham of the University, whose speaking ability is in demand for every sort of occasion, are among the University men who will talk to the publicity men.

In advertising the convention through a special "Tar Heel Edition" of the association's bulletin, "Ink Slings," Mr. Madry, who is convention secretary, also did much to advertise the University. Placing a photograph of the Well and Old East building in the center of the picture above, which also appeared in "Ink Slings," was one of the things he did in that direction.

HOBBS OUTLINES WORK REQUIRED OF ALL STUDENTS

Four Courses Must Be Passed In Two Successive Quarters.

The office of Dean A. W. Hobbs again calls the attention of the students of the liberal arts school to the scholastic requirements of the school.

The present rule is that an upper classman must pass at least four courses in any two successive quarters, a freshman two courses in the same length of time. For three quarters an upper classman must pass seven courses, and a freshman five.

For example, a student might pass four courses in the fall, one in the winter, and two in the spring, but he would not be eligible for the next fall quarter since he would not have passed four courses in the winter and spring quarters. An upper class man must pass at least one course each quarter.

When deficiencies are made up by correspondence or by attendance at summer school the number of courses needed is increased by one. This means that if a student passes only six courses in the three quarters, and intends to make up his work either by correspondence or at summer school he must not only make up the one course that he is lacking but also another.

ELABORATE BALLS PLANNED BY TWO UPPER CLASSES

Juniors and Seniors Engage Johnny Hamp for Dances, April 24, 25.

The set of junior-senior dances are to be given in the Tin Can on the week-end of the twenty-fourth and twenty-fifth of this month. The Junior Prom is scheduled for Friday night, the twenty-fourth, and the Senior Ball will follow on the following evening.

Up until this year class dances have been more or less informal affairs, but plans so far seem to indicate that this year's dances will be an elaborate affair. The Tin Can is to be decorated probably in a fashion similar to what it was on the German Club final set last year.

Johnny Hamp and his Kentucky Serenaders have been engaged to play for the occasion. It is planned to have fifty patrons from the state present.

Tickets for the dances are to be distributed by the dance committee at the "Y" building within the next two weeks. All juniors and seniors are requested to obtain tickets, and members of both classes may secure tickets for both nights.

Circulation Manager

Phillips Russell, noted author, has recently been appointed as circulation manager of the Chapel Hill Weekly. It is the new manager's plan that the present circulation of around 1200 be increased to a number around five or six thousand.

Sickness Decreases

There has been a considerable drop in the number of students on the infirmary list. Those men who composed the list yesterday were as follows: Donald Cooke, F. C. Wardlaw, Sidney Shapiro, K. A. Prochazka, A. S. Walker, and W. D. Croom.

FACULTY MAKES COURSE CHANGES FOR NEXT YEAR

Freshmen Must Continue English and History Courses Throughout Year.

Freshmen registering for the fall quarter of the next University session will be confronted with much more exhaustive requirements than were in force this year. Consulting the new catalogue just issued, it is noted that the faculty has made certain new departures in the arrangement of courses.

All of the new men will be required to take a course in English which will last throughout the entire year, meeting only three times per week. Those students who do not qualify for English 1a will have to take a course in grammar for which no credit will be given.

All freshmen, according to the new plan, must register for History 1, 2, and 3 during their first year. These courses will likewise meet only three times a week. History 3, a course in American history, has been added because of the fact that many high school graduates enter college with only a small knowledge of United States history.

Changes have also been inaugurated in the sophomore English requirements. Next year the present courses of English 3, 4, and 5 are to be made into only two courses which will be required of all second year men. These two newly formed courses will go under the head of English 21 and 22.

Contrary to the custom this year, no juniors will be allowed to register for courses which are especially designated for "advanced undergraduates," except on special permission.

CAMPUS OBJECTS TO NEW RULINGS ON CLASS CUTS

Psychology Department Institutes Rigid System of Fines For Absences.

Much criticism of the manner in which certain University departments have been putting into effect more stringent regulations on class attendance has been heard about the campus lately. Last quarter, after a lengthy campaign on the part of the students for optional attendance, the members of the faculty, apparently unmoved by their demands voted to pass a rule to go into effect next fall establishing compulsory attendance to all classes. At this same meeting a regulation was also put into effect giving the separate departments complete control over the attendance question for this spring quarter.

Acting with this rule as their foundation the departments have this quarter placed certain class-attendance requirements on the students under their control, and it is this action which had been unduly criticized by the members of the student body.

Some of the specific acts which have been passed by the different departments are much more stringent than ever before in the history of the University. For example, according to the new regulation recently enacted by the psychology department, all students missing class will be required to pay the fine of fifty cents for the make-up provided the absentee has a reasonable excuse; in case of no excuse said absentee will be fined the sum of one dollar. These same fines also apply to labs. If the student misses a quiz which has been announced in advance he must make it up with the fine of one dollar, if he has an excuse for his absence, and in case of an unexcused absence the instructor may either fine the absentee two dollars for the make-up or give him an "F" on that test.

In the schools of liberal arts and commerce the officials now require that each student is allowed only five unexcused absences on each course during an entire quarter, and when this number has been reached the pupil shall be dropped from that course.

The rule which is to go into effect next fall states that the "maximum number of unexcused absences shall not exceed, during any quarter, the number of weekly meetings of the class, provided that any department may impose penalties for a less number of absences." The complete statement of the new regulation is published in full in the 1930-31 issue of the University catalogue which is just off the press.

ARGUMENTS OVER APPROPRIATIONS START IN HOUSE

University Budget Is Principal Bone of Contention in Legislative Squabbles.

COMMITTEE MAY SECEDE

Arguments over the appropriations bill, which includes the item of the University budget, has caused the house committee on appropriations to threaten secession from the joint body. This is a probable forecast of the continuation of the committee and house war, in which the University appropriation matter is the principal bone of contention.

The house threat of secession, made Wednesday afternoon following completion of business, was probably stayed by reflection that after all it might be illegal. There are differing views, the predominant one being that the committee has gone far enough to justify the quitting at this stage. The trouble is deep. The committee is in the fix of having lifted appropriations about $830,000 above the budget recommendations. They did not heft the revenue in the lifting, but that is a detail. As the proposed bill goes to the house the chairman of the house appropriations committee, Mr. Harris, of Person, is in the anomalous position of presenting a proposal which is disfavored by a majority of his own committee.

The appropraitions bill as written provides for $18,100,000 plus and that includes the $6,500,000 equalization fund for the schools. The measure does not pretend to consider the larger appropriations necessary for financing the schools without ad valorem tax.

The item likely to produce the biggest row is that relating to the University. The budget committee set the figures for the University at $573,000. In the generosity of the appropriations committee, that was raised to $875,000. Then $75,000 was taken off. But there will be one furious warfare over the $800,000. The committee favors the appropriation and the house is in the position of holding its purse and shrieking for the police.

Poets Read Before Paul Green's Class

During the first part of the week, students in Paul Green's class in the philosophy of literature, Philisophy 16, heard two eminent poets who are visiting Chapel Hill just now. The first of these was George O'Neill, promising young poet, who read a number of verses from his volume God Beguiled and others from his most recent book.

The second man to speak before the class was Percy Mackaye, a poet and dramatist of established reputation. First of all, Mr. Mackaye, a pleasant middle-aged gentleman with almost white hair, read from a book of his daughter's and from one of his own.

Reporters Suspended

Eight reporters have been temporarily suspended from the staff and will be required to report to the managing editor this afternoon between the hours of one-thirty and two o'clock. No excuse whatsoever will be accepted for not doing so. The reporters are: Silverstein, Spruill, Fleming-Jones, Poe, Davis, Kelly, Betts, and Ashley.

Applications for Publications Jobs

The Publications Union Board will elect the business managers, circulation managers, and managing editors of the several student publications Tuesday night, April 7, in the office of J. M. Lear, treasurer of the board. All applications for these positions must be sent in to Mr. Lear's office, 109 Bingham hall before noon of that date.

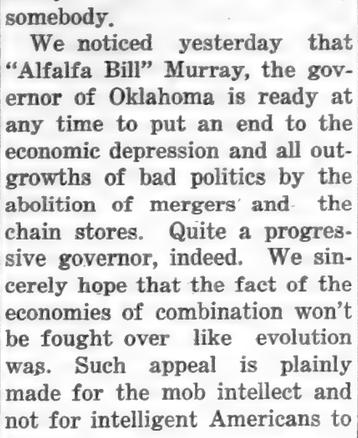
The Money Fight Is Still On

After wrangling through the revenue bill, the House is now faced with the appropriations measure which was reported out of committee Tuesday. A fight began almost immediately over the question of whether the committee could change its appropriations after the bill had been reported out. The outcome of this fight will not likely affect the final outcome of the bill, but it will not aid the house in its effort to keep its temper.

The appropriations bill holds the greatest interest for the University and other state institutions. Although the committee has approved a budget of $800,000 for the University and proportional amounts for other state institutions it does not mean that these amounts are final by any means. The legislateur is not bound by committee recommendations and with the temper of the legislature in its present condition there seems no way of determining the final outcome.



While the House considers the appropriations bill the Senate will discuss and work over the revenue measure. The two acts overlap to a large extent and the action taken on either affects the other. After the House finishes the appropriations measure then it will be necessary to await the action of the Senate before knowing the fate of the University. We believe that Mr. Graham's appeal for education in North Carolina is still strong enough in the minds of the legislators to hold them in line for the state's institutions, but with conditions as they are over there almost anything might happen.

Best Men In Politics

It has been very amusing to watch the struggle which has been going on in the federal legislature for the balance of power. Senator Norris has certainly caused quite a commotion with his progressive tactics. He seems to have persuaded a good-sized group of Democrats to flock to his standard as well as the more expressive of the Republican group. We are of the decided opinion that this expression of political unrest is of great benefit to the country. It seems to us that a rather militant and crafty group of old-time political leaders have been running things their own way quite long enough. It is certainly time for a show-down by somebody.

We noticed yesterday that "Alfalfa Bill" Murray, the governor of Oklahoma is ready at any time to put an end to the economic depression and all outgrowths of bad politics by the abolition of mergers and the chain stores. Quite a progressive governor, indeed. We sincerely hope that the fact of the economies of combination won't be fought over like evolution was. Such appeal is plainly made for the mob intellect and not for intelligent Americans to follow.

Politicians are always ready to feed the multitudes; they believing with the utmost faith that quack political practices are the cure-all for their ills. It seems to us that intelligence is slowly creeping into the minds of those in the lead of things. We sincerely hope that fraud, graft, and dishonest practices in connection with the higher offices will soon disappear as the result of this new movement. Why not have our best men in politics?—O. W. D.

Dear Editor:

It is with deepest regret that I inform you that "Chips off the old Block" must be postponed until next week for—
A great big darn and a couple of damns
I can't write a column when I am having exams.
For though my teatures
Are quite human creatures
They expect me to answer questions
On the past two months' lestions.

Hoping you will be able to fill the vacancy with a "Patronize Our Advertisers" ad, I am,

Studiously yours,
Moore Bryson.

Dear Block:
Your letter received and we do accept
Your exceuses for being so inept,
The editor adds a few more damns
For column writers who take exams.
Copy's short as is usually the case
When editors and writers go off into space.
So Here's to exams and a week-end trip
And Chips Off the Block without a quip.

Yours,
The City Editors.

P. S. We believe you've been reading Odgen Nash's poetry.

Block's letter came at an inopportune moment for the staff. Beginning with the editor and working on down through the freshmen reporters everyone is getting ready for an Easter trip to see some girl. Which causes us to wonder how many of the co-eds will get flowers from the boys who court both here and yonder.

Wex Malone has promised a column for the Tar Heel in the near future and with both Wex and Block writing the columns of the Daily Tar Heel should show a little more life during the dying days of the present control.

THE MUSICAL UNIVERSITY

By Wex Malone

The Kedroff Quartet, the first musical event of the University Entertainment series, held a large audience of students, faculty, and townspeople spell-bound Tuesday evening. With one exceptional selection the quartet sang a capella during the entire concert, and with what effect! They achieved every conception of shading imaginable. Pondrous choral effects suddenly dropped to thread-spun pianissimo. There was never a glaring passage, never an overpreponderant voice. With no perceptible change in vocal quality melodies would shift from one artist to another. At no time was the audience conscious of the performance of any one individual, but always of the quartet as a unit. They sang with a delightful grace and charm seldom if ever before heard in Chapel Hill. It was a compelling performance.

The first part of the program consisted of selections by Russian composers. There were songs by Tcherpnin, Rimsky-Korsakov, and Borodin. The song with which we were all most familiar was the Chanson Indue from Sadko. The second tenor carried the melody while the remaining members maintained an effect of orchestral accompaniment provokingly undulated in the background. Occasionally a single phrase would momentarily disentangle itself from the fascinating melee of the accompaniment, only to sink back into its weaving source. This selection made me glad that even reviewers are accorded their occasional moments of sentimentality. The encore for the first part of the program was the Song of the Volga Boatmen. This number was given the conventional but very effective interpretation, an effect as though the listener were standing on the river brink, the boatmen approaching from the distance, their song increasing in volume until they have passed by. Then follows a gradual diminuendo as the boatmen pull their heavy craft away, the music dying in the distance.

The second portion of the program was made up of Russian folk songs, the third of Art songs, consisting of music by Tschaikowsky and Sokolov, and the last of songs by non-Russian composers, namely Kucken, Abt, and Strauss. It was the Evening Serenade of Abt that was sung, for the greater part as a solo by the first tenor, with piano accompaniment.

The encore for the second part of the program was the Russian folk song, Bells. The second bass and the second tenor alternated in giving the effect of the tones of gigantic bells on which was superimposed the folk melody. This number was perhaps accorded the most enthusiastic reception of the evening. Its effectiveness was to no small extent due to the astounding depths reached by the basso, especially on the concluding tone of the selection. Certainly we who have heard so much of the deep Russian basso were not disappointed in Mr. Kedroff.

Despite the rain, only one feature marred the pleasure of the concert. Some ambitious inventor would make a fortune could he but devise a crackle-proof paper for programs.

An instrument has been invented that measures to the 5,000,000 of an inch. It should be useful to a motorist trying to find a place to park his car.—Passing Show.

AMAZE A MINUTE
SCIENTIFACTS — BY ARNOLD

With Contemporaries

A Wiser and Kinder Policy

An interesting criminal case has just closed in Norfolk, Virginia: interesting because it displays a new approach to the perennial question of races in the South and because it throws light on what may be the results of the wanton practice of the "third degree" by the police.

William Harper, a 22-year-old Negro, was arrested last January and accused of attacking a white woman, in Portsmouth, Virginia, January 6. The public did not learn who the woman was because it is the practice of the newspapers not to publish the names of victims of rape, and the law allows that such persons may make a deposition and not appear in court against the accused. The police turned in a signed "confession," witnesses were found who had "seen" the attack, and Harper was sentenced to the electric chair.

The court-appointed defense attorney and many citizens were not satisfied with the verdict. The name of the woman, Mrs. Dorothy Skaggs, was revealed. A new trial was granted. In this trial, despite the bag of tricks of the prosecuting attorney, Harper was acquitted. Persons who were in the company of Mrs. Skaggs on the night of January 6 testified that she was at a dance hall in North Carolina that night and until the next morning "with a married man," and this man himself, against his wishes, admitted that such was the truth. Harper told how he was compelled to sign the confession, how the third degree was applied. In the end it was proved that the woman was not attacked at all.

The interesting thing, of course, is not the fact that a woman lied or that a Negro was perjured almost into the electric chair. The significant factors are that in Norfolk, Virginia, below the Mason and Dixon line, there were white men and white women who were willing to appear in court and testify in behalf of a Negro who was accused of a sex crime; that the daily papers throughout the state have since demanded that those who perjured be brought to account; and that some white ministers and many more citizens have dared to preach and write letters to editors asking that justice be done; and that every articulate voice has asked the question "How many Negroes have been lynched or electrocuted because a white woman accused and the police extorted false confessions?"

"For the honor of the courts," says the Roanoke World-News, "it is to be hoped that he (the Commonwealth's attorney) will bring this matter to a test. I time for notice to be given t where a human life is invo

Penn Gets The Short End, 2 To 0

Pitcher Shields Hurls Shutout As Tar Heels Wield Mighty Sticks

Game Frought with Spectacular Plays; Carolinians Bunch Hits To Drive Across Pair.

SHIELDS FANS EIGHT MEN

Pennsylvania Brought Team of Veterans; Held Eastern Second Place Title Last Year.

Reversing last Monday's form completely, the Tar Heels, behind the air tight pitching of Shields, blanked the University of Pennsylvania nine yesterday at Emerson Field.

The Tar Heels were an entirely different aggregation yesterday, fielding the ball snappily and batting hard in the pinches.

The big gun of the victory was the hurling of Shields. The big boy had the Quakers biting on his slow curve and breezed the fast ones past their noses. Jim's control also was very good, walking but two batters and allowing only six hits. In addition Shields struck out eight men, all of them in the first six innings.

Penn threw a scare into the Carolina fans in the opening inning by filling the bases, but Shields steadied down and retired the side scoreless. Cressman drove a sharp single to right field and was sacrificed to second by Carlsten, who was safe when Wyrick dropped the ball. Graupner lucked out on a hit when Shields slipped while fielding the ball. However, Hendler fanned, and a fast play, Ferebee to Wyrick ended the session.

Carolina counted a run in their half of the inning on two hits. Ferebee walked, stole second and rode home on Peacock's triple to left field.

There was no further scoring until the fourth inning when Carolina scored her final run. Powell singled but was picked off first on a decision for which Umpire Hubbard came in for plenty of booing. House's long fly to left field was misjudged by Cressman and it fell for a double. Ferebee shot a single through second base and House scored.

The umpire got in bad right from the start. In the first inning with a man on first, Captain Carlsten smashed a ball down the short stop's lane; Ferebee made a pretty pick up and threw to Wyrick at second. As Wyrick drew back his arm to complete the double play, the ball slipped out, the runner being declared safe at second. Everybody but the Penn squad protested but as usual the umpire was right.

Big Jim Peterson, the Quaker hurler, also plays football, and is captain elect of the basketball team. Walter Masters, pitcher and outfielder, is the same boy who thrilled the East last fall on the gridiron.

Johnny Peacock, who together with Shields, starred, crossed up the Penn outfiielder in the first inning. Peacock is a left handed hitter, and when he lifted a high fly to left field, it was good for a triple, where under ordinary conditions it would have been a putout.

Carlsten, Penn second sacker, robbed Peacock of another hit in the fifth frame, running into center field to take Johnny's Texas Leaguer. However, Pete Wyrick returned the compliment on Cressman in the seventh.

That certainly was a pretty catch that Powell made in the third on Grauper's foul. Billy had to go way out to the visitors' bench to nab the ball.

Peacock was the main show in the eighth inning, being responsible for all the outs. Johnny climaxed a pretty catch with a beautiful throw from deep center to first base for the only double play of the game.

Washington and Lee today at Emerson Field at 4 o'clock.

At The Game

By Shoemaker

Called off a game of "Filchum" with the news editor long enough yesterday to saunter by Emerson and watch the Tar Heels whitewash Penn. (Filchum is played by two men, usually the news editor and your assistant sports editor, who sit at their respective desks and match pennies to see who will answer telephone calls.)

Carolina's fiielding and pitching looked pretty good, and the batting wasn't anything to sniff at. Shields held the mound down to gather a good portion of strike outs and start a good whiff record for the year.

The umpire came in for a laugh around the fourth or fifth inning when a foul ball caught him in the front of the mask and stuck there. Carefully removing the protector, the official extracted the missile which was firmly wedged between two ribs (of the mask) to the encouraging yells of the umpire-loving spectators.

Irish, Umpire Hubbard is well known around these parts. He officiates in the Sally League. A few of us were puzzled, aware of his extraction, when he grunted in an Italian accent "Don't hitta me," while several of the boys were tossing the ball around after a put-out.

We watched with interest the progress of a lad named Hendler, who aside from playing third base, wore the number "13" on his back. We fully expected a hot grounder to mow him down, but had to be content when he fanned a couple of times.

Pitcher Shields was up twice in one inning. That's not unusual, but only three men batted in that frame. It seems that there was a mixup in bat-

FIFTY ENROLLED AS SPRING PUGS HOLD WORKOUTS

Majority of Men Entering In Intramural Tournament; Many Inexperienced.

With three days of the spring boxing practice passed, the squad has jumped to nearly fifty men, most of whom are entered in the intramural tournament. The majority of the squad is without experience, and Coaches Crayton Rowe and Archie Allen are holding daily instructions classes in order to give the boys a thorough training in the fundamentals before they go into the ring. The squad has been growing daily with the return of several reserves from this year's squad, and the rest of the 1931 squad is expected to report for training soon.

One of the latest to report was Cecil Jackson, varsity welterweight who fought his first year on the squad this winter. Jackson was in two bouts this year, winning one and losing the other to Lewis of Penn State, finalist at the 1930 Intercollegiate tournament. The welterweight class will be without a letterman next year, and Coach Rowe is seeking diligently for someone to replace Dail Holderness who made his monogram in the 145 pound class this winter. Holderness has fought only one year, but he will not be in school next year. Paul Hudson, freshman prospect and Billy Stallings, of the 1930 freshman squad, are other welterweights with experience already at work.

Another man to report during the early part of the week was Jack Farris, reserve on the 1930 squad. Farris was not out for boxing this winter, but is planning a comeback and hopes to fight in Noah Goodridge's old class at 135 pounds. Jack fought in this weight year before last and won his only bout of the year with a technical knockout in the fourth round against South Carolina.

Johnny Nicholson, one of this season's freshmen welterweights, has also begun work as has George Brown, intramural star two years ago. Nicholson fought only once this year and won a technical knockout against Virginia Tech in the second round.

George Barclay, freshman football star, is out in the light-heavyweight class. Barclay entered the intramural tournament this winter and made an excellent showing before being eliminated by Peyton Brown. Brown, freshman knockout artist, has not been able to start work yet. He has been in the infirmary lately with another attack of measles and is not expected to take any real work for some time.

Marty Levinson is the only monogram wearer out for practice. Levinson began light workouts Monday afternoon and will probably go into the ring in a few days. So far there has been little work in the ring although Coach Allen has done a little sparring every day with some of the more experienced candidates.

"No Parking"

With the coming of spring, an increase of Hay fever, and a bigger demand for revenue, the police department has recently announced a stricter enforcement of the parking regulations. All persons are reminded of the fact that they are not allowed to park near "no parking" signs or within white lines bearing these words.

CAROLINA PLAYS GENERALS TODAY TO OPEN LEAGUE

Washington and Lee Have Many Good Hitters; Either Edwards or Longest To Pitch.

Their two series with Cornell and Pennsylvania concluded, the Carolina nine was set tonight for the week-end's opening of their Tri-State League season.

Washington and Lee plays here this afternoon at four o'clock, and Maryland meets the Tar Heels here Saturday afternoon at three.

Early season dope ranks the Generals and the Liners as about the two topmost outfits in the Tri-State.

As a result Coach Jim Ashmore has saved Edwards and Longest, Carolina's steadiest veterans, to pitch these two games, and expects to shoot the works to get Carolina off to a good league start.

Washington and Lee lost its prior Tri-State engagement to Maryland 3-1. Jarrett pitched well, but his mates could touch Milburn of Maryland for only one hit after the first inning, in which Routon and Mattox singled and Fitzgerald tripled.

If they didn't hit against Maryland, the Generals certainly showed potentialities in a previous game with Bridgewater. Washington and Lee won 12-0, pitchers Methvin and Williams allowing but one hit apiece, and Routon, Fitzgerald and Thibodeau hitting homers.

The Virginians are expected to be back in their hitting stride for Carolina, but if Longest pitches, they will be opposing a hurler who held Cornell to six hits, scattered over as many innings, and if it's Edwards, they'll be up against a man just as good.

Washington and Lee's lineup this afternoon will probably be Routon, ss; Mattox, c; E. Richardson, cf; Fitzgerald, 1b; J. Richardson, rf; Cronin, 3b; Cross, 2b; Williams, lf; and Jarrett, Methvin or Williams, pitcher.

Carolina will probably stick to the same batting order as worked so well against Cornell: Ferebee, ss; Wyrick, 2b; Peacock, 3b; Dunlap, 1b; Blythe, cf; Potter, c; Davis, rf; House, lf; and Longest or Edwards, p.

Date Of State Track Meet Is Moved Up As Lions Cancel Game

Penn State Has Conflicting Tentative Date; Maryland Is Saturday Diamond Foe.

TAR BABIES ARE ACTIVE

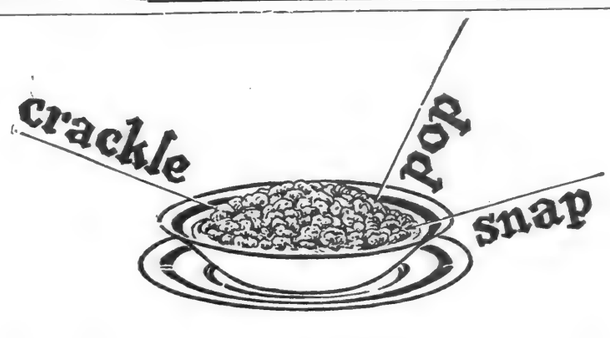
Farmer Out of State Meet While Jensen May Not Run; State Brings Stellar Dash Men.

Friday afternoon's track and field meet with N. C. State has been moved to Saturday afternoon at two o'clock and the game of baseball scheduled that afternoon with Penn State has been cancelled, athletic officials announced yesterday. The change in schedule resulted when it was learned that Penn State had made a tentative date with another institution. Washington and Lee meets the Tar Heel nine this afternoon at four o'clock and Maryland Saturday at the same hour.

Simultaneously with the varsity track meet there will be a contest between State's Frosh and Carolina's Yearlings, who already have beaten Charlotte's state high school champs 89½-22½ and Duke's Frosh 90-36.

Charlie Farmer, Southern dash champion, and Clarence Jensen, Southern indoor record holder on the mile, were both out of last week's meet with Presbyterian with injuries. Farmer is definitely out for the State meet, and Jensen may not run. To make it worse, State has some of its best stars concentrated in the events of Farmer and Jensen.

In the dashes Stout and Silver, football stars, and Floyd make the Techmen unusually strong, and in the distance runs they have Captain George McGinn, who has taken first place in the half-mile in the last outdoor and indoor meets of the Conference, and another good man in Henry Ricks.



The weight-throwing contests are expected to produce some more high grade competition. State has a quintet of big gridders, and one of the five, Sam Gurneau, bettered the Conference discus record in an exhibition meet last year. The others are Cobb, Wilson, Seitz, and Clevenger.

Carolina romped off with its first meet with P. C. by an 88-38 score, but the S. I. A. A. champions didn't show nearly so much as they were expected to show. Theron Brown, gridder and weightman, was high scorer. Slusser also showed up well in hurdles and dashes, Marland in the dashes, Weil in the quarter, Jones in the Mile, Baucom in the two mile, Ruble and Arnold in the vault, Bagby and Hamlet in the high jump, and Hodges, a newcoming gridder, in the shot.

MEMORIAL TO BE FINISHED BY JUNE

Committee of Faculty, Alumni, And Students to Control Disposal of Rooms.

Construction work is being carried on rapidly on the Graham Memorial building and within the next week the pillars will have been set up on the portico. At the present rate of construction, the work is expected to be completed by commencement. The building will certainly be ready for use by September, when the furnishings will have been bought and installed.

It is not yet known on the campus what allotment will be made of rooms, whether they were to be given to the "Y," publications, student government, or other special organizations. As a matter of fact, the allotment of rooms has not as yet been decided, and is to be left in the hands of a special committee of representatives of the faculty, alumni, and students equally represented. This group has not as yet been named, but it is understood that President Frank Graham will appoint it soon, with the intention of its meeting during commencement week. It will be up to this committee to decide what, if any, student activity offices will be placed in the building and what kind of furnishings are to be installed. Another question to be decided is whether the Y. M. C. A. is to have part of the structure.

It is hoped that some time, through gifts or subscriptions, two wings will be built onto the main part. When this is done, the Y. M. C. A. may move into one of these parts.

It is the plan of these in charge that the building should be given over entirely to the students with lounge room, entertainments, and headquarters for certain activities.

one cannot invent a story and tell it to the judge and jury under oath."

"The perjuries, cajoleries, and skullduggeries that combined to put an innocent person in immediate jeopardy of his life," asserts the Virginian Pilot, "constitutes such an affront to Justice and such a direct challenge to Society's ability to deal with those who plot to destroy its sanctions, that the difficulties cannot be pleaded as an excuse for action."

In this "land of the free and home of the brave" one should not need to take special notice of an orderly attempt to have full justice done, but it has not always been so. There are many sections of the land where a Negro accused of rape never lives to tell it to the judge, and there are only a few places in which white men and women could face their fellows and testify in the interests of such an accused Negro. It just isn't done.

The experience in Norfolk may mean that the work of the Christian associations, the Interracial commission; the activities of the folk around the University of North Carolina; and the greater knowledge of the Negro through the books and articles written by and about him have been having some effect. Norfolk has led the way that many another American city—North and South—may well follow.

Neophytes Undergo Annual "Torture" Although Sale Of Paddles Is Less

Although there seems to be a smaller demand for paddles this year for the initiation of the neophytes than ever before, the number of foolish tricks seems to be slightly on the increase. The big majority of the fraternities nevertheless have cut down considerably on the old-time "horse play" week, and have taken to more humane methods of initiation.

Many of the upperclassmen will remember one of the fraternities a few years ago required some of its pledges to lead a thin, emaciated, "she-bull" down the center of Franklin street, only to stop the frightened animal in the busiest section of the street and milk her dry. And the same fraternity also made other of its freshmen attire themselves in the garments of the fairer sex and then to spend a whole afternoon parading the streets of Chapel Hill attempting to make eyes at the handsome young students along the way.

Others will remember the time when another social group on the campus dressed several of its new men up in comic costumes in which they were made to attend classes for a week or more, making "shines" of themselves all the time. Several of the fraternities even in recent years made their pledges carry various and sundry types of pets to class with them, such as ducks, frogs, chickens, dogs, cats, and wild birds.

So far this season not many of the usual "shinings" have been as evident as they have been heretofore. A number of freshmen were seen on the Raleigh highway yesterday hailing passers to ask them if they had any "booze" for sale. One old country clergyman who was stopped by the young prisoner got out of his shabby Ford to give the hailer a lengthy lecture on how he had never touched a drop of "corn" in his day, and how much ashamed the young fellow himself should be at even going so far as to stop persons on the highway to solicit drinks. The younger generation also came in for its share of condemnation before the lanky orator got back into his vehicle and disappeared around the corner.

Another neophyte in the dress of a military cadet spent the entire yesterday afternoon down at the "Co-ed Shack" playing footman by opening and closing the doors of the cars which came up. One driver with about "three sheets in the wind" pulled up to the side of the woman's lodge and inquired of the boy if he was not the young janitor that the University had recently hired to take charge of the women.

A few of the other amusements seen recently include one poor freshman who was wearing his nose out pushing a peanut up main street, while several of his classmates were looking on in great delight.

The funniest incident yet noted occured several nights ago when one of the young pledges was required to take an old kerosene lantern and climb to the top of one of the trees in the rear of the woman's building for the sole purpose of shouting, "Don't shoot mister, I'll marry your daughter."

Other such occurances will probably be seen on the campus within the next week or so when the majority of the fraternities will be finishing up their ceremonies.

A surprise feature at the banquet will be presntd by the delegation from New York University. The fact that it is called a gridiron affair, being like those presented annually by Washington newspaper men, suggests that it may be a take-off on somebody, perhaps a great many folks.

In his "Tar Heel fling of Ink Slings," Madry also outlines all the helpful, educational parts of the program, many of which have already been pre-reviewed in this paper. The primary purpose of the convention is, of course, to help college publicity men to solve the problems of their profession and to allow them to exchange ideas.

On the whole, the Tar Heel Edition of Slings does its work of advertising the convention and the University admirably well. As "Blots and Splashes," a "colyum" in the paper, says, "There was a rotund boy named

Two Prominent Men Will Speak Before Institute Meeting

Two speakers scheduled to take part in the Human Relations Institute which is to convene here May 3-9 are Dr. Will Winton Alexander and Dr. Shailer Matthews.

Dr. W. W. Alexander is a prominent minister in the Southern Methodist Episcopal Church and makes his home in Atlanta. He is a member of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ of America, was a member of the committee on Church and Race relations and the International Sunday School Association. During the war he worked as an associate executive of the Army Y. M. C. A. and was chosen a member on the executive committee on After-War Cooperation between Races.

Dr. Shailer Matthews is a noted educator and editor connected with the University of Chicago. He was for many years professor of theology and since 1908 has been dean of the University of Chicago Divinity school. Between 1912-16 Dr. Matthews was president of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ of America. He is editor of The World Today and the author of numerous books on theology. In 1918 he came to Chapel Hill to deliver the McNair lectures.

PLAYERS MAY USE NEW AUDITORIUM

Rumor Is That New Memorial May Be Converted for Playmakers In Future.

The new Memorial hall may someday become the home of the Carolina Playmakers, according to a recent rumor going around the campus. The gossipers go on to say that the present building of the drama lovers is fast becoming too small for them, and with the steady increase in the popularity of the Playmakers, it soon would be necessary for them to enlarge their quarters.

By the looks of affairs in the General Assembly in Raleigh, such a transfer will hardly be made any time in the near future. But because of the small seating capacity of the theatre, it has become necessary to show the plays several consecutive nights, thus dividing the crowd into numbers small enough to be seating in the present building.

Several years ago the small Playmaker group was organized under the supervision of the dramatic genius, Frederick H. Koch. While the organization was in its embryonic state it used the high school stage, but after a few years it became necessary to expand the small group to larger quarters. In an attempt to establish courses in drama in the University curriculum, the administration donated the old law building to the Playmakers for their sole use. Since that time they have even outgrown their new surroundings, and are looking around for new stamping grounds.

In all probability as the group continues its expansion a larger auditorium will be absolutely required, and some person, with the imagination of an Edgar Rice Burroughs, knowing this situation, suggested that the new Memorial hall be the next "Playmakers Theatre."

Another fact that supports this rumor is that the seating capacity of the new hall is far too small for the actual needs of the University, and will be more so if its growth continues. So, it is said, when a new auditorium becomes a necessity and when the state's finances have improved to the point that it is able to spare money for that purpose, then certainly, if not before then, the Playmakers will move into the now new Memorial.

Wondering what caused the dirt below the eyes of several of the Carolina outfielders and infielders, we inquired from a fan on the bench and discovered that the smut is burnt cork which serves the same purpose as smoked glasses, protecting the player from the glaring rays of the sun on this type of diamond.

Freshmen, so unpopular at this time of the year, partly redeemed themselves when one of their number unavoidably became entangled with a Penn infielder as he ran to catch a high foul back of the bench.

University Alumnus Seeks Judge's Bench

In the coming city elections on the fifth of May, Luther James Phipps, of the law firm of Phipps and Ranson, will run for the office of judge of recorder's court.

Phipps is a native of this village and has been living here all of his life. He has been practicing law since February, 1924.

He graduated from the University with the class of 1922, and then entered the University law school, graduating from there after two years of study. While in the school he was one of the highest students in his graduating class.

While an undergraduate in the University, he was a member of the Phi Assembly and the Orange county club, of which he was president in his final year at school. He was voted the best business man in the senior class.

He was in the engineering school before entering the law school and made Phi Beta Kappa grades in that branch of the University. He was one of the most pouplar members of his class, being elected president of the senior class, the highest and most sought after office that that class offers to any of its members.

Among his numerous accomplishments at the University are listed: member of the Student Council and advisory committee of student government; student director of the Y. M. C. A.; winner of the Cain Mathematical Medal; holder of the Carr fellowship; American Legion adjutant of the Chapel Hill post; business manager of the Yackety Yack; manager of the Pickwick theatre for two years; secretary of Phi Beta Kappa; and a member of the Golden Fleece, the honorary order of the campus which chooses its men from the graduating class for outstanding achievement and accomplishment during their four years of residence at the University.

SIAMESE KING IS AWARDED DEGREE

George Washington University Honors Visiting Ruler March 30.

His Royal Majesty, Prajadhipok, King of Siam, who is now visiting in this country, received the honorary degree of doctor of laws from George Washington University, in Washington, D. C., March 30. The degree was conferred at a special convocation in the Hall of the Americas in the Pan-American Building.

The ceremony was conducted as it was strictly a reception of royalty, with all the formality possible in a republican country.

Among the distinguished people attending the ceremony were Her Majesty, Queen of Siam, Their Highnesses Prince and Princess Svasti, parents of the Queen, His Highness Prince Amoradat, Siamese Minister to this country, Commissioner of Education Cooper, Director of the American Council of Education Mann, the highest officials of the United States Government, including cabinet members and supreme court justices, and the chiefs of missions of the diplomatic corps and their wives.

In a travel film that was recently shown at the local theatre, Siam, King Prajadhipok's country, was referred to as a land where East meets West. It was said by the speaker who accompanied the film that the ruler is an educated young man, who surrounds hismelf with all modern conveniences.

MATH JOURNALS PUBLISH PAPERS BY N. C. FACULTY

Professors Henderson, Hobbs, Lasley, and Parker Have Articles Printed.

Several members of the University mathematics staff have recently had their articles published in national mathematical journals.

The December issue of the American Mathematical Monthly contains an article entitled "The Cubic and Biquadratic Equations—Vieta's Transformation in the Complex Plane," by Professors Archibald Henderson and A. W. Hobbs, in collaboration.

In 1591 Vieta gave a transformation by which the solution of a cubic equation is shown to depend on that of a quadratic. The first part of the paper by Professors Henderson and Hobbs is concerned with a study of the geometric properties of this fundamental transformation considered as a transformation in the complex plane. Two methods are given for finding graphically the roots of a cubic—one by finding the points of intersection of two ninth degree curves, the other by finding the points of intersection of two cubic curves.

The second part of this paper employs Heilermann's method to show how the biquadratic can be solved graphically by finding the points of intersection (1) of a pair of lines (2) of a line with a fixed parabola (3) of a conic with a fixed parabola.

In the February issue of the Bulletin of the American Mathematical Society there is a paper by Professor J. W. Lasley on "Penosculating Conics of a

APPROPRIATIONS MAY BE CHANGED

$7,621 Appropriated to Department of Welfare Given to State Hospital.

The joint committee of the state legislature yesterday afternoon took the item of $7,621 which had been put against the appropriation for the state department of welfare as the result of the trial of Dr. Albert Anderson, superintendent of state hospital, Raleigh, and transferred it to the state hospital.

Several weeks ago the appropriations committee placed $7,621 against the welfare department which was one half the expense of attorneys fees in that trial. The welfare department was alleged before the committee to have been responsible for the trial and the committee soaked that division.

Yesterday Henry Burke, the budget genius, in asking the committee to take the charge against the department back stated that there was an unexpected balance to the credit of the state hospital. A letter from President Thurman Kitchen of Wake Forest College written to Representative R. B. Whitley of Wake suggested that the welfare department was behind the prosecution of the state superintendent. It was contended that the welfare department ought not to be penalized for a prosecution begun by Solicitor Brassfield in the Wake court at which inquest Mr. Brassfield summoned Mrs. Kate Burr

FIRE TRUCK PAYS VISIT TO CAMPUS

For one of the first times this year, the Chapel Hill fire department visited the mid-section of the campus, when it was called out late yesterday afternoon on account of clouds of smoke issuing from a pile of leaves.

The truck stopped just past old South building, causing a traffic jam and gathering a large crowd of supper-bound students, the majority of whom could not tell where the fire was.

SONG CONTEST IS REOPENED DUE TO LACK OF QUALITY

Committee to Select Alma Mater Hymn Is Displeased With Verses Submitted.

The contest for a new alma mater song, which officially closed last fall, was yesterday reopened by the committee in charge of selecting the winner. This step was taken because the low quality of the numbers submitted before the closing date did not warrant the large prize which was to be given the best song submitted.

Early last fall A. B. Andrews offered $100 to the student or students submitting the best song in the estimation of the committee. The two committees, one to select the best verses, and one to select the best music, decided that twenty-five dollars of the award would be given for the best verses, and that seventy-five dollars would be awarded for the best music.

The new song is not to supplant "Hark the Sound," but rather to supplement it so that the University will have more than one song. As numerous college, prep schools, and high schools have their individual verses set to the music of Carolina's alma mater, it was hoped that a new song could be written which would have more individuality.

BARBER'S CHAIR PLACED AS PRANK NEAR OLD WELL

It was noticed with some surprise Thursday morning that a would be benefactor had placed a barber chair in front of the old well. Whether it was placed there for a campus easy chair, or for the entertainment of the students is not known, although it is the popular opinion that it was carried to its position for a prank. The incident, however, recalls, some ancient stories of the old well. Miss Mary deB. Graves writes of in A History of the Old Well:

"Anecdotes about the Well extend back to the very beginning of the University. It is said that during the civil war the "Holt boys" from near Haw River captured five Yankees and brought them to the Well to drink saying: "Come and drink this water for this is as near Heaven as you damn Yankees will ever get."

Once in the eighties as a roistering lad was put in a coffin while intoxicated and placed in a hearse on the well, with the Gimghoul devil on top. When he awoke in the hearse he exclaimed, "I've been buried alive!" Then when he rose up and saw the devil, and the flames from goods boxes which the students had set fire to, he groaned, "No, I am dead and have gone to Hell."

Dancer In Entertainment Series Is Praised By European Critics

Angna Enters, who will present her "Episodes and Compositions in Dance Form" in Memorial hall Tuesday evening, has been hailed as a truly great artist by the leading critics of two continents. Just before coming back this year to the United States for a coast-to-coast tour, she returned to London where she repeated her recitals of the preceding spring.

After her appearances in London she crossed to France for a Paris debut. Two performances were arranged for her at the Salle Gaveau and she was also engaged as guest artist at the Theatre des Champs Alysees.

Miss Enters won extraordinary esteem in the hearts of French audiences by her performances. She is of French origin, although actually born in America. After her extensive European tours she is now back in the United States on a protracted tour.

Miss Enters is said to have the ability to exert her dynamic personality in portraying the various characterizations included in her program. Although naturally gifted with an extraordinary talent along the lines of terpsichorean art, she further enhances the performance by beautiful costumes and a lavish display of pantomine. By expressive gestures, both facial and bodily, she shows the careful study and artistry she employs in creating her compositions.

Many other methods, novel in their effect, are used by this dancer to serve as a background for her own art. To gain the desired effect upon the audience unusual lighting systems, stage decorations, and vari-colored costumes are utilized. Just as in each of her dances on the program a certain title is used to express the feeling and mood of the dancer, so is the stage background designed along similiar lines.

The artistry of this dancer is considered full in its ability to gain, by natural talent, grace, and design, the exact impression upon the observer as it is shown in the titles of each of the seventy-five "Episodes" that comprise Miss Enters' repertoire.

GEOLOGY ORDER INSTALLED HERE

Alpha Chapter of Geological Fraternity Sigma Gamma Epsilon Initiated Thursday.

The Alpha chapter of the national professional geological fraternity Sigma Gamma Epsilon was formally installed at a banquet held in the Carolina Inn last night at seven-thirty. The banquet took place after the initiation and installation ceremonies which were held in the third floor hall of New East building at six o'clock.

This is the first chapter of this fraternity to be installed in a North Carolina institution. It was formerly in the form of a local fraternity until recognized by the national society and admitted into the position of a unit in the national group.

The guest members who arrived at noon Friday were Dr. Edward P. Henderson, assistant curator of Minerals of the National Museum; William T. Jobe, Stephen N. Shelton, and Alden H. Emery. These are all members of the Tau chapter at George Washington University. Members from the Theta chapter at Cornell are: Dr. G. R. McCarthy, Alexandre E. Alexander, and James E. Caudle.

Besides these officiating guests, who presided over the actual installation, were the initiates. The associate members are: Dr. Collier Cobb, William F. Prouty, and William C. Morse. The active members are: Harry M. Gilbert, William T. Holland, E. R. Scott, Wade H. Hadley, C. S. Maurice, I. L. Martin, W. A. White, Phillip H. Mattocks, and A. R. Monroe.

Dr. Cobb and Dr. Henderson responded to toasts at the banquet by short talks on the geology of North Carolina. Dr. Henderson has recently discovered an entirely new mineral in North Carolina, thus adding another mineral to North Carolina's already extensive variety of such substances. This new mineral is called "clarkeite." As this substance has been hitherto unknown, it is a distinct contribution to the world of science.

STUDENTS ENJOY SUBURBAN COLONY

Idea of Living in Small, Remote Huts Attracts Boys.

It appears from apparent circumstances that certain Carolina students are extremely interested in the peace and happiness of home making, not willing to live otherwise during their college days.

Tim Timmons, an ambituous Carolina student, this spring took over a negro shack on the Durham Road just opposite Sparrow's Filling Station. He transformed the unsightly hut into a comfortable dwelling; built furniture and prepared to dwell happily therein with his roommate who ventured to stand by him in his enterprise.

No sooner had the youthful home owners been comfortably settled than they discovered themselves not to be alone in their sojourn. Tommy Badger and Frank Grey seeing the quick success of Timmons decided to attempt a similar act. To their great satisfaction an available shack stood adjoining the newly made one. They immediately set to work with unbounded vigor. Sparing no pains in elaborating their house, adding a sun porch, kitchen, breakfast nook, they made a country club-like living room and painted the house a color that would attract passers-by. To make their dwelling more complete they hired a colored man who acts as butler, cook, house cleaner and tailor for the occupants. Tom and Frank, however, grew weary of this type of living and after a bit moved away.

To Tim, next door this was a thing that suited him to a perfection since he had already become discouraged over the fact that his next door neighbors had so surpassed him in the project. He therefore offered his hut for rent and he and his new room mate, Roger Kelly together with Dave Lynch moved into the house left vacant by Badger and Grey.

Evidently this University will have a suburban student colony in a short time.

Cobb Returns After Stay in Washington

Dr. Collier Cobb, head of the department of geology, has just returned from Washington, D. C., where he spent the spring holidays. While in Washington he passed the majority of his time in extensive observations and research work in the geological libraries and laboratories which are maintained by the government.

LAW SCHOOL TO MAKE RESEARCH INTO LYNCHINGS

Law Review Announces Plan To Study Mob Violence in North Carolina.

In the April issue of the North Carolina Law Review, which was distributed yesterday, formal announcement is made of an extensive research project undertaken by the Law school of the University. The problems confronting the law as a result of the prevalence of lynching are to be comprehensively studied over a period of a year and a half. At the end of this time the findings will be published along with the draft of a model anti-lynching statute. Necessary funds have been made available by the Interracial Commission.

James H. Chadbourn, student editor of the Law Review has been elected to carry out the investigation under the supervision of the law school faculty. Among the members of the Commission who are actively interested are: Dr. W. C. Jackson, president of the Interracial Commission; Dr. W. A. Alexander, executive director of the Commission; and George Fort Milton, chairman of the sub committee on lynching. An advisory committee of the deans of sixteen southern law schools will assist in the work.

The plan embraces a study of state laws as they have operated or failed to operate in specific cases and also a canvas of leading judicial and lay opinions on the problem.

The "Notes and Comments," section of The Review, contains much interesting material written by students. The discussion of the unauthorized practice of law shows what has been done in this country to prevent corporations and laymen from engaging in legal practice. The statute which has recently been passed in North Carolina is the first attempt in this state to make detailed regulations against corporations doing legal work.

An interesting Georgia case in which an infant was born with his heart outside of his body and where photographs of the abnormal infant were made and sold, permitted the parents to maintain an action against the photographer. This case raises the so-called right of privacy, which is recognized in Georgia and in a few other jurisdictions. Other notes and comments concern taxation, negotiable instruments, criminal law, practice and procedure, real property and railroad crossing accidents.

PSYCHOLOGY RULE FOR ATTENDANCE WITHIN BOUNDS

Faculty Ruling for Spring Quarter Allows Each Department To Make Own Rules.

The strict attendance regulations accompanied with fines which have been imposed by the psychology department have been the subject of some plotting and planning by students registered in that department. The way the University rules now stand, though, the psychologists are keeping within the regulations.

The University ruling which is in force this spring quarter is one passed near the end of the fall term and leaves the whole matter of attendance up to each of the various departments. On this basis each of the two score or more divisions and departments have their own way of handling absences.

The psychology department has always maintained that compulsory attendance be required of students taking their courses. The reason stated for this is that they have an excessive number of "flunks." From this it can be seen that the new regulations in that department are consistent with the idea that they have always maintained.

The question has also been raised among the students as to whether or not the fine imposed on cutting is not beyond the general rule. Here again it is found that the department has complete control about how much they wish to impose. The range of the fine at present is from fifty cents to two dollars.

Fifty cents is charged for each lecture cut if the absence is excused and a dollar if it is unexcused provided that the makeup is taken within a week. For

SIGMA XI ELECTS COUCH PRESIDENT

Scientific Society's Supper Is Followed by Choosing of Officers and Initiations.

At the meeting of the local chapter of the Sigma Xi, national scientific society, Tuesday, nine new members were initiated into the fraternity. This meeting followed a supper at the Carolina Inn.

Dr. M. L. Braun, professor of mathematics and physics at Catawba College, due to unavoidable absence, was not transferred from associate to active membership as was planned. A. E. Hughes, candidate for Ph.D. degree in chemistry, was the only person initiated into active membership while eight became associate members by initiation. They were G. G. Albritton, T. B. Douglas, G. H. Fleming, J. P. Sanders, H. C. Thomas, R. L. Samelt, C. J. Craven, and L. L. Williams.

Following the initiation officers for next year were elected. Dr. J. N. Couch was elected to the presidency. The office of vice-president went to Dr. R. W. Bost, and Dr. E. T. Browne and Dr. H. D. Crockford remained as secretary-treasurer and executive committeeman, respectively, for the coming year.

After initiation and election, the meeting was turned over to the zoology department, at which time reports were given on the recent research of the department. The first lecture

Where Our Money Goes

In times of economic depression it is only natural to wonder where our money is being spent and to sometimes question the necessity for so many blanket fees. Blanket fees have come into university men's lives to stay. They are necessary in order that we may have services and pleasures which we would be unable to have were it not for these fees.

Our concern at present, however, is with a number of class and student fees which we pay annually at registration time and which are unspecified. We know we pay a publications fee of two dollars a quarter for the Buccaneer, the Daily Tar Heel, the Carolina Magazine, and the Yackety-Yack. Then there are class fees of varying amounts. And a student fee is paid for the operation of student government.

Class fees are spent for smokers, dances, and Yackety-Yack, space, but we want to posit the question: Are there any fees which we pay now and which previous classes having voted have become unnecessary or with which they are not now in sympathy.

Debating, once the feature of student activity here, has reached the bottom. Out of a student body ranging from 2,300 to 2,600 members the intercollegiate debates are attended by but fifteen to forty persons. Fifty cents is charged each year for debating, a sum which when accumulated amounts to $1,000 or more each year. This is out of proportion to the value received. We have no brief against debating, but we cannot see the percentage in charging each student a fee of fifty cents a year to support an activity that at best does not rate in student interest on a par with others. Student government only receives twenty cents a year, and everyone knows that the services it renders are far superior, and far more necessary than those of debating. It would be a good thing at this time to have spring housecleaning of all fees.

With Contemporaries

Princeton Requirements

Probably the most drastic change made in entrance requirements during the past year by an Eastern university was that at Princeton where the bachelor of science degree was abandoned except for engineering students. Together with this change a much wider choice of electives was permitted candidates for the Arts degree.

The new requirements mark a radical departure from the old system by which applicants for the Arts degree were required to present four units of Latin for admission . . .

Opinions of all kinds have been forwarded as to Princeton's reason for this drastic change. Some feel that America's most conservative educational institution is attempting to keep step with the great state universities by an appeal to the masses. But alumni, faculty, and undergraduates at Princeton will deny this. It seems more likely that Princeton is attempting to modify its requirements to conform with the subjects students follow after matriculation.

It is evident that Greek and Latin courses in the past 50 years have fallen off in popularity among undergraduates throughout the country. The new educational era has brought with it subjects which but a comparatively few years ago meant nothing, but which today are of vital importance to college men and women who expect to compete in the business and professional worlds following graduation . . . —Michigan Daily.

Mass Methods In English

With the announcement by Professor Hillyer of further changes in English A, the prospects become considerably brighter that this course may take its rightful place in the curriculum. The present changes are a part of a long development in the direction of greater individual work and fewer organized recitations, which has been in the process of evolution under pressure of constant campaigns for reform.

The technical aspects of the course are fairly well cared for under the new program, as the classes are to be limited in size, and more stress is to be put on the instructor, thus providing a greater flexibility than was possible in the past. These changes will serve to acquaint the freshman with the workings of the tutorial system and should provide the physical basis for a really interesting course of study. For freshman English could be one of the important courses in the college curriculum, as an introduction to the study of literature and a stimulation to the enjoyment of writing, rather than the powerful and often permanent antidote to any interest in the study of English which it has tended to be in the past. No matter how carefully the details of English A are worked out however, technicalities alone can never solve the problem.

There are many difficulties to be overcome in any Freshman course, arising from the lack of adequate preparation possessed by the majority of first year men. These difficulties have been largely met by the reorganization in the course administration, and, as a result, the chief responsibility for the success of English A now devolves on the instructors. Yet due to the lack of experience, which hampers many of its teachers, Freshman English does not arouse the interest it should. If the course were to be taught by more experienced instructors and placed on a par with similar courses in the University, its value as a foundation for the further study of English would be greatly increased.—Harvard Crimson.

From Scholarship To Success

Heywood Broun, columnist on the New York World-Telegram, says that in a municipal breadline in the metropolis, five members of Phi Beta Kappa were discovered among the destitute.

A rather prevalent assertion maintains that a good record in college will have little to do with success in after life. Here is an example which seemingly corroborates this belief. The "A's" in trigonometry, the "100's" in final exams, the lengthy theses have availed these New York Phi Betes nothing in a material way. Perhaps they would be glad to exchange their college courses for a good steady job with a twenty-five dollar pay envelope coming every week. Right now they value solid food more than valedictory certificates.

But these five wearers of the golden key are not typical of their brothers in the oldest fraternity in existence. A recent survey discloses that out of 28,000 individuals listed in "Who's Who," over 5,000 are members of Phi Beta Kappa. Moreover, of the persons belonging to this honorary scholarship society graduated in the last fifteen years, twenty per cent have attained the honor of finding their names among those in "Who's Who." Surely this would definitely indicate that there is a decided correlation between university careers and those pursued after college days are over. If one out of every five Phi Beta Kappas can be reasonably sure of real advancement in the outside world the other members should not fall very far short of this recognition.

So we might conclude that Phi Beta Kappa is more than an honorary society of those students who foolishly waste their time studying in college instead of enjoying themselves. It is an organization whose members will be repaid for their efforts in school by success in later life.—Minnesota Daily.

laboratory cuts the same charge is imposed, but if the make-ups are not taken within the week the fine is doubled. For lecture make-ups at which a quiz has been announced the fine is one dollar for excused cuts, and two dollars for those unexcused.

Although there may be confusion about attendance regulations at present, the situation will only last through the spring term. Beginning next September a uniform rule for the whole University will be enforced. This rule is printed in the new catalogue. From then on students may only be charged a maximum of one dollar for make-up quizzes and labs. Another section of the new regulations will be that a student must attend at least seventy-five per cent of class meetings, but honor roll students are excused from this clause. Students who make the honor roll for two consecutive quarters enjoy optional attendance, and this applies to freshmen and sophomores as well as juniors and seniors.

FOERSTER SCORES MODERN WRITINGS

"The Past Should Be Used Creatively in Our Time," Professor Says.

Norman Foerster, director of the school of letters at the University of Iowa, diagnoses the ailment of present-day literature as an extraordinary sense of the contemporaneous and extemporaneous spirit. He prescribes a return to the Greek standards. "The really important thing," he says, "is to bring the past and present together in a really vital relationship, to use the past creatively in our own time. This we can learn from the example of Goethe, but not except for a few cases, such as Will Cather and Thornton Wilder of our writers of today.

Professor Foerster's example, Thornton Wilder is in perfect reputation of his thesis. There are a dozen or more writers more Greek in spirit than the sentimental author of The Bridge of San Louis Rey. Mr. Wilder's prissy philosophy is as far from Plato's flaming social position penetration and knife-edge metaphysics as Goethe is from Richardson.

In fact, Professor Foerster represents as the reverse face of that coin, H. L. Mencken. One of Mr. Mencken's disciples Mr. Charles Angoff recently published A Literary History of the American People. The aridity of early American letters is ascribed in the fact that early Americans were dominated by the influence of theology.

This too is utter nonsense. It would be difficult to say what Mr. Angoff would say of the painting of El Greco, Michelangelo, the poetry of Dante, Milton, Blake, the music of Handel; just as it is difficult to see what Professor Foerster would say of the novel of Ernest Hemingway, James Joyce and others.

It would seem to be a truism that each age should find its own means of expression. We can no longer think as Plato and Euripides thought; we cannot even feel as Shakespeare felt in certain matters. Mr. Angoff assumes that because our age cannot think theistically no age could do so. Professor Foerster assumes that because the great Periclean age produced a literature of enormous scope and penetration we cannot produce one unless we accept its now impossible standards of life and its attitude towards the world in which we now live so differently.

The fact of the matter is plain enough, that a great artist will neither disregard nor idolize the great art of the past.

Johnston, state commissioner of public welfare at that time.

With additional increases over budget recommendations made to "balance" the increases the bill now contains annual appropriations for the University amounting to $800,000; North Carolina College for Women $438,00; North Carolina State College $428,000 (plus federal tax) and Eastern Carolina Teachers College $186,785.

A motion was made and carried to reconsider the vote by which this action was taken several weeks ago and also a substitute motion to pay Dr. Anderson back from funds in his own institution.

FLEXNER CALLS HIS MODEL COLLEGE A CENTER FOR SCHOLARLY RESEARCH

"The institute of higher learning which will begin its work in about three years under my direction will be primarily a place of distinguished scholars who will be able to study there and at the same time teach disciples," declared Abraham Flexner, famous author and educator, in a special article recently given to the Princetonian.

"Institutes of research, as we know them, differ in certain respects from universities. In the first place, the research institute stands or falls by its success in research, whereas, in projecting the modern university, I am careful to associate training with research. Althoff strove with tireless energy and splendid success to equip all the faculties of Prussian universities, so that they might, under modern conditions, realize and develop the conceptions of training and research which have been embodied in the University of Berlin at its origin. He perceived however that even under ideal university conditions a small number of rare geniuses might squander in teaching or administration rare abilities that ought to be concentrated upon research. He has thus led to plan a series of institutes in which the most fertile minds might be devoted to research in fields in which fundamental progress had already been made—fields, in which the basic sciences had already attained definiteness and solidity, in which problems, theoretic as well as substantive, could be clearly formuated, and in which personnel of high quality had already been trained. The feasibility of such an institute was thus narrowly circumscribed. It does not follow that, because the research institute is feasible and timely in physics, chemistry, or medicine, it is either feasible or timely in less well developed fields of interest, however urgent the need.

"The points just mentioned suggest at once the strength and weakness of the research institute which is a sort of flying column that can be directed hither and yon, wherever results seem attainable, wherever personnel of exceptional character is available. But so specific is the research institute that its particular activities depend on an individual or small group.

"Whatever the institute is called, its energies center about a person. The important things are not the subjects, but persons; when the person goes the subject goes. It does not include all subjects within a definite field; it can demobilize as readily as mobilize. The university may have to employ makeshifts temporarily: the research institute never does.

"A further point is that the research institute enjoys the advantages of concentration and mobility both research institute and university laboratory are engaged in solving problems; both are engaged in training men. The head of the institute has a group of assistants around him, younger men whom he sifts and trains, precisely as does the university professor. However the former's students are more advanced, more highly selected. So the research institute might be described as a specialized and advanced university laboratory enjoying more certain marked advantages and not free from possible disadvantages."

Generals Pound Tar Heels For 8-2

W. & L. ACE GIVES ONLY FOUR HITS

Invaders Wield Heavy Poles; Hinton Relieves Edwards In Fifth.

Behind the four hit pitching of Leigh Williams, Washington and Lee ace, the Carolina Tar Heels received their first defeat of the season yesterday afternoon on Emerson Field.

Williams was the big gun of the Generals, holding the hard hitting Tar Heels to a single by Potter in the first six innings. For five innings, Williams, who also is a four sport star making letters in baseball, basketball, football, and track, held the Tar Heels hitless, and allowed only one man to reach first, Ferebee getting a free ticket in the fourth. Williams allowed only four hits and two walks, while striking out five throughout the entire game.

The Generals had their big inning in the third scoring five runs, after two were out, on a walk, a scratch single over second, a double, single and triple in order. Williams opened up the inning by grounding out to Ferebee. Routon flied out to House. Mattox walked. E. Richardson singled, sending Mattox to third. Mattox scored on Fitzgerald's double to right, with Richardson going to third. Fitzgerald scored on J. Richardson's single to right. Richardson scored on Cremin's triple to center. Burke ended the inning, popping up to Dunlap.

Again in the fifth the Generals scored on Cremin's home run to the left field fence after two were out. J. Richardson was on base at the time, having walked. At this stage Hinton relieved Edwards and held the Generals scoreless throughout the remainder of the game.

As in yesterday's game the umpire got in bad at the start, calling a Washington and Lee man safe at second in the third inning on what would have been the third out and the end of the General threat. Again in the final inning he was hit by a batted ball which Wyrick fielded and made the put out which was safe because of the fact that the ball had touched the person of the arbitrator, and which also caused quite a howl from the Tar Heel stands but as usual the umpire was right and nothing could be done about it by the home team fans.

Peacock and Powell garnered the extra base knocks for the Heels, both doubling to left field. Potter's fly back of second and Wyrick's hard grounder to third were the other hits gathered by the Heels.

J. Richardson, with two singles and two walks, in four times at bat, and a home run, a triple, and walk in four trips to the plate, led the visitors. E. Richardson, with two singles in five turns at bat, and Fitzgerald, with a single and double, also aided the Generals, with two hits each.

Edwards started on the mound for the Tar Heels but was hit hard, being removed in favor of Hinton in the fifth after allowing seven hits and eight runs, including a home run, a triple, and two doubles.

The Tar Heels will meet Maryland to-morrow afternoon at Emerson Field, in their fourth game of the season. Maryland is reputed to have one of the strongest teams in the south, having previously defeated Washington and Lee 3-1. The Old Liners have been built around Chalmers, star outfielder, Berger, three sport star, who beat Carolina almost single handed in the Southern Confer-

TAR BABIES WILL ENGAGE ROANOKE IN SECOND GAME

Freshmen Will Play Winston-Salem Wednesday and Campbell College Next Saturday.

Carolina's Tar Baby nine will meet the Roanoke Rapids high school team this afternoon in a preliminary to the Varsity-Maryland game on the freshman field at three o'clock. The first year men have played only one game this season, losing to Wardlaw Prep in the last inning 7-5, after apparently having the game sewed up by a 5-3 score.

The frosh nine will meet Winston-Salem High here next Wednesday afternoon and Campbell College here April 11. Not much is known of either of the three teams. Winston-Salem, in past years, has put out one of the best high school teams in the state. The Campbell nine last year ranked with the best in the state, but this year's team will be made up almost entirely of rookies as only two letter men returned this year.

In last Monday's game the Tar Babies showed up well, though ragged fielding was responsible for four errors. The first year men have shown that they can hit, out-hitting the prep school boys by ten hits to five. John Phipps, football star, showed up well for the yearlings, getting a double and a single in two trips to the plate during his three innings of play. McIver, outfielder, and Matheson, catcher, hit homers for the freshmen and also showed up well in the field.

Coaches Sapp and Magner used a total of four pitchers, with Crouch pitching shutout ball during his three inning stay on the mound. Frankel and Harrington also pitched good ball for the first year men, holding the Wardlaw Prep nine to three hits between them. The prep school team went into the final inning with the Tar Babies holding a 5-3 lead. At this stage of the game Wharton went in for the freshmen and walked four straight men. With the score 5-4, Pitcher Poscoe hit a triple with the bases crowded.

Coach Sapp will probably start Crouch and Matheson in the box for the Tar Babies. John Phipps will probably start at short, with Jones or Harry Phipps at the keystone sack. McIver and Fisher will start in the outfield, with the other positions undecided.

Spring Intramurals To Get Underway Monday Afternoon

Boxing and Wrestling Tournament Planned in Conjunction With Baseball and Tennis Program; Interest In Intramurals At High Ebb on Campus.

The spring quarter intramural program will get under way with the opening of the baseball and tennis seasons, Monday, April 6. Entry blanks have been sent to the respective athletic members of each fraternity and dormitory announcing the opening of these leagues. According to a recent announcement by intramural officials a wrestling tournament and a boxing tournament will be run off during the latter part of the season.

In the boxing tournament each team may enter as many men as desired, with points to be awarded to the team with the highest number of entries. The entrants for the tourney must undergo a period of instruction under Coaches Rowe and Allen. Those wishing to enter should report to the Tin Can at four o'clock this afternoon. The tournament will be held at the end of the training period.

The same system of points will be used in both the wrestling and the boxing tournaments. The system of points follows:

1. Team having the most entries, 25 points; (2) team winner, 50 points; (3) individual winners in each class (points to be credited to the organization represented), 25 points and gold medals; second place winners, 15 points.

The following weights will be contested, with an allowance of four pounds overweight: 115 pound, 125 pound, 135 pound, 145 pound, 160 pound, 175 pound, and unlimited class.

In the baseball league the same system of points used in football and basketball will be used. The winners of the league titles will receive 50 points, and the winner of the campus title will receive an additional 50 points. Each team entering the league will receive 50 points but for each forfeit registered against it 10 points will be deducted.

A great deal of interest has been shown this year in the program of intramural sports, with intramural boxing leading the way. The new system adopted last year of awarding a silver loving cup to the team scoring the greatest number of points, has increased the interest in intramural athletics and this year is expected to be a banner one in the history of intramural athletics at the University.

Extension Division Plans Motor Trip

The Southern Tours, Inc. of Chapel Hill under the educational direction of the University Extension Division, is planning a western motor trip for the ensuing summer from June 7 to August 4.

In addition to a wonderful itinerary of over nine thousand miles the tour has been arranged so that members of the teaching profession may attend the annual convention of the National Education Association at Los Angeles.

An unexcelled opportunity for Geological studies presents itself in this western tour as the Geology department of the University will offer two courses, namely Geology and Geography. College credit and credit to be applied toward renewing and raising teachers certificates may be secured upon the completion of these courses.

The Southern Tours, Inc. will be glad to furnish detailed information about the places to be visited and the complete plans of the trip.

Class Smokers

Each class will give a smoker sometime this quarter, it was announced yesterday. The smokers are to be held within two weeks, according to the information received, and all four of the smokers will take place in the same week. Each class has given a smoker before this quarter.

Enright Returns

Rex Enright, former Tar Heel head Freshman coach, is back at the University, but this time it is only on a short visit. Enright is spending a week or ten days in Chapel Hill before he returns to Athens to resume his duties as head basketball and assistant football coach.

Enright, when questioned about football prospects at Georgia next year, stated that a fine squad had turned out and that the Bulldogs would have a good first team but that they lacked reserve strength, one of the most important things necessary to successfully carry out the famous Rockne system, of which he is an exponent.

Wolfpack Trackmen To Meet Tar Heels Today In Initial S. I. C. Tilt

Meet Will Start at Two O'clock; Frosh Squads To Clash at Same Time.

STATE SENDS MANY STARS

Visitors Strong In Distance Events; Same Squad Used Against P. C. to Enter.

At two o'clock this afternoon the Carolina track team will face its first Southern Conference opposition of the spring when it meets the strong N. C. State Wolfpack. Events between the freshman squads of the two schools will be run off at the same time. This meet will open the season for the State tracksters who had their meet with Davidson last week called off on account of the bad weather.

State will present a stronger team than usual this year with Captain George McGinn and Henry Ricks in the middle distances. McGinn won the Conference run in the half-mile last spring and again in the indoor meet this year. Mack Stout will head the Tech dashmen while Sam Gurneau is the outstanding man in the weight events. Gurneau tossed the discus 137 feet 10 1-2 inches in an exhibition meet against Carolina last year to better the Southern Conference record.

Coaches Fetzer and Ranson have not made any definite selection of entrants, but will probably use the same men that went up against Presbyterian College last Saturday. This would find Marland, Smith, and Slusser in the 100 yard dash with Smith and Drane in the 220.

Lionel Weil is expected to team with Marland and Brock in the 440, While Dick Garrett, Tom Watkins, and Wallace Case are the most likely men for the half-mile. This event with McGinn and Ricks running for State should be one of the best of the day.

Cliff Baucom will lead the two milers with Hubbard and Pratt also entered for the Tar Heels, and Mark Jones, Donnell, and Gabriel will probably take care of the one mile run.

Archie Davis will be seen in both hurdle events with Rip Slusser running in the low hurdles and Red Hamlet and Waugh in the highs. Carolina will present great strength in the pole vault and high jump with George Bagby, Ted Newland, and Red Hamlet in the high jump and the Ruble-Arnold combination taking care of the pole vault. Arnold and Ruble will also enter the broad jump along with Theron Brown, Houston, and Howard.

Besides participating in the broad jump, Theron Brown will enter all three of the weight events. He will have Ruble, Harry Hodges, and Red Gilbreath with him in the shot, and Sandy Dameron and George Thompson in the discus. Stuart Chandler and Straus will give the Tar Heels added strength in the javelin.

Track Events.

2:00—100 yard dash, varsity and freshmen.
2:10—One mile run, varsity and freshmen.
2:25—220 yard dash, varsity and freshmen.
2:35—120 yard high hurdles, varsity and freshmen.
2:45—440 yard run, varsity and freshmen.
2:55—Two mile run, varsity and freshmen.
3:20—220 yard low hurdles, varsity and freshmen.
3:30—880 yard run, varsity and freshmen.

Field Events.

1:45—Varsity pole vault, varsity discus, varsity high jump, freshmen broad jump, and freshmen javelin.
2:15—Varsity shot put, freshmen pole vault, and freshmen discus.
3:00—Varsity javelin, freshmen high jump, and freshmen shot put.
3:30—Varsity broad jump.

DEBATERS MEET WESTERN RESERVE

Slaughter and Fleming-Jones Uphold Affirmative in Thursday Night Debate.

The Carolina debate team composed of Jess Slaughter and McB. Fleming-Jones met a team composed of Jennings and Fisk from Western Reserve University in Cleveland in Gerrard Hall Thursday night. The subject was State Compulsory Unemployment Insurance. Carolina supported the affirmative.

The team from Reserve maintained that the government should plan ahead for public works so that in times of marked unemployment like the present, public works would employ those who are out of a job, thus making insurance unnecessary.

The Carolina affirmative team maintained that the states should enact legislation calling for insurance so as to take care of the unemployed. In the plan submitted by the affirmative the employer is to have to pay a higher premium if there is much unemployment resulting from his plant, thus giving him an incentive to reduce his labor turnover.

While the contest was a no-decision debate, a novel form of ballot was distributed to the audience in order to obtain psychological data on certain forms of argument. On this ballot each person was requested to criticize each speaker and to state exactly the effect of the different kinds of argument and presentation used.

Plane Curve." In this paper Professor Lasley applies the methods of differential geometry to the study of plane curves. He generalizes the results of Transon, Cesaro and Wilczynski and gives methods for constructing the penosculating parabolas, ellipses and equilateral hyperbolas. Several other interesting results are obtained.

Within the near future there is to appear in the Bulletin of the American Mathematical Society a paper by Profesor W. V. Parker containing some interesting and novel properties of plane curves.

State College Pikas To Give Annual Ball

The Alpha Epsilon chapter of Pi Kappa Alpha at State College, Raleigh, will give its annual Easter Monday dance next Monday in Thompson gymnasium. This affair is given annually under the auspices of the State College chapter and is considered one of the outstanding social events of the early Easter season.

Many members of the local chapter of the fraternity are planning to attend the function at the neighboring institution.

The orchestra secured to play for the occasion has not been announced yet.

Library Inspected By Arkansas Men

President John C. Futral of the University of Arkansas, Fayetteville, Arkansas, and J. J. Haralson, architect of that university, were here yesterday consulting Dr. L. R. Wilson, University librarian, on the new library.

The two men who are making a tour of the most important university libraries throughout the United States spent the day in Chapel Hill, and were entertained at dinner by Dr. A. M. Jordan, formerly of the University of Arkansas.

Briefs

Pat Pattisall, who relieved Captain Potter yesterday afternoon, in the eighth inning, uncorked a pretty peg to Wyrick in the final frame, to catch E. Richardson stealing.

Billy Powell made a nice stop of Cross' hard grounder down the third base line, to rob him of a sure hit. Powell also doubled to left to get half of the Tar Heels extra base hits.

Cremin, General lefthander, got the second home run of the year on Emerson Field, hitting a long one between House and Peacock, the ball rolling under the edge of the gate in deep left.

John Peacock made several pretty catches way out in deep center, cutting off one that looked as if it was headed for the wide open spaces. Peacock also gathered the other half of the Heels extra base knocks, doubled to left.

Pete Wyrick pulled several nice plays at second, taking Pattisall's peg in the ninth perfectly to get his man stealing. Pete also started Carolina's only double play of the game.

SPRING FESTIVAL WILL TAKE PLACE DURING WEEK-END

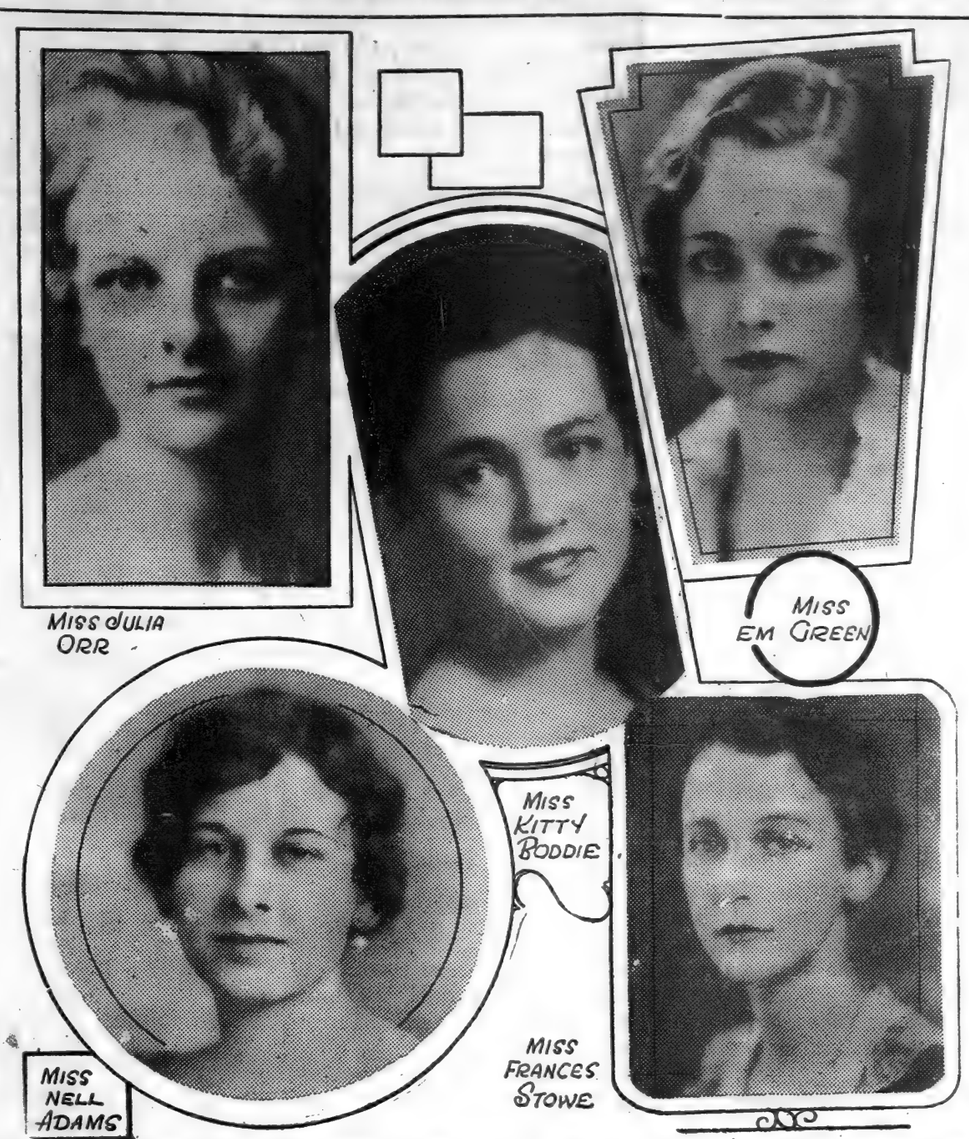
Over One Hundred Girls Expected for House Parties and Dances Beginning Friday

Three dances with music by an excellent orchestra, four fraternity house parties, and more than one hundred attractive girls will all help to make the week-end of the Spring Festival, April 10 and 11, one of the gayest of spring events on the University campus.

Inaugurated this year by five fraternities, Pi Kappa Phi, Phi Gamma Delta, Phi Delta Theta, Pi Kappa Alpha and Alpha Tau Omega, the Festival is planned as an annual event.

In charge of the arrangements is a committee of ten men, two from each fraternity: George Newman, chairman, and Pitt Davis, Pi Kappa Phi; Bill Bliss, secretary, and Arthur Fleming, Phi Gamma Delta: Moseley Fonvielle, treasurer, and Tad McLaughlin, Phi Delta Theta; Ed. French and Ward Thompson, Pi Kappa Alpha; Barron Grier and Jones Pollard, Alpha Tau Omega.

Sponsors for the Dances



Five young ladies from North Carolina have been chosen as sponsors for the dance series. Miss Nell Adams, High Point, will be the sponsor for Pi Kappa Phi; Miss Kitty Boddie, Louisburg, for Phi Gamma Delta; Miss Frances Stowe, Charlotte, for Phi Delta Theta; Miss Em Green, Wilmington, for Pi Kappa Alpha; and Miss Julia Orr, Charlotte, for Alpha Tau Omega.

Bynum gymnasium will be the scene of the three dances. Elaborate decorations in blue and white, the University colors, will be used. Opening Friday night with the New Moon Ball, the Festival will continue Saturday afternoon with the Sunset Dansant from four until seven o'clock, and conclude with the Dance of the Shadows Saturday evening.

"Maestro Mike" Speciale and his Crusaders, a band of versatile and entertaining musicians, have been engaged for the Festival. At present the Crusaders

SPONSORS FOR SPRING FESTIVAL, APRIL 10, 11

Five young women from the state, shown above, will be sponsors for the Spring Festival which begins in Bynum gymnasium, April 10 and 11, under the sponsorship of five campus fraternities: Miss Nell Adams, High Point, with George Newman, Pi Kappa Phi; Miss Kitty Boddie, Louisburg, with Arthur Fleming, Phi Gamma Delta; Miss Frances Stowe, Charlotte, with Moseley Fonvielle, Phi Delta Theta; Miss Em Green, Wilmington, with Ward Thompson, Pi Kappa Alpha; Miss Julia Orr, Charlotte, with Barron Grier, Alpha Tau Omega.

Playmakers Will Present Last Bill Of Original Plays

The Carolina Playmakers will present their twenty-eighth bill of original plays Thursday, Friday, and Saturday nights of next week when a set of four plays will be given each night at the Playmakers Theatre.

This will be the third presentation of original plays the dramatic organizations will give this year and are the plays selected for the spring tour. Three of the four plays were written by members of the play-writing class.

The first play, the Blue Remembered Hills, was written by Ted Herman, and is about college life, centering around two students who wish to keep their adolescence.

A Very Pink Pale Angel, written by Ellen Stewart, is a modern comedy.

Written by Irene Fussler and directed by Professor Frederick Koch, Ever' Snitch is a comedy of the Carolina fisher folk.

The fourth play is Always a Bettin' Man and was written by Tom Loy. This has appeared as a public presentation before.

REVIEW EDITORS FETED AT DINNER

Staff of Law Publication Is Entertained at Home of Dean McCormick.

Following their usual custom of being entertained at dinner following the distribution of the latest issue of the North Carolina Review, the staff of the magazine had dinner at the home of Dean McCormick Friday evening.

After the dinner each student was assigned to speak on one of the student comments appearing in the last number of the Review. According to one of the faculty, who attended the dinner these "recomments" were amusing and interesting but not very instructive.

Mr. R. H. Wettach, Mr. M. T. Van Hecke, Mr, M. S. Breckenridge, Miss Susie Sharp, and Mr. and Mrs. F. B. McCall were the faculty members who were present at the dinner.

The staff members who were entertained by Dean McCormick are: James H. Chadbourn, editor-in-chief of the magazine; William T. Covington, Jr., assistant editor; Junius G. Adams, Jr., Mills Scott Benton; Travis T. Brown; Hugh B. Campbell; Robert M. Gray, Jr.; Allen Langston; Hugh L. Lobdell; Wex S. Malone; Henry B. Parker; Edwin M. Perkins; Claude E. Reitzel, Jr.; and James A. Williams.

Graham Speaks at Dedication

President Frank P. Graham made the dedicatory address Wednesday, April 2, at the dedication of the new Atkins (colored) high school in Winston-Salem. This new building was named for Dr. S. G. Atkins, president of the Winston-Salem Teachers College.

Pharmacy Dean Was Unanimous Choice For Job

University Authorities Found J. Grover Beard Well Fitted To Succeed Howell.

By R. W. Madry

A university president these days quite often finds himself in a dilemma when confronted with the task of naming the new head of a school or department.

The ordinary procedure is to call a conference of all faculty members of the department concerned, after which the other department heads and deans are consulted, and before the president makes up his own mind he discusses the problem with his advisory committee. And then the president's nominee has to be submitted to the executive committee or the full board of the trustees for approval or disapproval before any public announcement can be made.

President Frank Graham must have heaved a great sigh of relief when following the death of Vernon Howell recently, he realized that he would have no difficulty in selecting as a successor to Dean Howell a man who would undoubtedly be the unanimous choice of all parties concerned in the procedure outlined above.

Here on the University campus it was an open secret all along that J. Grover Beard would be Dean Howell's logical successor. President Graham doubtless went through the usual procedure in selecting Beard, but he probably drew great comfort from the knowledge that in this case the procedure would be merely perfunctory.

Grover Beard has been far more than just a member of the

NEW METHOD IS USED FOR SHOW

Flowers Are Being Seen and Judged in Natural Setting.

The Chapel Hill garden club has arranged for an entirely different method of holding the flower show this year. Instead of gathering all the flowers to be judged into one building, the society has decided to have the flowers viewed in their natural settings. The gardens of several homes will be on exhibit for the people of the community at certain times.

Thursday morning flowering shrubs were on exhibit at the gardens of Mesdames J. M. Bell, Isaac H. Manning, and F. P. Venable.

Friday morning spring bulbs were the feature of the display held at Mrs. George B. Logan's home.

The gardens of W. C. Coker will be open to visitors at three o'clock Sunday afternoon.

At the garden club meeting next Wednesday evening at eight o'clock in Davie hall there will be a plant exchange, as usual, and it is requested that

Tar Heel Dinner

Starting a new plan this year, the members of the Daily Tar Heel staff will give a banquet at the Carolina Inn Thursday night in honor of the retiring editor, Will Yarborough, and retiring business manager, Pat Patterson.

The occasion is to be informal, with the members of the business staff combining with the members of the editorial and reportorial staffs as hosts.

Northern Team Will Meet Debaters Here

The University will debate the University of Pennsylvania tomorrow night at eight-thirty o'clock in Gerrard Hall on the query, Resolved: That the nations of the world should adopt a policy of free trade. Professor W. A. Olsen will preside. Representing Carolina who will uphold the negative side of the question will be J. W. Slaughter and E. L. Haywood. The affirmative side upheld by Pennsylvania will be composed of H. G. Torrington and G. W. Oswald.

This contest with Pennsylvania is the first between the two universities within a number of years. They met in 1907, 1908, 1909, 1910, 1911 and the last time was in 1921.

TWELVE CLASSES WILL REUNITE AT COMMENCEMENT

Class of 1881 Will Hold Golden Reunion on Alumni Day This Year.

Twelve graduating classes of the University, the oldest dating back to 1881, will gather here on June 8 for class reunions and exercises.

The golden reunion of the class of '81 is scheduled to be the feature of the day. Thirteen of the thirty-one who received degrees that year are now living. Among these are men of prominence throughout the country. W. J. Adams is an associate justice of the supreme court. Charles Duncan McIver, deceased, was the founder and first president of the North Carolina College for Women in Greensboro. Robert P. Pell is president of Converse College in Spartanburg, South Carolina. Dr. J. F. Joyner, secretary of the class, was formerly Superintendent of Public Instruction in North Carolina. C. R. Thomas, Jr., deceased, was a former United States Congressman.

The officers of the class of 1901, which is having its thirty year reunion, are Dr. J. K. Hall of Richmond, Virginia, president and Dr. J. G. Murphy of Wilmington, secretary.

W. B. Love, of Monroe, and Perry E. Seagle, of Raleigh, are president and secretary respectively of the class of 1906, which is to gather for its silver reunion at this time. Forty-one degrees, including A. B., B. S., Ph. B., were given that year to members of the graduating class. Of the men who received these, four are deceased. There were also twenty-four degrees, including M. A., M. D., Ph. G., L. L. B., offered this same year. All but three of the men who received these degrees are now living.

The officers of the class of 1930, which will have a "baby" reunion, are—Archie Allen, president, first year law at the University and Robert Zealy, secretary, Greensboro.

The Dix plan of class reunions brings together college chums as well as class mates. Accordingly the classes of 1891, 1892, 1893, 1894, and 1910, 1911, 1912, 1913 will reunite as the other classes on June 8.

Commencement exercises will take place June 6-9, Saturday through Tuesday. Alumni Day, Monday the 8th, will include an Alumni luncheon at one o'clock, individual class suppers at 6 o'clock, and the President's reception and Alumni Ball later in the evening.

DELEGATES TO Y CONFERENCE ARE SELECTED

Local Organization Will Send Representatives to Social Service Meeting.

The University Y. M. C. A. is planning to send delegations to the annual North Carolina Conference for Social Service which will take place in Goldsboro Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday. Last year the conference met in Charlotte, at which time the officers for this year were elected. Eloise Banning, of North Carolina College for Women, is president; Beverly Moore, of the University, vice president; and Christine Roseboro, Queens-Chicora, secretary.

On April 6, the student division will convene in Goldsboro, and will continue through the following two days. Dr. W. C. Jackson, vice-president of the North Carolina College for Women, and Dr. W. A. Stanbury, of the Duke University faculty, will be the principal speakers.

Two special sessions for students will meet during the following two days. During the remainder of the conference the student representatives will participate in the general sessions of the conference.

President Frank Graham, Dr. E. C. Branson, Professor G. T. Schwenning, of the faculty, Mr. H. F. Comer, local Y. M. C. A. secretary, Beverly Moore, Ed Hamer, Charles Rose, and Bob Barnett, of the Y. M. C. A., will represent the University at the conference. Representatives from one of the sociology classes, headed by Henry Brown, will also attend the convention.

During the past few weeks the University Y. M. C. A. has been busy working on the task of sending out three deputation teams on the same week end, the week end of April 10, through 12. These teams will visit Greenville, Fayetteville, and Rocky Mount. Programs will be staged before high schools, grammar schools, boy scout organizations, civic clubs, and churches in the three cities visited.

SPANISH CLUB ADDRESSED BY PROFESSOR McDOWELL

D. F. McDowell, of the Romance language department, spoke to the members of the Spanish club Friday evening on the subject of "El Barrio Latino de Tampa." Following this talk, papers were presented by three students in the club.

Those giving the papers were: O. T. Slate, who presented "Un Articula Periodico"; Erwin Jaffe, "Un Discurso"; and Vernon Brown, "Algunas Noticas." The entire program was conducted in Spanish, and according to reports, membership in the club is steadily increasing.

State B. Y. P. U. Secretary Will Speak Here Tonight

Mr. James A. Ivey, secretary of the North Carolina Baptist Young Peoples Union, will be the speaker of the local organization tonight at seven o'clock. Mr. Ivey will also address the church congregation tonight at eight o'clock.

Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evenings at seven o'clock Mr. Ivey will meet for conference and discussion of young people's work with all students who are interested.

The Election Is Over

The campus election is over. The men who received majorities last Tuesday will occupy their offices during the coming year in spite of arguments and speculations as to what would have happened if "things" had been different.

It seems that as an inevitable aftermath of a campus election there is silly boasting and crowing from the winners and equally silly bitterness and dissatisfaction from the losers. This is not true generally. The majority on both sides take the sensible attitude toward success or defeat. It is the few die-hard on each side that perpetuate an unnecessary feeling of bitterness.

It would be well for those who feel so elated over the victory of their political faction to remember that a few years from now the great majority of the successful candidates of this election will have been completely forgotten; the fact that the leaders of their party represented what the student body wanted is no justification for the inane and offensive boasting that some have indulged in. The few disgrunted losers who are still embittered over the result should realize that they were decisively defeated by a vote of the student body of the University, and not by an intrigue on the part of the present office-holders, some of whom they have considered highly partial and discriminatory.

It is a senseless procedure to allow the division of the University students into two factions to be aggravated to allow friendships to be disrupted, because a few students on the campus refuse to realize that the election is over!—H. B.

The Psychology Department's Fines

We will admit that the University needs money rather badly for the successful operation of several of its departments, but we don't quite see why the departments themselves have to become extortionate in respect to student fines. The psychology department of the University is enjoying a nation-wide reputation for its work. This reputation is to be kept, certainly, but not furthered by a system of fines as have been instituted. Keeping the good faith of the students is the first thing to do, we believe, and the present practices of fines are surely not helpful along these lines.

Spoon-fed education is being carried a step further—making your bank account suffer for not taking spoon feeding in the "right attitude." If this is the practice in progressive education, we should like a sample of retrogressive education policies for a year or two. We shall have exclusive courses pretty soon at this rate—with one of the departments trying to appeal to a more exclusive clientele or something of the sort.

These numerous fines and assessments picked up here and there are not improving the morale of the student body a bit. A great deal of grumbling is being done as it is. A few more little items attached certainly would not help fill up the dorms next quarter. The psychology department may be entirely justified in its actions, but we cannot quite see the whys or wherefores.—O. W. D.

The Sunday Hangover

Wex Malone

It is not without much foreboding that your writer ventures into the field of column writing. Well do I remember the fate of the last venturer. He informed his eager public that he was going to attempt to write a column which would be worse than that of Bloke Bryson. The column appeared only once.

The purpose of this column, as its name indicates, is to furnish wholesome elevating matter for the Sunday reader of discriminating tastes and habits. Your columnist will never deal in personalities except when necessary or desirable, and if Ed Curlee or the Beta Theta Pis want any publicity they will have to pay for the same.

Be it ever remembered that Tuesday last was election day. We still maintain with the dissenting minority that politics requires a maximum of effort and a minimum of intelligence. Nevertheless I exchanged a perfectly good vote for transportation of my dirty clothes to the laundry.

Now for a choice piece of news; if you don't believe that there are still unusual clothes in this country of ours, keep your eye open for a printed frock bearing a duplicate of an old medieval music manuscript. The words to the song are tactfully inscribed in Latin. I made the blunder of asking the young lady what was the song. "It's, Come all you Faithful." she replied nonchalantly. I made a date for that night. Oh, well, it could have been worse. It might have been "How Firm a Foundation."

Those of you who patronize the Bull's Head doubtless have seen a clever little book entitled Boners. It is made up of choice themes. The collector evidently missed this one, for which a student here at Carolina is responsible. "Shakespeare used to go down to the shipyards and listen to the interesting stories that the sailors told. This made him want to do things. He got married . . ."

"In the garden of tomorrow,
Will the roses be more fair?"

At least one Carolina student hopes so. He, being an addict of garden wandering, picked on the only garden with which he was familiar, a beer garden. The unfortunate part of the incident was that officer Reilley of the Durham Police Force wandered into the same garden at the same time. As for the tomorrow, well, dun't esk!

An Ancient Parable Taken From The Book Of Zoroastre

Once in the ancient town of Beth-Hashad there lived two merchants who in business were partners and who shared jointly in the labour and profits of their trade. One day the larger of the two, discontent with his just share of the business, sayeth: "My Brother from now on I will conduct the business and manage the affairs of our partnership; I will control the treasures and use them as I see fit. Bear in mind, Oh my Brother, that I bear in mine heart no malice toward thee nor thine interests. Our partnership will go on as before and we shall exist in perfect concord and understanding, and our business shall prosper." The second partner, ill-content with the greed of the first, worked not well and the business did suffer, and the partnership was disrupt and both the partners bankrupt.

Moral: "Empty words hideth not selfish motives."

WEEK'S CALENDAR

The calendar of events for this week contains an unusually large number of extracurricular attractions for the students of the University and Chapel Hill townsfolk. There are seven events in five different lines that will take place between Monday and Friday nights, one of which will run:

Monday night, the debate team will meet representatives of the University of Pennsylvania in Gerrard Hall and again Friday night will meet the Appalachian Training School team. The subjects of both these contests will be upon the free trade question.

On Tuesday night, Angna Enters, dancer, will appear in new Memorial Hall on the student entertainment program.

Two recitals will take place in the Music building this week. The piano and organ students' recital takes place Wednesday afternoon and Friday night. Edwin M. Steckel will be guest organ recitalist.

Thursday night Dr. Henry Van Peters Wilson will give an address in connection with the Phi Beta Kappa exercises.

Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, the Playmakers will present their twenty-eighth bill of original plays.

Easter Recital

An organ recital will be given by Professor Nelson O. Kennedy, of the department of music, in the Episcopal church at eight o'clock tonight as a part of Easter worship.

The program will consist of "A Lenten Meditation," by Wolstenholme, "Paraphrase on Easter Hymn," by Miles, "Fountain Reverie," by Fletcher, and "Christus Resurrexit," by Ravanello.

pharmacy faculty. Ever since graduation from the University pharmacy school back in 1909 he has been closely identified with the activities of North Carolina druggists, and in recent years he has won high place among pharmacists throughout the country.

Three years ago Professor Beard was elected president of the American Association of Colleges of Pharmacy, and a year later he was elected president of the National Conference of Pharmaceutical Association Secretaries. Then last year he was named vice-president of the American Pharmaceutical Association.

The American Association of Colleges of Pharmacy also elected him as chairman of a syllabus committee of 21 members which is to outline a suggested minimum course of study for all institutions holding membership in the association. The syllabus is to be ready in time for the meeting this year.

Professor Beard was named secretary of a committee of fifteen, appointed by the American Council on Education, of which the University is a member, to direct a nation-wide study of pharmaceutical education. This is considered the most important piece of work being done in pharmaceutical education now.

He has been secretary of the pharmacy school since 1915. He has been secretary-treasurer of the North Carolina Pharmaceutical Association for the last eighteen years, and editor of the Carolina Journal of Pharmacy, official journal of the association, for a number of years.

Professor Beard is district chairman for the Southern states of the membership committee of the American Pharmaceutical Association. From 1917 to 1919 he was president of the Elisha Mitchell Scientific Society.

He is the author of Therapeutic Terms and Common Diseases and co-author with Dr. George Howe of Latin for Pharmacists.

Christian Jew Will Make Address Here

Dr. Jacob Gartenhaus, Christian Jew of Atlanta, Georgia, will speak in the Sunday School auditorium of the Baptist church Tuesday evening at seven-forty-five o'clock. He will discuss the relation of Jesus to the modern Jewish people before an audience made up of both Jewish and non-Jewish students.

Dr. Gartenhaus is recognized as an eloquent speaker and as one of the prominent Christian Jews of the South. The address Tuesday night is so planned that it will not interfere with those who wish to attend the Angna Enters dances, the student entertainment attraction scheduled to take place in Memorial hall at eight-thirty the same night.

Carolina Track Team Garners Ninety-Nine Points To Down State

Tar Babies Duplicate Varsity Victory With Win Over State Yearlings.

BAGBY AND SLUSSER LEAD

Tar Heels Gather Twelve Firsts, Eleven Seconds, and Six Thirds.

By Thomas H. Broughton

Beneath hovering clouds and threatening rain, some five hundred Tar Heel fans turned out to watch Carolina win its second outdoor track meet of the season, piling up a 99-27 score over North Carolina State. The Carolina Tar Babies won their second meet of the season at the same time, running up 103½ points to the State Yearlings 22.

Carolina's points were gathered from twelve first places, eleven second places, and six third places. Wilson, in the shot put, and Captain McGinn, in the 880 yard run, were the only State men to place first. Only three State men placed second: Paris, in the 120 yard high hurdles, Gurneau, in the shot put, and Ricks, in the mile run, placing in the runner-up position.

Bagby and Slusser Lead

The Tar Heel scoring was led by Bagby and Slusser, with ten points each, garnered from first places in the high and broad jumps, and 100 yard dash and 220 yard low hurdles, respectively. Brown ran a close second with nine points gathered from a first place in the javelin throw, a second place in the discus, and a third place in the shot put, being the only Carolina man to place in the latter event. Davis and Arnold followed with eight and seven points respectively.

Wilson and Captain McGinn, with first places in the shot put and 880 yard run, respectively, led the Wolfpack scoring with five points. Gurneau and Paris with a second and a third each, for four points, took runner-up honors for State.

Arnold and Ruble both cleared twelve six and let it go at that. Arnold also placed second in the broad jump to get seven points for fourth place in the Tar Heel scoring.

Bagby Proves Expert Broad Jumper

For the first time in his life George Bagby, high jump star, entered the broad jump, and wonder of wonders, on his very first trial, leaped twenty feet and ten inches to win first place in that event.

Straus, entering his first varsity meet of the year after being kept out of the previous meet with a hand injury, took second place in the javelin throw, running a close second to Brown, who hurled the javelin 163 feet 11 inches to win first place.

The Tar Babies won their second intercollegiate meet of the season and their third of the year, running up 108½ points to State's 17½. The frosh scores came on thirteen first places, eleven second places, seven third places, and a three cornered tie for first place in the high jump between John Phipps, of Carolina, and Jay and Booker, of State.

Weisker and Goodwin Lead Frosh

Weisker, with first place in the 100 and the 220 yard dashes, and Goodwin, with first places in the 120 yard high hurdles and the 220 yard low hurdles, gathered ten points to lead the Tar Baby scoring. Higby, with a first in the 440 yard run and a second in the hundred yard dash, took second place scoring honors, with eight points.

Game Postponed

Rain caused the postponement of the scheduled game between the Universities of North Carolina and Maryland which was to have been played yesterday at Emerson field.

TAR BABY NINE ANNEXES FIRST WIN OF SEASON

Frosh Bunch Hits in Last Two Frames to Take 7-5 Win From Roanoke Rapids

Playing the first five innings in a steady downpour of rain, the Frosh baseball team turned in their first win of the season against Roanoke Rapids High by the score of 7 to 5.

The yearlings tallied three times in the initial frame when DeRose doubled to center, H. Phipps walked, Tatum was safe at first on an error, loading the bags, and Brandt and McIver singled to drive in the three runs. A long homer to deep center by Brandt accounted for two more in the fifth. DeRose singled in the sixth, went to third when the pitcher threw Phipps' grounder past the first baseman, and scored on the throw-in of Tatum's high fly to deep center. Phipps scored as Brandt grounded to second.

Frankel displayed good control despite the rain, holding the visitors to three scattered hits in the first four innings. Dickens drove in a run for Roanoke Rapids in the fifth, his single bringing J. Womble home, who had reached first on an error. The visitors tied the score with four runs in their half of the sixth on two walks, an error, two singles by Sullivan and C. Womble, and a double by Hardison. Hardison's wallop looked good for a circuit clout but hit a tree next to the fence and bounded within reach of the right fielder.

Brandt, with a homer and single in four attempts, and DeRose, with a double and single out of three tries, led the Tar Babies at bat. McIver, Adair, and Frankel accounted for the remaining Carolina bingles. C. Womble led the visitors getting a double and single in three times at bat.

Adair caught a hot liner in the fourth, catching the runner off at first with a fast peg to Brandt, to execute the only double play of the game.

Score by innings:

Roanoke Rapids Hi	000	014	0
Freshmen	300	022	x

Bob Gold, frosh star, set a new University record for freshmen in the pole vault, with a vault of eleven feet eight and one-quarter inches. Dave Neiman, former track star, held the former freshman record with a vault of about ten feet eight inches.

Legore, Tar Baby star, hurled the javelin 175 feet one inch to beat the varsity's best efforts by eleven feet and two inches. L. G. Sullivan finished a lap ahead of his nearest competitor, his twin brother, to win the two mile run in ten minutes, forty-three and one-fifth seconds.

The summary of the Carolina-State varsity meet follows:

100 yard dash: first, Slusser (C); second, Marland (C); third, Smith (C). Time: 10 seconds flat.

220 yard dash: first, Smith (C); second, Drane (C); third, Stout (S). Time: 22.2 seconds.

440 yard dash: first, Weil (C); second, Marland (C); third,

BRYAN GRANT COMPARED WITH FORMER WIMBLEDON CHAMPION

Experts Say Carolina Ace Shows Amazing Resemblance in Style To "Little Bill" Johnson; Grant Has Defeated Some of Best Collegiate Stars in South.

Those who saw Bryan Grant open Carolina's tennis season by running through Clemson's Number One man in straight sets, 6-1, 6-0, are struck with the amazing resemblance in size and style of the Tar Heel ace and of "Little Bill" Johnston.

"Little Bill," Wimbledon champion in 1923, and doubles partner and chief singles rival to the equally famous "Big Bill" Tilden, was 5 feet 5, but that didn't matter. By his perfect timing "Little Bill" proved that maximum speed could be acquired by a small man. He further proved to many big boys of the tennis world that truth of the old adage, that "the bigger they are the harder they fall."

Grant goes "Little Bill" one better, for "Bitsy" is just 5 feet 4. He hasn't been a Wimbledon champ yet, but he can claim the honor of being the smallest player ever to make the coveted first ten of the national rankings.

This big little star of the Tar Heels has done many other amazing things with his big tennis bludgeon. He won both Southern and National Clay court titles last year, and while he is just a sophomore eligible for the first time for the intercollegiates, he has beaten Cliff Sutter, the college champion almost every time he has ever played him.

He has scalped such stars as Fritz Mercur, who rated Number Six in the country in 1930, and he has given more than one Davis Cup player a great run for his money. Johnny Doeg was one of these, Grant having forced him to 17-15, one of the longest sets on record, for a victory in a meeting at Pinehurst last spring when "Bitsy" was a freshman here.

His game is nothing short of

DOPING 'EM OUT

By

BOB BETTS

Four years ago there was very little interest in tennis here or anywhere else in the South. Since then, however, the game has been steadily growing in popularity. The South has produced some fine college racquet wielders in Cliff Sutter, Berkley Bell, and others. Coaches are being hired at various schools, more tennis courts are being laid out, and the net game is decidedly "on the boom" in Dixie. Perhaps one of the main reasons for the increased interest in tennis is because so many people can become actively engaged in it. This of course leads to interest in the star players and attracts large galleries. For the past few years tennis has been a major sport at the University of Texas. Now that Carolina has two National Champions and six other fine players there is no reason why tennis cannot be made a major sport here. Right now this team is attracting more national interest than any other athletic team on this campus. This sport has arrived, and Carolina should take the first step in giving it better recognition in this section of the country.

It is safe to say that the Tar Heels have the best balanced tennis squad in the East. Nevertheless, there are other good net teams in the South. Virginia's netmen are led by Captain Alphonso Smith. Smith is one of the South's crack players. Newell is another good performer for the Old Dominion team. Consider Tulane for a moment. Cliff Sutter and Bayon are gone, but they still have Charley Hume. Tulane has a good well-balanced tennis aggregation. The team that will probably give the Tar Heels their stiffest competition in the South hails from Athens, Georgia, the home of the famous Bulldogs. Judge Beaver, one of the best doubles players in the South, leads an impressive array of tennis material. It will be recalled that Hines teamed with Beaver to win several doubles championships last summer. Jack Boykin and Walker are two other good netmen for Georgia. Sewanee has a North Carolina boy, Ted Burwell, on its team. The Duke Millionaires have two good players in George Rogers and Jack Meyers; they lost Grady Frank last year.

The net team that will make

GOLFERS DOWN GEORGETOWN IN INITIAL MATCH

Mud and Rain No Hindrance to Carolinians as They Spurt to 10½-7½ Victory.

In a match played in the mud and rain yesterday the Carolina golf team opened their season successfully, defeating the Georgetown university golfers 10 1-2 to 7 1-2 over the Hope Valley course.

Joe Adams, playing number one, easily defeated Begar to net three points.

Dick Wilson of Georgetown almost repeated the trick against Mason, winning 2 1-2 of the three points.

Slattery, Georgetown, defeated Carter, 2-1.

Al Brown of Carolina beat Boucek, 2-1.

In the first foursome match, Adams and Mason tied with Begar and Wilson of the visitors.

Carter and Brown, the second foursome, cinched the match by taking two and a half of the three points from Slattery and Boucek.

Joe Adams, with a 78 for the eighteen holes, was low man for the Tar Heels, while Wilson with 79 led for the northerners.

Two matches are scheduled for this week. On April 7, the crack Boston College team will meet the Tar Heels at Hope Valley, and on April 11, Carolina will play host to Washington and Lee.

Measles Epidemic Threatening Town

Reports of the city health officer, Dr. S. A. Nathan, would indicate that a mild epidemic of measles is threatening the community. There has been an unusually large number of cases of both the German measles and the ordinary measles among the students of the University. In the majority of these cases a short treatment in the infirmary was sufficient to effect the cure, but several were rather serious.

In the community and surrounding country many cases have been reported to the health officer. In Durham county more than 1,600 cases have been reported, sixty of these having been brought in in one day.

Dr. Nathan warns citizens to be watchful for the symptoms of this malady: feverishness, a headache, and a cold. The rash may not appear for several days. It is advised that a physician be summoned immediately upon observation of these symptoms.

The quarantine period is fourteen days. In a home where measles has been found the children who have not had it are quarantined but those who have had it are allowed to continue to school.

Tar Heel Nine to Meet Wildcats In Winston-Salem at Three O'clock.

HEELS JINX FOR WILDCATS

Davidson Has Veteran Infield; Traditional Game Promises Much Color.

Young but ambitious and hustling, the University of North Carolina nine will pack its bags and sally forth Monday for its first stand away from home.

The Tar Heel nine will meet Davidson at Southside Park in Winston-Salem Monday at 3 o'clock in the annual Easter Monday classic between the two teams, and there should be big doings in the Twin City.

Carolina has be-jinxed the Davidson nines for several years now, and the Wildcats, with their veteran infield, will be out for revenge.

The Tar Heels have a completely new infield, but they should be more than able to make things interesting. Despite their youth, they've already taken series from Cornell and Pennsylvania, and Longest, Shields and Edwards look like one of the strongest pitching trios Carolina has had in several seasons.

More than that, however, it's just tradition for this to be a big game. Carolina followers rate it second only to the annual Carolina-Virginia classic in Greensboro, and the calibre of the games and the color of the delegations of supporters, always draw large crowds.

The Tar Heels have had a big edge in the Davidson series of late. The Wildcats, in fact, haven't had a win since 1927, and last year Paul Edwards set them down in Winston 9-3, and

Phi Calendar

The calendar for the Phi Assembly meeting Tuesday includes the following bills:

1. Resolved that the Phi Assembly go on record as favoring the resolution that companionate marriages contracted under the system proposed by Judge Ben Lindsay be recognized as legal unions.

2. Resolved: That the prohibition act be modified so as to legalize the sale of light wines and beers.

3. Resolved: That the Phi Assembly go on record as favoring the proposed consolidation of counties in North Carolina.

The first two bills have been brought over from the last meeting because of lack of time to discuss them at that time.

Di Calendar

The Di Senate meets Tuesday night in its regular weekly meeting to discuss the subject of the House tax of ten percent on the college football games. President Ramsay stated that all members are reminded of the fact that those missing four meetings will be automatically dropped from the roll.

The bill as it is stated in the calendar is, Resolved, that the House tax of ten percent on college football games is unjust and unfair.

Dashiell's Uncle Dies

Dr. J. F. Dashiell received word Wednesday of the death of his uncle, President J. H. T. Main of Grinnell College, Iowa. Dr. Main was seventy-one years of age and had been connected with Grinnell College the greater part of his life, having gone there as professor of Greek and Latin when a young man. Only last year he completed a million dollar endowment campaign to be used mainly for increasing the salaries of the faculty.

the Tar Heel's first bid for the National Intercollegiate Championship is composed of the following men: Captain Sonny Graham, Bryan Grant, Wilmer Hines, Hinkey Hendlin, Phil Liskin, Ed Yeomans, Lenoir Wright, and Luke Abels. Captain Graham, a hard worker, has a nice back-hand game. It is his second year on the varsity.

Bryan Grant, in spite of his small physique, has remarkable endurance. His ability to make marvelous "gets" is very disconcerting to his opponent, because to win a point his opponent must make three or four perfect shots. The Atlanta boy has the best back-hand of anyone on the team. His forehand, while not powerful, is very consistent. He volleys well, and, in spite of his small stature, his overhead is extremely good. Grant also employs a nice chop effectively when it is necessary. The Georgian, National Clay Court Champion, ranks tenth in the National rating.

Wilmer Hines, National Junior Champion, has a splendid build and unlimited endurance power. Coupled with this fine form is his knowledge of the game. Hines has one of the most powerful forehand strokes in the South, and a consistent backhand. He also has a decisive overhead, good service, and fair volleying ability. The South Carolinian's forceful forehand is his most consistent point winner, and his favorite shot. Hines ranks 32nd in the National rating.

Hinkey Hendlin, present state champion, has a very good forehand and a fair backhand. He uses his height to advantage in serving and smashing lobs. This is the New York boy's second year on the team. Phil Liskin, another second year man and New Yorker, plays the backcourt almost exclusively, but his volleying and overhead are a little off. Phil is a tireless worker. The veteran Ed Yeomans plays a nice, well-rounded game, employing a sharp, forehand and steady backhand almost entirely in advancing to the net, where he is at his best. His volleying is brilliant at times. The Capital City netman was State Champion in 1929. Lenoir Wright, Queen City boy, has an even-balanced game. Wright is at ease both at the net and in the backcourt. He has a nice chop which he brings into play when it is necessary. Luke Abels has a nice backcourt game, and uses a fine forehand to good advantage. He has, however, an erratic backhand and a fair net game.

Incidentally, in the doubles team, composed of Hines and Grant, Carolina has a very strong claim to not only the Southern Championship, but to the National Championship as well. This is probably the only doubles team in the country with two National Champions on it. Both boys are undoubtedly future Davis Cup material. Yeomans and Wright make up the second doubles team. These two players, although playing together for the first time, should make one of the finest doubles teams in the South. Both are excellent players, and work well together. A third team is composed of Hendlin and Liskin, while Graham and Abels team together for a fourth pair. No wonder Coach Kenfield wears a broad smile while he watches his charges practice! He has done a fine job of coaching since he came several years ago. Mr. Kenfield is also coach of the Golf Team.

If a match can be arranged with the Davis Cup team for April 11, a better line can be obtained on just what to expect from the Tar Heel's powerful tennis squad. Frank Shiels, Johnny Doeg, Sidney Wood, Cliff Sutter, Johnny Van Ryan, and Berkley Bell are some of the more outstanding players who are on the Davis Cup squad. All of these men and and the entire Carolina team are entered in the North-South Tournament which gets under way at Pinehurst on April 13.

Besides being popularly known over several large radio stations by his slogan, "Everybody dance," and by his familiar salutation, "Mike at the mike," Speciale has appeared with his band in dozens of famous clubs in the East and Mid-West. His engagements include those at Castle Farm in Cincinnati, Bamboo Gardens in Cleveland, and Young's Million Dollar Pier in Atlantic City.

On one occasion upon his return from the East to St. Louis, where he is also well known, the mayor met Mike at the City Hall and presented him the keys to the city.

List of Chaperones

President Frank Graham and his sister and hostess, Miss Kate Graham, will head the list of chaperones for the Festival which includes Dr. and Mrs. W. S. Bernard, T. F. Hickerson, Dr. and Mrs. W. F. Bryan Grant Compared With Former Champion sensational. Shorter than Johnston, he covers every inch of a court with the same flashes of speed and the same spurts of lightning-like quickness. His backhand is as dependable as his forehand, every stroke is a polished one, and his remarkable tenacity and grit make him get shots that other players wouldn't try for. What is even more upsetting to his rivals is the fact that he waits the maximum on every shot, to find out where his rival is going to be, then with deadly aim returns the ball where the rival isn't.

Carolina And Davidson Cross Bats Tomorrow In Easter Monday Bill

Cecil Longest turned them back here 8-3.

That seems to furnish all the more reason why there'll be a hot contest in the Twin City Monday. Davidson's veteran lineup will probably be Mills, ss; Barnhardt, 3b; Goodson, 2b; Proctor, 1b; Armfield, c; Mathis, rf; Covington, lf; Morrison, cf; and Croker, p.

Carolina may pitch either Edwards or Longest, who set the Wildcats down last year, or Shields, who hurled Carolina's 2-0 win over Pennsylvania this week.

The rest of the lineup will probably be Ferebee, ss; Wyrick, 2b; Peacock, cf; Dunlap, 1b; Blythe, rf; Potter, c; Powell, 3b; and House, lf.

Twenty-three Tar Heels will make the trip to the Twin City tomorrow morning. They are: catchers: Captain Potter, Pattisall; pitchers: Longest, Shields, Edwards, Hinton, Merritt, Griffith, Scarboro; infielders: Dunlap, Wyrick, Ferebee, Powell, Leonard, Johnson, Moore; outfielders: House, Blythe, Davis, Peacock, McKinney, Paxton, Hornaday.

Advanced Refrigeration

Continually working for the advancement of domestic electric refrigeration, engineers of Frigidaire Corporation have made it possible for this General Motors subsidiary this year to present a household refrigerator with many refinements and improvements, according to an announcement by the local representative. Economy, efficiency and beauty have been the guiding stars of these engineers and as a result the Frigidaire of today operates at much lower cost, freezes more ice cubes faster, has an interior and exterior finish of durable white porcelain-on-steel and provides more shelf space than before.

ANGNA ENTERS IS FINAL OFFERING IN THIS QUARTER

Famous Dancer Concludes Events Scheduled by Entertainment Committee.

The final offering of the entertainment committee will be presented tonight in Memorial hall. Miss Angna Enters, America's greatest dancer mime, is to be the performer in the last number of the series.

This pantomimist breathes life into her characterizations. Her costuming is of the simplest, although there is complete change of dress. Angna Enters is not to be confused in any way with the Spanish dancer, Carola Goya, whose appearance here was marked with great success, since the two dancers are of entirely different types. Miss Goya gave a representation of authentic Spanish folk dances while Miss Enters portrays no set dance of any nation but rather those compositions of her own which have proven so acceptable elsewhere.

Miss Enters does not obtain her success by obvious means. Her make-up, while not completely independent of pigment, pencil, and brush, undergoes no material change number to number. Her results are accomplished primarily by a state of mind, an uncanny faculty for translating herself, body and soul, into the contemporary psychology of her pictured women. She does not, however, despise the assistance of some slight properties of hair arrangements and, above all, of costume.

The latter contributes less directly than one would suppose. The fact that she not only designs but actually constructs the clothing and appurtenances of her characters has something to do with the fact that they are not slavish copies out of historical albums. Excellent needlewoman that she must be, her mind races too far ahead of her clever practical fingers to permit overlong hours with embroidery frames or dressmakers' dummies. There is nevertheless a surprising absence of makeshift, an amazing accuracy discoverable in her creations.

First of all materials and general design are consistent and logical, and the style of her costume strikes straight to the heart of the contemporary vanities. Could she, so clothed, be transported to the actual scene and time which she attempts to reflect, she would attract little or no attention from the rest of the population. She might indeed be criticized for an eccentricity or two on the part of her countrymen but never for the minutest anachronism of form or manner.

Mrs. Ernst Will Build

Mrs. Ruby Ernst, who now dwells on Cobb Terrace, is to build a home in Westwood opposite that of H. F. Comer. H. D. Carter has designed for her a spacious colonial house. It will have a glassed-in porch at one end, walls of cedar shingles, and above the cornice, along the front of the roof, a railing such as is seen on some of the old Nantucket homes.

Freshmen Hear Abernathy

Dr. E. A. Abernethy, University physician, spoke to the freshmen in chapel yesterday morning on prevalent diseases.

DI WILL DISCUSS ABSENCE FINES

The question of the present fines placed on students by the psychology department for missing classes is scheduled to be one of the subjects for discussion in the meeting of the Di Senate tonight in New West building. The present House tax of ten percent on college football games is also to be one of the subjects on the calendar.

As stated on the calendar, the bills are as follows: (1) Resolved : That the present fines placed on students missing classes in the psychology department is unwarranted and unfair; and (2) Resolved: That the House tax of ten percent on college football games is unjust and unfair.

LATIN TROPHY IS WON BY DURHAM

Miss Margaret Edwards Pronounced Winner by University Latin Faculty.

The Durham high school, represented by Miss Margaret Edwards, has been pronounced winner of the annual state-wide Latin contest conducted by the Latin department of the University and the University Extension Division, it was announced yesterday by Secretary E. R. Rankin, secretary of the committee in charge.

The prize, a trophy cup given by the University Extension Division, will be presented to Miss Edwards of the Durham school at the finals of the high school debating contest here April 17.

Sixty-five high schools, represented by 1084 students, participated in the contest, which was held throughout the state February 27. The three best papers from each school were forwarded to the contest committee here where they were graded by members of the Latin Department.

Of the other contestants first honorable mention goes to Mildred Boone of the Mebane high school; second, Catherine Isenhour, Durham; third, Edgar Long, Roxboro; fourth, Martha Scoville, Greenville; fifth, Chas. W. Shuff, III, Greenville.

Durham, Greenville, Henderson, Mebane and Roxboro each had three papers with a grade of 90 or better. The Central high school of Charlotte, the Curry high school of Greensboro, and Louisburg had two papers with a grade of 90 or better.

Asheville, Chapel Hill, Fayetteville, Goldsboro, Greensboro, High Point, Lenoir, Mooresville, Salisbury and Winston-Salem each had one paper in this class.

The judges for the contest were Professor George Howe, G. A. Harrer, S. G. Sanders, and Van Courtland Elliott, all of the University Latin faculty.

Infirmary List

Students confined in the infirmary for yesterday were: H. B. Parker, B. C. Moore, Fred Moore, H. A. Ljung, Ralph S. Crum, H. W. Beebe, K. A. Prochazka, J. M. Tobin, B. C. Philpott, J. R. Riley, and Kenneth Fronenberger.

GREET PLAYERS ARE ON SECOND AMERICAN TOUR

Famous English Company Will Appear Here Under Auspices of the Playmakers.

Tuesday, April 14, the Carolina Playmakers will sponsor the performance of the Ben Greet players in the Shakespearean drama, Hamlet. Tickets for the presentation will be on sale at the Student's Supply Store and at the Book Exchange. This performance will be the first regular dramatic presentation to take place in the new Memorial hall.

The Ben Greet players are now on their second transcontinental tour within recent years, the first having been made during the 1929-1930 season. On the former tour. the itinerary included major cities and universities throughout the United States.

Sir Philip Ben Greet, the leader of this cast, has been on the stage for fifty years and has taught more actors than any other living man. In recognition of his life devoted to the cause of drama in education, King George of England knighted him in June, 1929.

In speaking of the success of his career, Sir Philip said, "There are compensations for the lack of financial success. I have been mascot to an army of friends. I have seemed to bring good luck. It has been a

Research Reveals Prevalence Of Carving Tendency Among Students

Reporters on the Columbia Spectator, student daily at Columbia University, have made a research into the sculpturing that beautifully effaces desktops and benches of every so-called institution of learning throughout the country.

At Columbia, desks in one building contained the artistically engraved names of 117 young ladies, ranging from Agnes to Yvonne. Predominant was the name of Helene, which had been engraved with much skill and patience in forty-eight places. It was quite evident that the sculptor had spent some little time carving outside of class hours, a new form of extra curricular activity.

Carolina students do not seem to be adept at this art; at least few of them have taken time to cut young ladies' names into the campus's desks. This may be ascribed to the fact that pocket-knives are not used extensively and the fact that class-room seats are comparatively comfortable and conducive to sleep.

Those cursed with insomnia have not neglected the art of engraving however. Though not extensive, every seat bears the mark of a knife, usually designating several Greek symbols or students' initials.

With the curtailing of optional attendance, the epidemic of carving may strike at any moment, due to the fact that those who cannot sleep in the class room will attempt vengeance on the wooden seats.

ART EXHIBIT WILL BE BROUGHT HERE

Plans are being perfected for the exhibit of the Association of North Carolina artists here in the last week of the month. It is to be held in the music building, and Dr. H. S. Dyer, head of the University's music department, is assisting the officers of the association in the arrangements for hanging the pictures. The display will include portraits landscapes, decorative paintings, and drawings in charcoal and pen-and-ink.

The artists are to have a reception April 24 for the American College Publicity Association which is to be in session here at that time.

Donald Mattison of Winston-Salem, who won the Prix de Rome in 1928, sends word that he will be delighted to send pictures to future exhibits of the association; he is now in Rome and cannot be represented this year.

PLAN TO ERECT CAUTION SIGNS

University and town officials are trying to devise some plan to diminish the danger of accidents at the campus gate to the rear of Spencer hall. This is at the northeast corner of the Arboretum across from Presidents Graham's home.

Many children pass through this gate in going to and from school. The path in both directions, alongside the Arboretum and back of the President's yard, is obscured by stone walls and shrubbery from the view of drivers coming from the main street, and frequently automobiles go by the gate at high speed. A child coming out suddenly upon the roadway, ahead of one of these speeding cars, might be run down.

The suggestion has been made that caution signs be put up for both drivers and pedestrians who approach the crossing.

GUSTAV PLESSOW TO LECTURE ON GERMAN LETTERS

Noted Scholar Will Explain Literary Tendencies of the New Germany.

Gustav Plessow, the German scholar now visiting here, will give several lectures for University students and faculty, and one for the general public on "Post-War Germany."

The topic of his lecture for the graduate students in the English department will be "The Principal Forms of Style in Middle English Literature as Illustrated in 'Gawain and the Green Knight' and in Chaucer." He will lecture Tuesday, April 21, for all graduate students, on "German University Life." At a meeting of the Philological Club Tuesday, May 5, his topic will be " A New Theory Concerning English Dialects."

Mr. Plessow began his studies of the English language and literature in his early youth and later combined these with studies of economics and chemistry. It was in 1928 that he became interested in American literature and life, and his activities in that field led to his appointment to the chair of American at the University of Tubingen. This spring he is making his headquarters in Chapel Hill, and he will visit cultural centers all over the country. In the course of his travels he will collect material with which to build up his department.

PHI TO DISCUSS TRIAL MARRIAGE

A modification of the present prohibition amendment will be discussed at the regular meeting of the Phi Assembly tonight in New East building, when the members of the society convene in the third meeting of the year. Aside from the argument of the question of the bills, the program will include reports from the various committees of the group, and especially an announcement from the members in charge of the spring social function which the society plans to give sometime this quarter.

The three next bills on the calendar which will come up for discussion tonight are: 1. Resolved: That the Phi Assembly go on record as favoring the resolution that companionate marriages contracted under the present system proposed by Judge Ben Lindsay be recognized as legal unions. 2. Resolved: That the prohibition act be modified so as to legalize the sale of light wines and beers. 3. Resolved: That the Phi Assembly go on record as favoring the proposed consolidation of the counties in North Carolina.

DELEGATES SENT TO CONFERENCE

Members of Faculty and Student Body Attend Meeting Held at Goldsboro.

Representing the University at the annual North Carolina Conference for social service which is now convening in Goldsboro Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday of this week will be President Frank Graham, Dr. E. C. Branson, Professor G. T. Schwenning of the faculty, H. F. Comer, local Y. M. C. A. secretary; Beverly Moore, Ed Hamer, Bob Barnett, Billy McKee, and representatives from one of the sociology classes headed by Henry Brown.

The student division convened yesterday in Goldsboro and will continue through Wednesday. The principal speakers will be Dr. W. C. Jackson, vice-president of North Carolina College for Women, and Dr. W. A. Stanbury of the Duke University faculty. During the following two days there will be two special sessions for students. Student representatives will participate in the general sessions during the remainder of the conference. Beverly Moore of the University is vice-president of the conference.

During the coming week end the University Y will send out three deputation teams to Greenville, Fayetteville, and Rocky Mount. They will stage programs before the high schools grammar schools, boy scout organizations, civic clubs and churches in those three places.

STAFF MEMBERS TO GIVE BANQUET

For the first time in the history of the publication, the members of the Daily Tar Heel staff will give a banquet in honor of Will Yarborough, retiring editor, and Pat Patterson, retiring business manager of the paper, Thursday night in the private dining room of the Carolina Inn.

The affair is being financed by the members of the business, reportorial, and editorial staffs. All those planning to attend are asked to pay Bob Woerner before the night of the occasion.

SPRING CALENDAR HAS FIVE MAJOR SETS OF DANCES

Plans for Junior-Senior Ball, Finals, and May Frolic Have Been Completed.

With the commencement of the spring quarter comes the prospect of a very full social season for the University campus in the form of dances and other social functions. Foremost among these would come the Junior-Senior Ball, the Spring Festival, the May Frolic, the Grail dances, the individual fraternity events, and the German club dances sponsored by the German club.

Probably the biggest number on the quarter's dance program is the set of dances to be given by the two upper classes on April 24-25 under the title of the Junior-Senior Ball. This idea of combining the dances of these two classes this year is entirely new, and judging from the work done so far by the dance committee, the plan will be continued in the future.

The committees in charge of the arrangements for the affair have secured Johnny Hamp and his "Kentucky Serenaders" to furnish the music for the occasion. Hamp's orchestra, which is considered one of the leading ten dance orchestras in the country, is very popular in this section.

The first of these two dances will be the Junior Prom and is scheduled to occur in the Tin Can Friday, April 24, from nine till one o'clock. The annual Senior Ball will take place in the Tin Can the following night between the hours of nine and twelve.

Representatives of the junior class on the executive committee are: Theron Brown, who is president of the class, Jack Dungan, Jack Farris, John Phil Cooper, and Steve Lynch. Those on the senior committee are: Pat Patterson, John Idol, Cliff Baucom, William Cooper, and K. C. Ramsay. According to plans now under consideration the color scheme or motif for the decorations will be predominantly black and white. In all of the appointments elaborate formality will be emphasized.

Many patronesses from various parts of the state are expected to be present at this ball. No one who is not a member of either the junior or senior class will be admitted as it is strictly a class function.

This series of social occasions follows the winter and fall quarters' program consisting of the Grail dances, the co-ed ball, and Mid-Winters.

The Grail gave three dances during the fall quarter as well as a like number during the winter quarter. Following their established custom there will be three such dances held during the next quarter. Bynum gym-

A Cure For Extravagance

Senator Bingham proposes to reduce governmental expenses and appropriations by applying federal taxes to all classes of people. He plans to have those who spend pay. For years now the majority of the voters have contributed little to federal revenue. But these same voters have demanded larger and larger appropriations from the government.

The Vermont Senator plans to end these demands. He does not propose to burden the people with taxes. He is not seeking additional revenue for the government. He merely seeks to impress on the large nontaxable class of United States citizens the fact that when Congress appropriates money someone pays. He seeks to bring home to the citizens responsibility for government.

Undoubtedly Senator Bingham will be condemned by the champions of the masses. He will be denounced by representatives of almost every class. But his plan, we believe, will slow down the ever-growing federal appropriations bill. Those who spend money will pay and when we begin to feel the effects of paying some amount of money to the federal government we will demand fewer and fewer unnecessary appropriations.

North Carolina has witnessed such a state of affairs. After spending money for years and years without thought we suddenly decided that it is time to call a halt. And what a halt we have called this year. Why not apply the same principle to federal affairs?

Trouble Ahead For Politicians

There is a directness and frankness about Mr. John J. Raskob, chairman of the Democratic national committee, that is refreshing in this age of straddling and side-stepping. He at least must be admired for his straight-forwardness. And this very frankness is proving dangerous for the politicians of both parties.

Prohibition as an issue has been avoided for years by the two major parties. Both apparently accept it and promise the voters honest efforts to enforce the laws. Mr. Raskob suggests a different course of action to the Democrats. In his recent letter he asks for views on the prohibition question. He urges an open discussion of the question and a party stand.

Politicians have successfully evaded such a stand. They are wet where the voters are wet and dry where the voters are dry. If the Democratic chairman has his way they will be either dry or wet. The Republicans may hope to gain comfort from the actions of the Democrats but if Mr. Raskob continues in high circles of the Democratic party he will likely shell them out on this question along with others in 1932. He is applying business methods to running a party and while such methods are extremely distasteful to straddlers we believe that they will in the end produce results.

OPEN FORUM

Laissez-Faire

The Psychology department has decided to fine students who fail to attend classes. This seems to go the recent compulsory attendance provision even one better. A few more such regulations and the profs will have the University back in its Pre-Civil War status.

A student pays a sum of money to be allowed supposedly to follow scholarly pursuits. He probably expects to seek social, religious, vocational and recreational adjustments. But no—the profs evidently have their own views on such matters. If one deems it imprudent on special occasions to attend classes and thus refuse to take advantage for what he has paid, is it not his own affair? Why should he pay in full for certain privileges and then seeing fit not to accept them, be compelled to pay once again for so deciding?

If a woman goes into a grocery store to purchase a pound of sugar, pays for it, then due to some whim, decides to leave it there, wouldn't it be a great idea for the grocer to demand another payment? Yes—a great idea.

However, if the profs are intent on placing fines, how about the profs paying them? If some member of the faculty receives $300 for delivering 30 lectures and happens to be absent twice, why not dock him $20 and return it to the students for "services not rendered"?

Too many flunks in Psychology seems to be the reason for this inane regulation. Does the faculty hope to guarantee passing grades by insuring attendance? Fine chance! The students will come to class with the worst kind of grudge against the prof, the department, and anything that pertains to psychology. This attitude will be anything but conducive toward learning.

It seems that our eminent psychologists are forgetting all their psychological principles in its application to their own students.

What an utterly ridiculous state of affairs!

Another College Leader Dies

(Editor's Note: President Main, deceased, of Grinnell College is the uncle of Dr. J. F. Dashiell of the University.)

Nearly twenty-five years of service in Iowa education were terminated yesterday by the death of President J. H. T. Main of Grinnell college.

His proteges as teacher of Greek or as college president made no dashing end runs or like the pupils of Knute Rockne, whose death the day before grieved the nation's sports fans. They did, however, during the last quarter century steadily contribute to the reputation of Grinnell college as a midwest center of culture, one of few in the nation.

Grinnell college is one of six institutions sharing Harvard exchange professorships. One other in the midwest is Knox college, which is to Illinois what Grinnell is to Iowa—epitome of the best that a small college can offer in culture, antithesis of all that mass education means in stress on quantity rather than quality.

Grinnell college is exclusive in the sense that its entrance standards and its scholarship qualifications make it so. That exclusiveness is well worth having. Average students are welcome at Grinnell, are offered splendid facilities. Inferior students or those unwilling to work do not slide through Grinnell so easily as at many other schools.

It is not hard to ascertain why such a college should have its credits accepted at face value on transfer to the University of Iowa. It is not difficult to see how the reputation of such an institution should attract to its student body representatives of distant points as well as much of the cream from Iowa's high school graduates.

How much of what the college is can be traced to its administrator is problematical, but certainly during his twenty-five years of executive guidance over the destinies of Grinnell President Main was responsible for achievements which merited his selection for the Carnegie foundation's board of trustees.

No one can wish to take one iota of credit from Knute Rockne as a national figure in athletics. But just as surely as high ideals in sportsmanship are deserving of acclaim, in like measure lofty ideals of scholarship and culture merit their portion of respect.

The passing of this individual educator doubtless marks a milestone for Grinnell college, which will be fortunate to replace him with a worthy successor, which will be blessed if there are enough who cherish the same ideals to carry on in the memory of his efforts toward finer education.

The Proposed Cut

President Ruthven told members of the University of Michigan club of Detroit, Friday night, that there are persons in Michigan who believe that the proposed mill-tax cut is possible without decreasing the value of the finished product. Dr. Ruthven then went on to show how utterly helpless the University would be should the present rate be cut, and he made very definite statements as to the extreme importance of continuing to finance the state's university in the adequate manner in which legislatures have functioned in the past.

The University of Michigan, being a tax-supported institution, is at a great disadvantage in comparison to privately controlled schools. In former years, the goodwill of the legislature decided Michigan's fate—whether or not the University got that adequate income. If the administration was favorable to the executives of the University, Michigan received enormous sums for its maintenance. If the chief executive of the state and the President of the University were at odds when appropriations were made, or if political factions opposed the administration in Ann Arbor, the appropriations were cut in half and the struggling faculty thinned out and all but succumbed.

To remedy this evil, legislation was passed to install what is known as the mill-tax, at a rate of 6-10ths, upon which the University could depend for a steady, annual income. This would eliminate the political grasp which formerly held the University, it would give some semblance of permanency to the institution at Ann Arbor, and it's installation would mean a chance to progress and keep step with the best of the privately endowed universities and colleges in the country. Thus the sea was calmed and the University went sailing along, building up an excellent faculty with the help of additional appropriations from the legislation and the steady income of the mill tax.

But this year a business depression hit Michigan's finances. Dr. Ruthven, sensing the need for the utmost economy, even in the face of losing some of his best professors, issued a statement that Michigan would NOT ask the legislature for a single penny in extra-appropriation. The statement included several important facts, among which appeared a warning to Lansing incumbents not to tamper with the mill-tax, the real life-blood of the University. In view of the liberal attitude of the President, even now faced with a building and faculty program which must wait for these self-denied special appropriations, Ann Arbor thought that the last had been heard from Lansing in regard to the 1931 income of the University. Then, like a bomb dropped from the heavens, came the governor's statement that the income would be cut, that even the mill tax would be reduced. Shocked University officials, visioning Michigan sans even a minimum income, foreseeing her attempt to reduce the salaries of her now underpaid faculty, rose up in arms. Dr. Ruthven, alumni bodies throughout the state, friendly legislators, faculty men themselves have concerted their efforts to retain that essential part of the University in the hope of retaining what has been built up in mental and material achievement.

President Ruthven went to Lansing last week to talk to members of the ways and means committee concerning the proposed cut. Nothing has been announced concerning the outcome of the informal conference, but official action is expected in the near future. The University will, in the meantime, exert—rightly—every influence it can bring to bear for a retention of the present mill tax rate. Nothing would be more fatal to the University, the very state itself than an acceptance of the propositions now being thrust before Michigan's legislature by blind politicians. — Michigan Daily.

The Cost Of College

The contention that Harvard is in grave danger of becoming a plutocracy, made in the current issue of the Harvard Graduates' Magazine, is not one which the University can afford to ignore. It represents a general fear among both alumni and undergraduates that the financial requirements of the House Plan rather than requirements of achievement and ability may determine who shall enter Harvard.

In a recent editorial the Yale News set the average annual expenditure for undergraduates at something over $2,000. Although this figure is probably $500 more than that necessary for a comfortable life at college, it confirms, nevertheless, the "Graduate's" assertion that only men with an income of at least $10,000 can afford to support at one time more than one son at Harvard. This means than many sons of professional men must either go to a smaller college or earn something during their college course.

Prizes and scholarships, the "Graduate" points out, have increased rapidly, but not in proportion to the cost of living at Harvard, which has more than doubled within ten years. Students of slight means are often forced to spend so much time in earning part of their expenses that they lose the high scholastic standing on which their scholarships depend. What is equally important, even if capable of maintaining their place in the Rank List, these men are deprived, through limitations on their time, of many of the advantages of college life.

The "Graduate" suggests that the University declare a building holiday and, for five or ten years, devote all gifts to increases in scholarships or the lowering of fixed charges. He envisions the possibility of a ten million dollar fund whereby every year a thousand men who would otherwise enter another colloge would be enabled to come to Harvard on a complete equality with all. Such a fund is perhaps a Utopian dream. The proposal to employ such money as the University may acquire for an increase in scholarships and a lowering of charges, however, will have the solid support of undergraduates. More important to the University than buildings are the men who fill them. Harvard ought to do everything it can to make the entrance of capable men as little contingent on wealth as possible. —Harvard Crimson.

The Harvard Memorial

The Harvard Crimson has made a sharp protest against the proposal of the corporation to build a great new chapel as a war memorial. The New York Times ridicules the protest, saying: "Some of the children are bawling in the college papers"; "So the infants bleat"; and more to the same effect. One of the editors of the Harkness Hoot, in a letter to the Yale Daily News, strongly supports the Crimson. The honors, in our judgment, rest with the younger generation. The grounds of objection to the proposed memorial actually set forth by both the editors and the contributors of the Crimson seem to us evident of a sound and serious concern with a question of real educational interest, and we congratulate them on their protest. The letter of Selden Rodman to the Yale Daily News supporting the stand of the Crimson raises at least three questions deserving of serious thought. He objects to the assumption of most of our war memorials that we were right and our enemies were wrong; he questions incidentally the right of universities to spend vast sums in unnecessary building; and, most striking of all, he declares: "The very gesture of sinking a million dollars in a Protestant chapel when the validity of Protestantism (and Christianity in general as a solution for contemporary problems) is being questioned must, to the unprejudiced observer, appear at least extravagant."

Now these protesting young men, if we understand them, are not objecting to religion as such, however much they may be questioning some of its current manifestations. They do seem to object, however, to the assumption that God is Nordic, Protestant, capitalistic, and pro-Ally. And they do not believe that the universities have the right to use the millions they can so easily command for the uncritical propagation of accepted ideas and beliefs. The students seem to be doing honest and genuine thinking, and in their thought we see far more of hope both for the universities and for the religion of the future than we can see in the action of a corporation that would build an unneeded chapel in the midst of a living university, or in the ideas of a great newspaper that finds it possible to defend such a waste provided only that the proposed building is "beautiful."

The controversy brings up another question that cries out for answer. Is it not full time to stop setting up religious war memorials of any kind? The churches, with a few honorable exceptions, blessed the last war, just as they have blessed every preceding one—and just as they will bless the next one, we are tempted to add. But during the past few years some of our prominent religious leaders have professed repentance, and have declared that they will be on the side of peace next time even when the drums beat. If their professions mean anything, they ought to fight every attempt to associate religion and war, even in retrospect. Let us build memorials, if we must, to our war dead, and let them express our grief at our folly and wickedness in sending these young men to death; but let us not help prepare another war by sanctifying the last one through associating its losses and sacrifices with the services of God instead of the devil.—The Nation.

"D" At Columbia Means Condition

The grade "D" at Columbia University is neither passing nor failing; it corresponds to the grade "E" here, giving a student the chance to take a reexamination in order to pass the course. Many students at Columbia have mistaken the meaning of this grade, and failed to take another exam on it, thus receiving no credit for the course.

In view of this fact definite steps will be taken to abolish this grade by the faculty of Columbia at the next meeting of that body. This means that a student will either pass or fail a course. In special circumstances a student may, at the discretion of his instructor, be given the temporary mark of "MU" (make-up). This will allow him to take another examination.

Tar Heels Primed For Series With Princeton

Four Games Postponed Recently Because of Showers; Princeton Leader Last Year.

AICKER IS TIGER HURLER

Princeton Has Bowed to W. & M. Twice; Saving Strength for Tar Heel Nine.

With a season's record of two wins and one loss, the Tar Heels are primed for the opening of the two game series with Princeton today at Emerson Field.

Rain has played havoc with the schedule, already causing the postponement of four games, one with Cornell, Pennsylvania, Maryland, and Davidson.

Princeton, last year, was one of the leaders in the Eastern Intercollegiate League, and this year is represented by a veteran team.

The Tigers, however, have opened their season rather inauspiciously, bowing twice to the William and Mary team, but their best pitcher, Aicker, has been saved for the Tar Heel series.

In Trix Bennett, the Tigers have one of the finest outfielders in the East. The football star, in addition to being a great fielder, is a good hitter, and he is expected to give the Tar Heel pitchers plenty of trouble.

The Tar Heels will probably start with Cecil Longest on the mound.. Longest is the chap who held the Cornell batters in check for a 11-5 victory. For the second game, J. D. Shields, who knuckle balled his way for a 2-0 shutout over Pennsylvania will probably get the call.

The lineups:

Carolina: Ferebee, ss; Wyrick, 2b; Peacock, cf; Dunlap, 1b; Blythe, rf; House, lf; Powell, 3b, and Potter c.

Princeton: Reinard, lf; Muldreyer, cf; Knell,ss; Bennett, rf; Borger, 1b; Mettler, 3b; Bierhols, 2b; Morse, lf; Purnell, c.

COLLINS ATTENDS ROCKNE FUNERAL

Chuck Collins, head football coach at the University, was among former Notre Dame football players to attend funeral services Saturday for the late Coach Knute Rockne.

Collins was on his way back to Chapel Hill from a trip to Illinois when he learned of the death of Rockne. He immediately turned around and headed toward the west again, arriving at South Bend Friday.

Collins, who became head coach at Carolina in 1926, played end on Rockne's immortal team of 1924, being one of the seven mules who rode the crest of victory to a national championship with the famed four horsemen—Stuhldreher, Miller, Crowley and Leyden. Collins was an ardent admirer of the great Rockne. He was the first to implant the Notre Dame system in North Carolina.

Reporters

The following reporters will be required to report to George Wilson in the office of the Tar Heel this afternoon between the hours of one-thirty and two-thirty for the purpose of having their notebooks corrected: Frank Hawley, Tom Broughton, Tom Blackwell, and Ed Spruill.

Intramural News

All intramural tennis matches scheduled for today were postponed on account of rain.

Then again, perhaps those Dartmouth seniors who stole the ballot box on class election day were merely trying to show the New York and Chicago politicians a trick or two.

Here And There

By Jack Bessen

Early indications point to William and Mary, Washington and Lee, and Maryland as the cream of the crop of southern baseball . . . William and Mary has had unusual success, especially against the northern teams, the Princeton Tigers and Dartmouth having bowed to the Indians so far . . . Old Town, Maine, boasts of the most unusual baseball team in the history of the game—an entirely southpaw team. Every man bats and throws from the wrong side. There have been teams composed entirely of girls and other freaks, but an all-southpaw team takes the cake . . . When they make a safe hit, they have to start off with the left foot . . . Of the forty-nine college players in the major leagues twenty-eight claim southern schools as their alma mater. Georgia Tech and Auburn lead the field with three each, while Georgia, Mississippi, Illinois, Texas, and Michigan have sent two men up. Carolina has only one listed . . . Princeton defeated Harvard 6-3 in a rugby game last Saturday which was the first game played between the two schools since they broks off in 1926 . . . Chalk up one for the Tigers . . . The Navy fencing team, although they had the poorest record of all the Navy teams, will get the highest athletic award—an N with a star. The fencing team beat the army in the foils and saber matches and so merited the additional award . . . The largest crowd in the history of hockey saw the play-off match between the Canadians of Montreal and the Chicago Blackhawks Sunday. Over 19,000 persons saw the contest . . . Virginia's lacrosse team took the count against the Georgia club, 14-0 . . . A new novelty will be installed for the 1932 Olympics to be held in Los Angeles. An international village will be built to provide for the comfort of the visiting athletes. The village will be so designed that the athletes from each country will be housed in their native setting . . . Movies in their native tongue will be shown, separate telephone centrals, and even separate banking facilities. The village will disappear soon after the close of the games on August 14 . . . Although they have been eliminated from the Stanley Cup play-offs, the New York Rangers will not close their season; instead they will go on a barnstorming tour of the West Coast, being scheduled to play games in British Columbia and California . . . Fearing misunderstanding for next year's football game, the Navy rejected Princeton's proposal to discontinue scouting for next fall . . . All of which goes to make the non-scouting plan all the more complexed . . . .

Rifle Team

The University Rifle Club will meet in the basement of Alumni building tonight at seven o'clock for the purpose of re-organization and the election of officers. Meets with nearby colleges are being arranged and practice on the outdoor range will begin next week. No initiation fee will be charged. Every one interested in shooting is invited to attend.

Game Postponed

The Easter Day baseball game scheduled between Davidson and Carolina was called off yesterday because of rain. The game was to have been played in Winston-Salem.

BROWN LEADING TRACK SCORING

Broad Jump and Weight Performer Has Individual Scoring Record of 23 Points.

HIGBY LEADS FRESHMEN

Varsity Has Record of 187 Points Scored as Against 65 for Opponents.

With two meets of the 1931 track season history completed, Theron Brown leads the team in individual scoring with twenty-three points. Brown, star performer in the broad jump and all three weight events, scored nine points against N. C. State here Saturday to remain seven points ahead of Slusser, his closest rival.

Slusser garnered two first places in the 100 yard dash and low hurdles for ten points against State and cut one point from Brown's lead. Brodie Arnold and George Bagby come next to Slusser with fourteen points each. Arnold has scored seven points in each meet, tying Ruble in the pole vault twice and getting two seconds in the broad jump. Bagby tied Red Hamlet in the high jump to score only four points in the first meet of the season, but he stepped out against the Wolfpack and took firsts in the high jump and broad jump to gather ten points and tie for high score honors for the day. Bagby was seeing his first experience in the broad jump, but the veteran went 20 feet 10 inches to cop first place in his first effort. In addition to this, Bagby cleared the bar at five feet ten and one-half inches in the high jump to take five more points in this event.

Following Arnold and Bagby are Ken Marland and Archie Davis with twelve points each. Marland scored two second places, in the 100 and 440, against State to add to his first in the 100 and third in the 220 made against Presbyterian College. Davis took first place in the high hurdles and second in the lows Saturday to account for eight points and place him among the leading scorers.

Other leading scorers are Smith, Jones, and Baucom with ten points and Weil, Dameron, and Ruble with eight each. Mark Jones, running only in the one mile, and Cliff Baucom, running only in the two mile, have both taken firsts in each of their races this season. Jones cut seven seconds off his previous week's mark Saturday to take the mile in 4:40.4.

Lionel Weil turned in the best performance of the day Saturday when he stepped the quarter mile event in 50.6 seconds over the soggy track. Brodie Arnold and Ray Ruble turned in their usual high class performance in winning the pole vault against the Techmen at a height of twelve feet six inches.

Leading the freshmen scorers with 35 points scored in three meets is Floyd Higby. Higby was again the leading point gainer against the Wolflets, scoring thirteen points with a second in the 100 yard dash and first places in the broad jump and 440. Following Higby is Bunny Goodwin who gathered ten points against State to run his total for the season up to twenty-six. Horney is next to Goodwin with twenty-one points while Ashkenas trails Horney by one point. Weisker and Mullis are tied for fifth place with seventeen points. Weisker did his heavy scoring against State, counting ten points with first places in the 100 and 220 yard dashes.

The varsity has scored 187 points in two meets this year while holding their opponents to 65, and the freshmen, competing in three meets, have scored 297½ against their opponents 71½.

Athletics Have Best Chance To Capture American League Honors, Sports Writer Avers

Stellar Hurling Staff Gives Philadelphia Combination Edge Over Other Clubs; New York and Washington Rated to Come in at Second and Third Posts.

Ed. Note: This is a first of a series of articles on the 1931 baseball season written by Jack Bessen, assistant-sports editor of the Daily Tar Heel staff. The writer has picked the likely league winners in the American league and will follow up his selection next week with a similar article on the National league.

1. Philadelphia	5. Detroit
2. New York	6. Chicago
3. Washington	7. Boston
4. Cleveland	8. St. Louis

1. Philadelphia

Everything considered, the Philadelphia Athletics are conceded the best chance to repeat last year's victory in the American league race. The pitching staff, composed of "Lefty" Grove, George Earnshaw, Rube Walberg, Ed Rommel, Earnie Shores, and Lee Mahaffey, is too experienced and strong for the other teams to overhaul. In addition Connie Mack boasts of the hardest hitting team in the junior circuit.

Their infield also is well set. With Foxx, Bishop, Boley, and Dykes on the front line, Mack will have Williams, McNair, Higgins, and Todt in reserve.

Al Simmons, Mule Haas, and Bing Miller will patrol the gardens, and if they slip, there will be Jimmy Moore, Bob Johnson, and Roger Cramer to throw in the beach.

2. New York

If the Yankees had a pitching staff, they might be picked to win—but they haven't. If they develop in this department, they will spread confusion all along the American league front, for they certainly have enough hitting power to carry them to victory.

The Yankees have Babe Ruth, Lou Gehrig, and a new manager, Joe McCarthy, ex-boss of the Chicago Cubs. It is a team of great possibilities chiefly because of its great hitting power and the inspiring qualities of Joe McCarthy.

Last year the Yankees finished third, but ought to be higher up in the standings this year. The New York team will probably drive more runs over the plate than any other team but infield weaknesses coupled with a weak hurling staff will probably keep them out of the World Series.

There will not be many changes in the team this year. Ruth will play right field, Earl Combs will be at his old post in center, and the left field assignment will be divided among Cooke, Hoag, and Byrd.

Gehrig of course will play the initial bag, and Lary will be at short. If Ben Chapman comes through at third, Tony Lazzeri will hold down the keystone sack. If not Lazzeri will be stationed at third.

Bill Dickey, second ranking catcher to Cochrane in the junior circuit, will be first string receiver, assisted by Cy Perkins, veteran secured from Philadelphia last year.

3. Washington

Although Washington finished so high last season, experts are doubting their ability to come through this year. They have a young team, but many think that their fine showing last year was just a flash in the pan. Walter Johnson will have a .300 hitting infield, composed of Judge or Kuhel at first, and Myer, Cronin, and Bluege. In addition to their hitting, this outfit stacks up as a fine defensive unit.

Their main strength is in the outfield, where three fine hitters will be patrolling the last defensive posts—Sam Rice, Max West, and Heinie Manush.

The first string pitching staff will be: Marberry, Crowder, Hadley, Sam Jones, and Brown. In reserve there will be Bob Burke, Lynn Griffith, and Walter Tauscher.

4. Cleveland

The Indians have a fast, hard hitting outfield, a one sided infield and two dandy pitchers. With that repertoire, little hope is held for them to finish higher than fourth place.

Here is another club with an undependable pitching staff. After Wes Ferrell and Clint Brown have worked, Manager Peckinpaugh will have to take a chance on Willis Hudlin, Miller, and Shoffner.

The outfield will be well taken care of by Falk, Porter, and Averill.

If the right side of the infield was as capable as the left, the Indians could be counted on to do things in the race, but short and third base are notoriously weak. At first, the Indians will have Dick Morgan, the benedict holdout, and at second will be Johnny Hodapp. Goldman will probably play short, and Burnett will be at third.

5. Detroit

The Detroit Tigers are full of enthusiasm but that's about all. Last year they finished fifth, and indications seem to point that that will be as high as they will go this year.

Their pitching staff is uncertain, and they are incapable of producing the hitting power of the Yankees and A's.

The infield will line up with Alexander, Gehringer, Akers, and McManus. The outfield will sport Funk, Stone, and Johnson.

Manager Bucky Harris will have to select his first string mound corps from Waite Hoyt, George Uhle, Earl Whitehill, Vic Sorrell, and Tom Bridges.

Wally Schang will probably handle the first string catching assignment with Hayworth in reserve.

6. Chicago

Last season the White Sox finished seventh but this year ought to jump to sixth position. They should get better pitching for one thing; their catching staff has been strengthened by the acquisition of Tate from Washington, and the outfield is improved.

The mound staff is built around Ted Lyons, one of the decade's greatest right handers. Al Thomas and Red Faber will complete the nucleus of the staff. Add to these Garland Braxton, Hal McKain, and Pat Caraway, and you have a pretty good pitching staff.

Moe Berg and Butch Henline will assist Tate in the catching.

The infield, while experienced, has little hitting power. Lou Blue, a fine hitter recently acquired from St. Louis, will perform at first base. Chalmer Cissel will hold down second. Luke Appling, Auburn alumnus, will start at short, and Willie Kamm will hold down third.

The outfield will consist of Reynolds, Jolley, and Simons.

7. Boston

General all around improvement is the only hope of the lowly Red Sox to finish out of the cellar. Perhaps if they do, a new era will dawn on the Hub City. So far, the Red Sox have been consistent—always finishing in the cellar, but the new manager, Shano Collins, might

SPRING FOOTBALL TRAINING BANNED BY 16 COLLEGES

Survey of 25 Pennsylvania Institutions Shows Decrease of Pre-Season Practices.

SHORT PERIODS PLANNED

Nine Also Plan Curtailed Program for Spring Drills; Not Required in Any Schools.

Harkening to the sentiment against football over- emphasis, Pennsylvania colleges have taken a decided stand against spring gridiron practice, a survey of 25 institutions conducted by the Penn State Collegian reveals. Sixteen colleges have entirely abandoned the early drills, while the remaining nine conduct spring practice in a curtailed form.

Pennsylvania, Carnegie Tech and Lafayette are three of the largest institutions who have definitely decided to eliminate from their athletic programs football playing in the spring. Other colleges who will not hold practice until next fall are: Allegheny, Drexel, Geneva, Gettysburg, Grove City, Haverford, Lebanon Valley, Swarthmore, Susquehanna, Thiel, Ursinus, Waynesburg and Westminster.

Spring football practice will not be actually required at any college in the state of Pennsylvania, the questionnaire reveals. In other words, if a varsity player does not turn out, his chances for making the first team in the fall will not be materially affected. In no case will the practice interfere with regular spring sports.

INNOVATIONS ARE PLANNED IN THIS YEAR'S ANNUAL

"Vanity Fair" Section Will Be Replaced by Several New Departments.

Simplicity and detail are the two main factors stressed in the 1931 edition of the Yackety-Yack which will appear some time during the latter part of next month, Editor-in-Chief Clyde Dunn stated yesterday. He went on to say that this year's issue would be more in the form of a book than the usual type of college annual.

The cover of the year-book will be made of dark red buckram with a large University seal in the lower right hand corner, while the back is to be of smooth white buckram.

There will be no Vanity Fair section in this year's number, but instead the editor is adding several other new divisions. Some of the new departments are an alumni section arranged by J. Maryon Saunders, a past history of the University by Dr. R. D. W .Connor, and a space for the University administration personnel. In place of the usual group of campus views in the front of the book, these pictures, almost doubled in number, this year will be scattered throughout the annual.

Due to the fact that the big majority of the year books are kept at home in the student's libraries, the editor thought it a good idea to make the appearance of the book as attractive as possible. To carry out this plan he has secured William Steene to make etchings for the first page of each division.

GUEST ORGANIST UNABLE TO PLAY IN RECITAL HERE

The guest organ recital at which Edwin Steckel, organist of the First Presbyterian Church of Charlotte was scheduled to play has been indefinitely postponed at the advice of Mr. Steckel's doctor. Mr. Steckel is a member of the summer school music faculty of the University and there is some doubt as to whether he will be able to discharge his duties in this capacity.

The next recital will be given the week of May 5 when Professor Isaac Battin of Meredith College will perform at the organ. Miss Gault, head of the piano department at the same institution, will accompany the professor on the piano.

Tomorrow afternoon at four o'clock there will be a piano and organ recital held in the music auditorium. The concert will be played by the following students of the University: Miss Helen Eubanks, Miss Geneva Anderson, Harold Cone, Harry Lee Knox, Thomas Teer, and James Pfhol.

The Vesper concert of April 19 at which Professor Kennedy was scheduled to play an organ program has been changed and Professor T. Smith McCorkle will render a violin solo instead.

Saunders to Speak

J. Maryon Saunders, secretary of the Alumni Association will speak to the freshmen in chapel this morning.

Mechanical Engineers

The first meeting of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers of the spring quarter will take place to-night in 206 Phillips hall at seven-fifteen o'clock. Mr. N. P. Bailey will give a talk on a phase of aeronautics. The business part of the program will consist of the election of officers. Every mechanical engineering student is urged to be present.

Commerce Seniors

Dean D. D. Carroll requests that all seniors in the school of commerce and all students majoring in economics, who are interested in taking a comprehensive examination this spring, meet him in 103 Bingham hall at chapel hour this morning.

Yackety Yack Meeting

There will be an important meeting of the Yackety-Yack business staff this afternoon at 2 o'clock. All members must be present.

Phi Beta Kappa Members

All active members of Phi Beta Kappa will meet promptly at 8 o'clock Thursday, April 9, on the second floor of the Y. M. C. A. Very important business must be transacted.

Lightning Created In Electrical Lab

It used to be that lightning was regarded as an evil omen and in past centuries men regarded it as some mysterious demonstration of the ill will of the gods, something that was terrible, fearful and beyond the power of human ingenuity to control.

Then they began to take a calmer view of it, to make observations, and they found that it came with storms and that it flashed from cloud to cloud or from a cloud to the earth. Benjamin Franklin reached for it with a kite string, brought it to earth and put it in a bottle. It was nothing but high power electricity.

Creating lightning has become a daily routine with engineers of the Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company at the high voltage laboratory of the company, a part of the Trafford City Works. By an arrangement of equipment, these men have built up 3,000,000 volts of electrical energy, and lightning is produced by causing this voltage to jump through space from one point to another.

This tremendous voltage is a new thing and in its practical applications it is used for testing various types of material and equipment, particularly insulation. Westinghouse engineers explain that even higher voltages could be developed in exactly the same way. For instance 5,000,000 volts could be produced by the same process but such a current would leap a distance of 30 feet to the roof or side walls of the huge laboratory. Of course this would endanger everyone in the building, and all of the expensive equipment in it, so it is not done.

But with engineers everything is relative, mathematically proportionate, so the men of Westinghouse have the facilities for conducting some very valuable investigations at the high voltage laboratory. The results of these tests and experiments indicate the type of insulation required for power lines across the country.

FORTY SCHOOLS WIN IN DEBATES

Teams That Won Both Sides to Participate in Finals at Chapel Hill.

Forty high schools have been reported to Secretary E. R. Rankin as winning both sides of their triangular debates in the North Carolina high school debating contest. These forty schools, together with several which have not yet reported their victories, will send their representatives to Chapel Hill April 16 and 17 to compete in the final contest for the Aycock cup.

Carolina students will serve as officers in the preliminaries, with members of the faculty acting as judges in both the preliminaries and finals. The large number of girl representatives of the teams will be furnished rooming accomodations in Chapel Hill homes.

According to reports received by Secretary Rankin, a great deal of interest was aroused by the triangular debates, and indications point to a successful final contest here. The query, a very popular question this year, is: Resolved: That the Philippines should be granted immediate independence.

High school track and tennis athletes will also be in Chapel Hill April 16 and 17 for the track meet and tennis tournament.

Schools who won both sides of their triangular debates are:

Altimahaw-Ossipee, Aurelian Springs, Benson, Bessemer, Bessemer City, Bethel, Black Creek, Copeland, Denton, Fountain, Fruitland Institute, Gibson, Glen Alpine, Goldsboro, Henrietta-Carolan, Hudson, Lumberton, Manteo, Moncure, Morven, Newport, Old Town, Pantego, Reems Creek, Rockingham, Roseboro, Rural Hall, Rutherfordton-Spindale, Salisbury, Southport, Tarboro, Thomasville, Trenton, Wakelon, Wilton, Windsor, Winston-Salem, Zeb Vance, Central, and Mountain Park.

CAROLINA RANKS LOW IN RETURNS OF MEDICAL TEST

Grades have recently been received from the American Medical Association for those students who took the scholastic aptitude test for medical schools here about five weeks ago.

The grades were given in terms of percentage rating. According to this plan, all the names of the students in the United States who took these tests were arranged according to the grades received. Then these are divided into one hundred equal groups, labeled ninty-nine, ninty-eight, etc., the last group being zero. A F. Toole, University student, was among those in the highest group. Six Carolina men were rated ninety or better, and thirty-five, fifty or better.

As compared to the country at large, the seventy-nine University men who took the exam were below average. That, however, was quite true in the southern states as a whole, and in some of the western states. The highest averages were found in the northern and middle western states.

Dean J. M. Bell stated that a goodly number of Carolina students who were far from being ready to enter the medical school entered these tests. He further said that there is still some doubt in the mind of educators regarding the certainty of the tests. Frequently students who make good grades in their university work, fall down on these quizzes, and vice versa.

These grades serve as an index, but are not the only thing necessary to discover a student's aptibility.

Thirteen Speakers Secured To Appear Before Institute

Up to date thirteen of the invited speakers have accepted definitely invitations to speak before the Human Relations Institute to be held May 3.

Dr. W. C. Jackson, vice president of North Carolina College for Women, Dr. Carl Taylor, dean of the graduate school of North Carolina State College; Mr. E. G. Wilson, industrial field secretary of the south east division of the National Council of the Y. M. C. A., Mr. N. C. Newbold, director of the department of negro education of the North Carolina Education Department, will speak before the institute and will lead the seminars.

Dr. James Brown Scott, an authority on international law, and executive head of the Carnegie Endowment for the furthering of international peace, Daniel Willard, president of the Baltimore and Ohio railway system, and Dr. John Van Antwerp MacMurray, of Johns Hopkins University, have been extended invitations to speak before the institute and answers from these are expected by Monday.

Mordecai Wyatt Brown, president of Howard University at Washington, D. C., and considered by many to be America's leading colored orator, has accepted an invitation to deliver a formal address before the institute and is scheduled to speak before two or more seminars.

Senator Borah was invited to speak but was unable to come as he had arranged to speak in the West.

Democratic Victory Predicted By Raskob

John J. Raskob, chairman of the Democratic party, has said that the Democrats will have a fine chance to win the presidency in 1932, but they must take a "courageous stand" on prohibition, although he declined to express his personal opinion of prohibition. "The party should also provide strong leadership that will restore sanity in the government," said Mr. Raskob.

The cost of prohibition to the American people is estimated by the Democratic party chairman to be three billion dollars annually, although the cost of the liquor business proper is only three million, racketeering being the main cost. "The Republican party will probably sieze on some irrelevant thing, particularly if the Democratic party makes a courageous stand," stated Raskob, when asked what he thought of efforts to make a national issue of Tammany Hall in 1932. In the interview the national chairman would not express his opinion of the individual candidates for his party's nomination to the presidency.

nasium will probably be the scene of these events. The committee has not set the dates yet. Last quarter the first dance took place January 17, the second on February 7, and the third February 28.

No definite decision has yet been arrived at by the co-eds as to the date for the dance they will give in the spring quarter. This will be the third such dance they have given this year, the first having taken place in the latter part of October, and the second on February 6.

The only dances given under the auspices of the German club will be the Finals, June 9, 10, 11. These will take place in the gymnasium and it is very probable that Guy Lombardo and his orchestra will play for this set. This is the culmination of the year's social functions. It will be held in the Tin Can. The finals are always the most elaborate affairs of the year at Carolina and, in fact, one of the season's outstanding social events in the state.

During the fall, the German club gave a set of five dances Friday and Saturday November 28 and 29. Weidemeyer's orchestra of Huntington, West Virginia, played. The corresponding set of Mid-Winter dances were held Friday and Saturday, February 13 and 14. with Paul Graham's orchestra playing.

The eighth and ninth of May are the dates for the May Frolic, a set of dances given by a group of seven fraternities on the campus. This is an annual affair staged by these fraternity groups: Delta Kappa Epsilon, Beta Theta Pi, Zeta Psi, Sigma Chi, Sigma Nu, Sigma Alpha Epsilon, and Kappa Sigma.

Last year the May Frolic was held in Bynum gymnasium during week-end of May 2 and 3. The orchestra furnishing the music for the set was Jelly Leftwich and his university club band. This year the event will probably be in the Tin Can. Emerson Gill's orchestra will furnish the music.

Arthur Sickles is the chairman of the committee in charge of the dance. Serving with him on this group are: Dail Holderness, Delta Kappa Epsilon; Buck Snow, Zeta Psi; Willis Henderson, Sigma Nu; Tom Follin, Beta Theta Pi; John Jemison, Sigma Alpha Epsilon; Clyde Dunn, Kappa Sigma.

At the May Frolic's inauguration last year as an annual affair a large and scintillating crowd was present.

Athletics Have Best Chance For League Honors, Says Scribe drive them into seventh place.

If the Boston outfit had any batting punch, they would finish in the first division, for they really have a great pitching staff and a good defensive club, but what good is pitching when the hurlers don't get support?

Morris, Moore, MacFayden, Lissenbee, Gaston, and Russell make up the best pitching staff in the circuit.

The infield will show Bob Sweeney at first, Bob Reeves at second, Hal Rhyne and Jack Rothrock, completing the infield. With the exception of Rothrock, all of the infield are very weak batsmen.

In the outfield will be Earl Webb, a fair slugger, Tom Oliver, and Gene Rye, the "half pint" slugger from Waco.

8. St. Louis

It was only the presence of Boston that has many times kept St. Louis from occupying the cellar position of the league race, but now that the Red Sox seem destined to go places, at least one place, nothing can be done but to relegate the Browns to eighth place.

The team is in the throes of a minor league reconstruction scale. Only two infield and outfield regulars remain, Melillo at second, Kress at third, Schulte in center field, and Goose Goslin in left.

The pitchers will be chosen from Rip Collins, Dick Coffman, Chad Kimsey, and Roland Stiles a very weak staff.

Dick Ferrell will handle the burden of the catching, assisted by Jack Crouch.

UNIVERSITY PRESS WILL ISSUE TWO BOOKS IN JUNE

The University Press will issue two books after the close of the academic term.

The first is Strike Injunctions in the New South, by Duane McCracken, which is case studies of the effects of injunctions in North Carolina, Elizabethton, Tennessee, and Danville, Virginia.

The other is Homicide in the United States, by H. C. Brearly. This book is a report of a series of original investigations into the extent and causes of homicide in the United States, the first study of its kind to be published in this country. Both will be issued June 27.

SOCIAL SERVICE DELEGATES HEAR DR. SCHWENNING

Local Professor Addresses Goldsboro Conference on Unemployment Responsibility.

Opening yesterday morning in Goldsboro, the North Carolina Social Service Conference, which is being attended by a delegation of faculty men and students from the University, was addressed by Dr. G. T. Schwenning, associate professor of business administration here. His topic, an unusually timely one, was "Industry's Responsibility for Unemployment."

Although unemployment can not be completely avoided, it is amenable to control. Dr. Schwenning told his audience. The problem may be solved, he declared, by the "will to regularize business operations . . . Unemployment can be greatly reduced, if not completely avoided, by the stabilization of business."

After outlining the main obstacles in the way of the solution of the problem, the speaker offered plans and methods towards the attainment of that end. Among these eighteen suggestions may be noted forecasting and planning, manufacturing for stock, producing for an established market, vertical integration, broader training of employees, satisfactory industrial relations, the use of an elastic work day or week, the use of research, and the application of scientific principles of

CAMERON SPEAKS TO KIWANIS CLUB

Rayon To Be Made Cheaper as Result of Chemistry Professor's Experiments.

Dr. Frank K. Cameron, professor of chemistry at the University, addressed the Kiwanis club of Chapel Hill last night. He was the regular speaker for the weekly supper meeting at the Baptist church.

Dr. Cameron has recently become very greatly interested in the development of a new industry from cotton, utilizing the entire plant except the roots in the production of rayon. He has been aided in this work by Nicholas W. Dockery, one of his students.

Results obtained after extensive experimentation indicate that the material for the manufacture of rayon can be supplied at the cost of slightly more than one-twentieth of that of the present methods of production.

Dr. Cameron goes on to say that cotton has probably more cellulose than any other plant, and since this is the base of the material of which rayon is made it is the most important plant to this industry. He advocates new methods of cultivation and production of the cotton plant itself. Instead of growing cotton as it is done at present he suggests that it be raised in much the same manner that wheat and hay is now cultivated, using mowers and harvesting machines to cut the plant.

Wood pulp, the product chiefly used in the manufacture of rayon, is at present more expensive than cotton, and the new plans of cultivation which Dr. Cameron advises to be adopted should make this commodity less expensive.

Graham Memorial Will Be Fit Monument For Great President

For eleven years the bare shell of Graham Memorial has stood on the campus, bringing forth remarks from almost three generations of students as to the inefficiency of the University authorities in not completing the edifice.

Recently an unknown donor contributed a sum of money sufficient to provide for the finishing of the memorial to one of the University's greatest men, Edward K. Graham. Since then workmen have been busily engaged in clearing out the rubbish accumulated there in eleven years and in completing both the interior and exterior.

The large ballroom in the center of the building, rightfully called the most beautiful room south of Washington, is paneled in beautiful golden oak and has a fine parquet floor ideally suited for the swankiest of Junior Proms or Senior Balls. From the thick oak beams of the ceiling hang bronze chandeliers and at just the right intervals along the walls are placed small shaded lamps. At each end of the large room is a wide brick fireplace.

The second floor of Graham Memorial will be made into small rooms which are to be utilized according as a committee, to be appointed for this purpose soon, sees fit. It is possible, however, that the offices of the campus publications will be situated in these rooms. Besides for bowling alleys it has as yet not been decided as to what other use will be made of the basement.

The thick limestone columns which are to make up the portico of the building, are now being set in place by sections. There are four sections to every column, each of which weighs three tons.

Space has been left on both sides and in the rear of the structure so that wings may be added at a later time if necessary. The building is scheduled to be completed by June 1.

It is safe to say that when ready for occupancy the building will be a memorial worthy of the man for whom it is named and the most beautiful student union in the South if not the nation.

SAUNDERS TELLS OF GREAT ALUMNI

Alumni Secretary Speaks To Freshmen of University's Famous Graduates.

J. Maryon Saunders, secretary of the Alumni Association spoke to the freshmen in chapel yesterday morning on the general organization of the University Alumni Association.

"The freshmen class," stated Saunders, "is sharing with the fourteen thousand living alumni the privileges and pleasures enjoyed by the Association." The Alumni Secretary said that all the freshmen should be members of the Association after graduating.

The speaker mentioned the prominent Alumni in the state and nation. Among these were James K. Polk, who was president of the United States, and Rufus King once vice president. He called attention to the fact that seven cabinet members, nine senators, and forty-one congressmen were graduates of the University. Prominent in state government, the University has turned out thirteen of its governors, the founder of the public schools, builder of the state railroads, fifteen of the twenty-five members of the supreme court, the present governor, past and present lieutenant governors, the state health officer, chairman of the state highway commission. One fourth of the doctors of the state and 1500 prominent lawyears have also received their degrees at Carolina. Among the college presidents from Carolina are President Graham, the presidents of the University of Virginia, Wake Forest, North Carolina College for Women, Greensboro College for Women, Converse College, Davenport College, Appalachian Training School and Cleveland College.

Quoting former President Edward Kidder Graham, Saunders pointed out the four qualities which constitute a leader among men: learning to do a workman-like job; maintenance of a lively spirit of insistent inquiery; possession of qualities which make a true gentleman; and college loyalty.

SCIENTIFIC BODY PLANS LECTURES

Local Sigma Xi Chapter Secures Pennsylvania Pharmacologist As Lecturer.

For some time it has been the custom of the local chapter of the Sigma Xi society to invite some scholar, eminent in scientific investigation, to deliver a series of two lectures before the local branch some time in March or April. These addresses, known as the Sigma Xi lectures, have always been attended by local faculty members and students as well as by persons from other parts of the state.

The society has secured for this year's lecturer Dr. Alfred N. Richards, head of the department of pharmacology at the University of Pennsylvania, and at present visiting professor at Harvard. The lectures will be delivered April 27 and 28 at eight-thirty in room 206 of Phillips hall.

The lectures will be on the general subject of the physiology of the kidney, the specific titles being, (1) The function of the glomerulus, and (2) The functions of the renal tubule. Dr. Richards is considered one of the most distinguished pharmacologists in the United States. His researches on kidney function have been of such far-reaching importance that he was elected to the National Academy of Sciences. His lectures should be of interest not only to the scientifically minded, but to others as well.

During his stay in Chapel Hill, Dr. Richards will be the guest of Dr. William de B. MacNider, who is also a nationally known authority on the kidney and kidney functions.

Reporters

The following reporters will be required to report to George Wilson in the office of the Tar Heel this afternoon between the hours of one-thirty and two for the purpose of having their notebooks checked: Bob Woerner, W. E. Davis, Phil Alston, and Tom Broughton.

PLAYMAKERS ARE UNABLE TO MAKE TRIP THIS SPRING

Regular State Tour Is Abandoned Due to Lack of Guarantees.

The Carolina Playmakers have definitely abandoned the idea of making a tour this spring, according to an announcement made yesterday. The group have been unable to secure guarantees for the trip, which practically prohibits any tour this year.

The spring tour has been made for five years, beginning in 1926, when the Playmakers played in towns throughout the state. The group looked forward to a trip this year particularly, due to the fact that lack of guarantees had made proposed fall and winter tours unfeasible.

Until this year, the Playmakers have made three trips each year. These consist of a northern, southern, and western tour, the northern trip being taken in the fall, the southern in the winter, and the western in the spring.

For three consecutive years they have played in New York City. In 1929, then went as far as Boston, where they were received by Governor Frank Allen at the Massachusetts State House. In Boston, the Playmakers presented their bill for two successive nights in the Fine Arts Theatre. This was one of the longest trips ever made by the Playmakers. However, in 1928, they went to New Haven to play in Professor Baker's theatre at Yale.

The first northern tour was made in 1926, when they went to Washington and were received by President Coolidge at the White House. The following year, the Playmakers journeyed to New York City and to Plainfield, New Jersey. Since 1927, they have played annually in the MacMillan Academic Theatre of Columbia University.

Angna Enters Presentation Ends Student Entertainment Program

By W. R. Woerner

The entertainment committee ended its series of five programs last night when Miss Angna Enters presented her fantastic and original group of dance numbers.

The programs this year have been well attended and the audiences who heard and saw the various performances seemed to enjoy them to the fullest. It is estimated that between forty and forty-five hundred people saw the five presentations. No definite check up was made to see if these figures were correct but the chairman of the committee gave this estimation.

The best attended and probably the most noteworthy of the group was the first entertainment, offered by Senorita Carola Goya. Her authenic folk dances of the Spanish people as well as those numbers of her own origination were greatly applauded and were appreciated. Presentations of this nature are unusual and the people of Chapel Hill as well as the students in the University turned out en masse to witness the fine exhibition of Spanish dancing and art.

Following this first feature there was the lecturer and humorist, Bruce Bairnsfather. The English cartoonist and adventurer offered one of the many of his fine lectures, "Old Bill and Me." This character, "Old Bill," was the hero in the comic strip which was known by that name. The adventures of the funny old fellow were accurately depicted as Bairnsfather was familiar with the war through his own personal experiences. At his performance the house was not as crowded as it had been for Miss Goya since lecturers rarely attract the audiences that turn out to see something more entertaining.

Gay MacLaren, dramatic exponent deluxe, was the next entertainer on the series, appearing in the winter quarter. She offered Helena's Boys, a modern comedy in the lighter vein. She is unusual in that she played all of the roles herself and her characterizations were delightful as well as accurate. Every little gesture and movement was faithfully depicted as she had seen it performed by an entire company. Her art was not only in memorizing every line and action of the play but in putting before the audience the play as

Debaters Lose To Pennsylvania Team

Meeting for the first time since 1921, the University of Pennsylvania debating team won a close audience's decision from the University of North Carolina's debaters here last night in a forensic contest on the question, "Resolved: That the Nations of the World Should Adopt a Policy of Free Trade."

J. W. Slaughter of Durham upheld the negative side for Carolina, while the University of Pennsylvania was represented by Harry Torrington and Gilbert Oswald on the affirmative.

This contest was one of a number of intersectional debates in which the Carolina debaters will engage during the remainder of the spring quarter. Professor W. A. Olsen of the English department presided.

National Medical Group Honors Nine

Among nine North Carolinians who were made fellows of the American College of Physicians at a special convention ceremony in Baltimore, Maryland, recently, were Dr. Isaac Hall Manning, dean of the school of medicine at the University, Dr. William Banks Dewar of Raleigh, and Dr. William Hopton Smith of Goldsboro. All these men are alumni of the University.

The other North Carolinians sharing this honor were Dr. Harold Lindsay Amos, Durham; Dr. Samuel Moffett Bittinger, Sanatorium; Dr. Alva Brown Craddock and Dr. Samuel Leslie Crow of Asheville; Dr. Robert Lee Felts, Durham; and Dr. Karl Schaffle, Asheville.

House Goes to Goldsboro

Robert B. House, executive secretary of the Unversity, left early yesterday afternoon for Goldsboro, where he will speak at a library breakfast before the North Carolina Conference for Social Service. Miss Ann Pierce of the Charlotte public library, will preside at this informal gathering.

ELECTION REFORM IS ATTEMPTED BY LAW ASSOCIATION

Measure to Abolish Frame-ups Is Passed by Students in Special Meeting.

The members of the law school association, in a special called meeting yesterday morning at chapel period, voted to do away with the present plan of "frame-ups" in the law school elections. Some of the outstanding political leaders on the campus, who are members of the legal association, failed take any stand against the passage of this motion, and it was passed with no trouble whatsoever.

Another motion to the effect that the personal campaigning for the separate candidates be also abolished, failed to receive the favor of the group partially because of a long speech by Paul Boucher.

J. A. Williams, chairman of the committee in charge of securing Carr building for the use of law school students, gave a short talk stating that only thirty-seven of the necessary sixty students had signed petitions stating their desire to use the renovated building for the sole use of the law school members. It is the plan at present to turn the new Carr building into something in the order of a law club dormitory. Before the University administration will allow this change, it is necessary that sixty students sign contracts for rooms in the renovated hall.

Following these proposals, a nominating committee composed of five third-year men was appointed to name candidates for the election which is to take place this morning at chapel period. Martin Kellogg, Wex Malone, Leon Felshin, W. C. Parker, E. A. Humphrey compose the committee.

PLAYMAKER BILL FULL OF VARIETY

Four Original Plays Will Be Presented By Local Dramatic Group.

The Carolina Playmakers will present their twenty-eighth bill of original plays, tomorrow, Friday, and Saturday nights, when a group of four plays will be given each night in the Playmakers Theatre.

The first play, Blue Remembered Hills, was written by Ted Herman, and is concerned with college life, centering around two students who wish to keep their adolescence. In the cast are Bob Langford, James Queen, William Harris, Sam Peace, and Robert Reid. The play is directed by Sam Selden.

A Very Pale Pink Angel, written by Ellen Stewart, is a modern comedy, and has a cast composed of Ellen Stewart, Charles Keener, and Ralph Westerman. This play is also directed by Sam Selden.

Irene Fussler's comedy of Carolina fisher folk, Ever' Snitch, has a cast composed of: Marion Tatum, Muriel Wolfe, Donald Wood, Evans Vaughn, and Bobby Koch. Professor F. S. Koch is the director of this play.

Always a Bettin' Man, written by Tom Loy, is the fourth play. In the cast are Charles Ellege and the author. Pendle-

Forecasting the 1932 Campaign

Postmaster General Brown returns from the South and predicts the renomination by acclamation of President Hoover by the Republican national convention. Political forecasters say that Governor Franklin Roosevelt has the inside track for the Democratic nomination. The position of each on major questions is well known, although Mr. Hoover remains strangely silent on prohibition. With President Hoover and Governor Roosevelt the candidates, the issues well drawn except for prohibition and political forecasters confident of the vote of each state it should be an easy matter to figure the results of the 1932 campaign.

Unfortunately states do not always vote as predicted, and candidates are not nominated as forecast. Granting Mr. Hoover the Republican nomination as it is well nigh impossible to defeat a president for renomination, the Democrats are far from being agreed on Governor Roosevelt. Outstanding among the Democratic prospects are Al Smith, Governor Roosevelt, and Owen D. Young. The New York Governor draws strongly from the anti-public utility group. He is well liked in the South and his prohibition stand hasn't injured him in dry territory. Al Smith is still the greatest drawing card the Democrats have possessed since the days of Jackson and he retains much of his popularity with the masses. Mr. Young confines his efforts to business and is considered by most politicians as a compromise candidate, although his support of the Veterans loan measure is indicative of political foresight. Anything might happen when the Democrats representing Southern interests and those representing Eastern interests attempt to get together on a platform and a candidate.

Even if one of the three were nominated the forecasters might be wrong. Issues which aren't of the least importance now may be pyramided before November 1932. 1928 was a good example of that. The injunction of the Pope, the negro, New York's East Side, Tammany Hall, and various other prejudice-stirring factors in the campaign that year. Similar inconsequential matters might be projected into the 1932 race which would cross the forecasters.

But the forecasters may as well write their opinions. They're giving tips on the presidential race and judging from the stock market operations of the past half-dozen years the American public likes to discuss tips and to play them.

With Contemporaries

Party Distinction Will Be Subjected to the Liquor Issue

The public has prohibition face to face at last.

Franklin Roosevelt, possessor of an auspicious name and an auspicious position, both of which have figured prominently in past elections for the presidency, has jerked the cap off the bottle with a resounding pop and declared himself heartily in favor of a constitutional convention to repeal the eighteenth amendment.

Just how little party distinction really means in the United States is going to be demonstrated at the 1932 elections, for Roosevelt is recognized as the leading Democratic candidate for the nomination. Hoover, mainly because he has not proved to be a criminal of the first degree since being in office, is looked to as the probable Republican nominee, for precedent is a great thing in mob psychology.

Republican and Democrat are going to mean practically nothing. What is going to matter is that Hoover is a dry and Roosevelt a wet; and there is going to be very little else to determine the vote casting. People know that Hoover is a sound man, but not such a sound politician, and that genius in the field of mining engineering has little to do with the president's qualifications.

Also, people are not afraid of Mr. Roosevelt because he wears a derby, although they may have other reasons. All those will hark back in the final analysis to prohibition, and the action of the state legislatures in ratifying the Volstead Act will soon be justified, or condemned.

Wet, or dry? 1932 will tell the story; meanwhile there is always the Literary Digest postcard contest to look back on.—Daily Californian.

It's the Courses That Count, Not the Classes

In adjusting two hour courses to the new plan of study for next year the college authorities have hit upon a novel method of compromise. Certain of these courses in the English department are henceforth to be rated at full credit of six hours, as is necessary under the new plan, and are scheduled to have classes three times weekly; but the third hour is only "at the discretion of the instructor." Since at present some professors limit their lectures to two every week because they think that that is as much as their subjects should have, it is unlikely that the same men will feel either the need or the desire to use an additional third hour. Hence this 'method' is only a disguise, not a solution.

Then how are these present two hour courses to be assimilated into the new plan? They cannot be naturally expanded and they are too valuable to be dropped. Why shouldn't they simply receive the regular, full credit, if they are so valuable, yet continue to have only two classes per week? There is no infallible criterion for determining the relative importance of various studies; least of all is it the respective number of lectures on recitations they entail. A student may work as hard for and profit as much from a subject that has two hours as one that has three. The need for classroom work and outside work varies.

One of the best principles in the new plan of study is to have all courses rated equally, so that credit can be reckoned with them, not with hours i.e. classes as units. The old principle of credit according to hours is to go into the discard. But courses should not be rated equally just because they have an equal number of classes. The principle of rank according to hours should also be scrapped, for 'hours' as a criterion has been already discredited. We must stick to this new idea. In every way it is the courses that count, not the classes.—Harvard Crimson.

The Honorary Degree Racket

From now to June there will be many meetings in closed chambers, much pulling of wires, and numerous announcements from American colleges and universities concerning that coming racket—the awarding of honorary degrees. Indeed, names of prospective honorees have already been mentioned.

Historically, honorary degrees and the admittance of certain persons into learned societies were intended as signs of recognition for unusual accomplishments in learning, for overwhelming success and devotion to scientific pursuits, and for consecrated service to the public welfare. If men labored year after year, undergoing privations and lack of worldly goods in order to find new truth; if they did common things uncommonly well; if they served their fellows unselfishly, other men sought to reward them. Men of learning would be elected to the academies, while others would be knighted by the king or given high office in the service of his country.

In the countries of the Old World the election to learned societies or recognition from the Crown is still regarded as a distinctive honor. Here in America where there are no hereditary monarchs and where the learned societies have not yet taken on the prestige and reverence of antiquity and outstanding leadership, and where mere political office has no charm for the masses of the people, it is becoming the fashion for institutions of learning to hand out honorary degrees at commencement time—in some way, to pay honor to whom honor is due.

There can be no fundamental opposition to the conferring of honorary degrees, so long as the universities, the public, and the receiver of the honor know exactly the basis upon which the degree is given. But the growing tendency seems to be one of peddling degrees (1) to too many of those persons whose only significant service has been the contribution to an endowment fund or some other "deathbed" philanthropy to hide a questionable past, and (2) to those who have no claim for honor on their own achievements and who shine only in the reflection of the particular office they hold, an office whose intrinsic worth exists regardless of the incumbent. Under these circumstances honorary degrees become meaningless and empty, and their awarding resolves itself into nothing more than a specious racket.

If handing out of money for nominal philanthropies is to be paid for, such reward ought to be in kind. Universities may harmlessly name a building after Mr. Tweedledum who robbed thousands of his workers in his prime and bought absolution at old age by turning good Samaritan, but it should reserve academic honors for those who actually merit them. If the present practice is to continue there is need for a redefinition of the purpose and aims of honorary degrees.

We can appreciate the academic honors that have come to people like Sir Wilfred Grenfeld, medical missionary on the frozen wastes of Labrador; or to Charles Lindbergh (even though we believe that Lindbergh has been overplayed); or to Jane Addams, the founder and spirit of Hull House; but our imagination fails us in our attempt to become excited over the news of the proposed academic honors that have been offered to Mr. Hoover, the present occupant of the White House. If Mr. Hoover ever deserved recognition, it was in the days of his refugee and food administration work, before the bursting of the mythical Hoover bubble; that he deserves special recognition now, after his insistent and blinded prophesies of prosperity and back to normalcy, is highly questionable, and is more than we believe. Apart from his office and titles his accomplishments in recent years have been negligible, to say the least, and he is far from being in the class for honors.

Down in Chicago Al Capone has fed 2,500 unemployed persons every day for several months; Mayor Thompson hands out charity by permitting the little fellows in his organization to profit proportionately to the big bosses; down in Washington and points south Thomas Heflin and Cole Blease, erstwhile United States senators, have for years proclaimed the cause of "White Supremacy." Aren't these too deserving of honorary degrees for public service rendered?—Daily Cardinal.

Men Thinking

If there is anything in this small collegiate sphere of ours that leaves us with the feeling that all is right with the world and that, after all, things are not half so bad as they might be, it is the presence of a few men on the University Faculty who are what Ralph Waldo Emerson called "men thinking." To hear one of these thinking men lecture is a privilege that few are given, for there are but a handful of instructors in these times who have grown in their minds suffiiciently to interest the college undergraduate. Too many instructors there are who merely serve as mouthpieces for the thoughts of others, who continually voice the aspirations of better men and who regurgitate the ideals of dead ages. The number of those who commune with their own spirits in the sessions of silent thought is pitifully small.

It is a regrettable fact that there are so few men on the Faculty of Columbia who have the power of being intellectually honest with themselves and with the undergraduates; the majority of the men who teach here are nothing more than mental ghouls, feeding voraciously on the brains of dead men, bringing forth their carrion before students who barely realize the colossal shamelessness of of the deception that is being carried on. The number of those instructors who are stimulators of thought can be counted on the fingers of both hands.

If there were any honesty in most of the instructors of Columbia College they would have the common decency to do what writers do when they quote the thoughts of other persons. They would prefix their statements with courtesy lines. If this method were carried out there would appear placards on each door in Hamilton Hall.

"Professor John Smith will lecture to his class at 2:30 p. m. Professor Smith's lecture is given through the courtesy of Plato, Aristotle, Locke, Helvetius, Newton, Darwin, Stendhal, Proust and a lot of others who sweated mentally in order that Professor Smith might draw his salary."

So much valuable time would be saved undergraduate and professor is such lectures were printed instead of delivered. All that would be demanded would be scissors and paste. And then, wouldn't it be fairer to the student?—Columbia Spectator.

Faculty Watch-Dogs

Faculty members will no longer be bothered with the doubtful pleasure of being present at numerous social functions under a new plan of supervising behavior at parties at Michigan State college. An "honor system for parties," providing for a committee of three to five members from social groups, will replace the former system of patrons and patronesses.

The Interfraternity Council will hold to account these committees; if there is criticism of behavior at a dance, or evidence of breach of campus social rules, the council may order an investigation and fix punishment for violations.

Representatives of social groups at University of North Carolina met recently with university officials and drew up a set of regulations for campus social affairs. Control of house parties will be in the hands of a committee composed of three faculty members and three students. Students are thus given an equal voice with the faculty in dealing with all questions regarding social functions.

The regulations adopted at North Carolina show an absence of restriction and emphasis of placing responsibility for carrying out ordinary rules of good behavior on the students. Cooperation from students and discretion by those in charge will be the keynote of any success which the plan may attain.

These two plans indicate a tendency to place more and more reliance on students to "come through" as befits men and women who are about to take their places in the business and social world as leaders in community, state, and nation. It is in line with recent developments in the fields of selection of curricula by students in place of stereotyped courses of study, with recent action in abolishing scheduled examinations in favor of examinations at the request of students when they feel that they have completed require-

New Doubles Combine Is In Making For Tar Heel Tennis Legions

GRANT RANKED NUMBER 10

New Pair Down Yeomans and Kenfield in Exhibition Match To Display Form.

A new Carolina doubles combine is in the making as the Tar Heels prepare for their matches at Wake Forest Thursday, and judging from the singles abilities of the two tennis aces who make it up, it should be a great combination.

The members are none other than Bryan Grant and Wilmer Hines.

Grant, Southern Senior champ and number ten in the country, and Hines, National Junior champ, while sophomore teammates and old campaigners in the Southern tourneys, have never before played doubles together.

They formed their partnership just the other day, and in their first effort they downed Ed Yeomans, Carolina's former state champ, and Coach John Kenfiield, a wily strategist yet, 9-7, 9-7.

In another match the same afternoon Grant and Hines easily took the measure of Yeomans and Lenoir Wright, another sophomore of much promise.

Singles ability doesn't necessarily mean two stars will make good doubles team, but the two Tar Heel aces seem anxious to play together and their first doubles matches indicate Carolina may have one of the most redoubtable college teams in the country.

Grant, of course, has had the edge on Hines in singles play, but conversely, Hines' doubles efforts have always met with more success.

The diminutive Atlantan eliminated Hines decisively in one of Hines' few lickings in the Southern Senior tourney last year, but Hines and Beaver came out on top of Grant and Jack Mooney for the Southern Senior doubles crown.

Hines, of course, went on to win the Southern Junior singles, the National Junior singles, and again he paired with Judge Beaver, who comes from Gainesville, Ga., to win the National Junior doubles crown. Grant also won the national claycourts title.

Propose Memorial For Knute Rockne

South Bend, Indiana.—With money already received from various sources, although no effort had been made to solicit funds, plans for a memorial to Knute Rockne were inaugurated today.

Frank E. Hering, captain of the 1896 Notre Dame football team, and national president of the Notre Dame Alumni Association, and James E. Armstrong, national secretary, met today with the Reverend Charles L. O'Donnell, president of the University, to discuss the memorial project, following numerous inquiries from Notre Dame men. Father O'Donnell revealed that a number of donations already had been received in anticipation that a memorial would be erected.

Suggestions as to the form of the memorial will be made by a committee, nation-wide in its scope, and composed of Notre Dame alumni and friends of the famous coach.

The money shortage has its bright side: It has been more than a year since any one offered $25,000 for a prize plan of any sort.—Detroit News.

Game Called

The baseball game scheduled yesterday between Carolina and Princeton was called because of wet grounds.

"Carryin' On" Is Watchword For 1931 Trackmen

Despite Graduation and Sickness Losses, Tar Heels Have Turned In Admirable Record To Date.

These Carolina trackmen of Coach Bob Fetzer are developing a reputation for "Carryin' on."

Against N. C. State last Saturday, for instance.

Charlie Farmer, Southern dash champion, was still out with a pulled leg muscle, but that didn't make any difference.

Halfback Slusser, the low hurdler, added an extra event to his program and clicked off a win in the 100 in ten seconds.

The veteran J. K. Smith staged a coming-out party in the 220, and when the dash results were figured up it appeared that the Tar Heels had taken seventeen of eighteen points even without Farmer.

George Bagby, who holds the University record in the high jump, did likewise in the broad jump, where the veteran Neiman failed to return to college this year.

Competing in that event for the first time, Bagby leaped twenty feet ten inches and won first place, as he did also in the high jump.

In the mile Clarence Jensen, Southern indoor record holder, was out due to sickness, but his teammate Mark Jones went on to win.

And so on down the line. Lionel Weil won his fastest race in the quarter, despite the wet and heavy track.

Cliff Baucom turned in another good two-mile for first place, and in the discus Sandy Dameron and Theron Brown took first and second ahead of Sam Gurneau, who once bettered the Southern record.

The vault was another event in which the Tar Heels strutted. Brodie Arnold and Raymond Ruble easily tied for first with vaults of twelve feet six inches.

This fine competitive spirit has netted the Tar Heels to date an 88-38 win over Presbyterian College's champions of the S. I. A. A. and a 99-27 win over State.

Graduation and losses by injuries have hit the Tar Heels such tremendous wallops this season that it seems impossible that they might duplicate their Southern outdoor title in May, but despite everything, the Tar Heels seem to be a might formidable dual-meet opponent.

Loyalty Fund Head Injured In Accident

Allen Barwick, recently elected Alumni Loyalty Fund chairman, was badly injured in an automobile accident the early part of last week near Henderson. He was returning from a business trip from Richmond and was on his way to Raleigh.

The doctors report that he is getting along splendidly and is doing much better than they expected. The injury he sustained was in the lungs and the patients in this type of case do not usually respond to treatment so quickly. If no complications set in it is thought that he will soon be back to normal health.

He has a daughter, Eloise Barwick, here at the University.

Carolina Ranks Third After First Week of Play; Leaders Have Each Lost One and Won Two.

Maryland and Washington and Lee took the lead in the Tri-State Intercollegiate League of Southern Conference baseball teams after the first week of play by winning two games each and losing one.

The Old Liners started with a 3-to-1 victory over the Generals on Monday and added a 10-to-2 win over Virginia Military Institute the next afternoon. After traveling through Georgia the Terrapins came back into league territory and lost a 7-to-0 game to North Carolina State. A game scheduled with North Carolina was rained out.

Washington and Lee invaded North Carolina the end of last week and cleaned up the Tar Heels 8-to-2 in their first game and the Wolfpack 6-to-1 in their second.

Intercollegiate league standings:

Team	W	L	Pct.
Maryland	2	1	.667
Washington & Lee	2	1	.667
N. C. State	1	1	.500
North Carolina	0	1	.000
V. M. I.	0	1	.000
Virginia	0	0	.000
V. P. I.	0	0	.000

Games this week:

Thursday, April 9—Washington and Lee at Virginia.

Friday, April 10—North Carolina at Maryland.

Saturday, April 11—North Carolina at Virginia.

PROHIBITION AND COLLEGE GIRLS

For those who believe in prohibition, Helen Jacobs, famous tennis star and all round athlete, tells why it is a good thing for the college girl. "It seems deplorable to me," says Miss Jacobs, "to see girls who enter college at fifteen and sixteen smoking as consistently as those of nineteen and twenty. When you know what it does to them you wonder what makes it worth while to them. Certainly the excitement of first smoking couldn't. I don't know at what age smoking begins to do least harm, but I should imagine it would be around twenty. That certainly leaves the best part of a life time to devote to it, if one must.

"I don't suppose that drinking is much worse for women, physically, than it is for men. It isn't good for either, and the very fact that it is strictly prohibited in training rules is proof in itself that it is injurious to the wind and the health in general. This isn't the only thing against it," continues Miss Jacobs. "Excessive drinking is not a difficult habit for girls to form when they have once acquired a taste for liquor. In many homes cocktails are served before dinner. On certain occasions wine is served with it, and liquors after it. If I didn't play tennis I think I should enjoy any of these once in awhile, but the difficulty lies in the fact that even girls who are accustomed to liquor served moderately in their homes are apt to begin overdoing it whenever possible at college."

SHIELDS LOOMS AS BEST TENNIS HOPE FOR U. S.

Frank X. Shields, twenty-one years old, six feet two and a half inches tall and still growing, stands today as one of America's chief tennis hopes of the future.

After a disappointing showing in the indoor championships, where he fell before Berkeley Bell, of Texas, in the semi-finals, the lanky, broad shouldered New York youngster came back in the international team matches with France to blow Jean Borotra and Christian Boussus off the courts in straight sets.

The long, thin shadow of Shields first was cast across Eastern courts in the National Boys' Singles Championships of 1925, which he won to gain first ranking among the youngsters.

The next year he won the junior singles and gained his first national ranking at 18. In 1928 he climbed to tenth in the national ranking after winning the junior title at Culver, Indiana, with the loss of only one game and going to the semi-finals of the national championships at Forest Hills.

Pitted against Henri Cochet in that play, he waged a gallant but losing fight, carrying the second set to 8-6.

The year of 1929, with his graduation from the ranks of the juniors, saw him back down to twelfth in the national ranking. He was eliminated in the third round of the national championships by Big Bill Tilden. "Not fulfilling early promise," the experts said.

Just to show them how wrong they were, Shields came back last summer to win his way through to the finals of the national championships and carry John Hope Doeg, of Newark, to five sets in a blazing final.

John Warren To Make Debut In Pro Ranks Monday Night

Carolina Ace Following in Footsteps of Brother; To Fight Ross Rowsey, West Virginian, in Semi-Final to Add Warren-Jack Parker Fight in Charlotte.

John Warren, veteran Carolina heavyweight boxer, will enter the ranks of professional pugilists in Charlotte Monday night when he meets Ross Rowsey in an eight round semi-final bout to the Add Warren-Jack Parker fight. John has completed his period of eligibility here at Carolina and plans to do a little professional fighting during the spring and summer.

Rowsey is a West Virginian who has been campaigning around Charlotte with great success lately. He has turned in victories in his last three fights in the Queen City, and is considered a tough assignment for the Carolina boy's first professional test.

Warren, following in the footsteps of his brother Add who is a former captain of the Tar Heel boxers, made an enviable record while at Carolina. During the season just past, John won seven of his eight bouts and had another forfeited to him. His first four wins of the season were by three round decisions. Next, against Penn State, he knocked out Skoberne in the second round and then went to the Southern Conference tournament where he scored knockouts over Bacon of Washington and Lee in one round and Proctor of Florida in three. Warren lost the championship to Hill of Tulane in the finals after a wild fight that saw both men cutting loose from start to finish.

On two occasions this year, Warren's victories gave Carolina the deciding points in dual meets. Against Virginia, Warren's decision over Bryant gave the Tar Heels a 4-3 victory, while ten days later he duplicated this stunt by defeating Rankin of Duke to clinch the State championship.

Both the Warrens are working out in the Tin Can in preparation for their coming bouts. Add boxed two rounds with John Monday afternoon in addition to a round each with Hugh Wilson and Marty Levinson. The climax of the Warren-Levinson round came when Add made a flying tackle at Levinson, a featherweight, and both went to the floor.

In fighting Parker, Add is taking the first step in his attempt to regain the North Carolina heavyweight crown which he lost to Dewey Kimrey some

Florida College Will Abolish Written Examination System

A new system of education which does away with the present plan of giving the students examinations at the end of each term as a means of finding out their advancement in the course has recently been put into practice in Rollin's College in Winter Park, Florida. This "Rollin's Idea," as it has been termed, has caused considerably controversy in the higher circles of education, and the educational leaders of the country are looking on the plan as an interesting experiment out of which may come the future system of higher learning.

The main purpose of this new plan is to do away with the old idea of examinations and stimulate the desire of the students to become more personally acquainted with their professors. During the course of their daily routine, the students under this "Rollin's Idea" attend three classes, each lasting two hours. The class work itself is more in the nature of a conference among pupils and instructor than is the present system of having the professor do the lecturing while the members of of the class busy themselves only to take notes.

While on class the students and professor exchange their beliefs on the question at hand, and in this manner are able to come to some sort of conclusion as to the general sentiment of the entire group. Outside of class certain work is assigned which is relevant to the subject to be discussed. When the student has completed his assignment he is then ready to confer with the professor privately. This system is able to instruct the pupils in a most proficient manner, and the only tests given are the personal conferences between student and instructor.

Under this system the "cheats" are unable to ride through on their companions knowledge, but must depend only on their own ability to get them through. This plan also does away with the numerous "degree hunters" and is planned so as to incense the students with a desire for further knowledge rather than "good-marks."

ments for the course in question, and with the honor system for conduct of examinations and class work.

Whether the social rules as adopted at Michigan State and North Carolina would be practical at Oregon State is questionable. Students on this campus are prone to object to the present system; not all faculty members, by any means, favor the system whereby they shall be present at student affairs as watch dogs of society. But is Oregon State ready for the change?

Obvious failure of students to lend hearty cooperation to the honor council in enforcing the letter and spirit of the present honor system may be an answer to that question. Mature men and women who have shown themselves so puerile as to be unable to enforce a fairly workable system as that now in force are hardly ready to take on the added responsibility of an "honor system for parties."—*G. Enters' Presentation Ends Student Program she had actually seen it and which had been registered in her photographic mind.

The next to the last of the performances, entirely different from any of those which had preceeded, consisted of the Kedroff Quartet which sang some of the famous old folk and church songs of their native Russia. There was no accompaning music to aid the singers except in one of the last numbers, when a piano was played by the leader, N. N. Kedroff. However there was no need for any other music than that of the human voice, for the clear notes and voices of these master singers thrilled the audience into a state of awed silence which was only broken when the number was finished. One of the most beautiful of these offerings was the one representing the ringing of the church bells. It is impossible to imagine the perfection of the copy of the bell-sound which the second tenor achieved unless one was present at the performance.

The final presentation for the current year was offered last night in Memorial hall where all of the other performances had been given. Miss Agna Enters danced, swaying her audience with her in the painting all sorts of fantastic and unreal places and beings in her collection of uniquely different dances. Her performance would have suffered nothing in being compared with that of Miss Goya if the two could be compared. However that would be difficult since the two dancers were of entirely different natures and types; the one the passionate Spaniard in her native costume and dance, the other ever-changing, mystic woman-creature whose dances conformed to nothing ever seen before.

Engineers to Muzzle Subway Noises; Electric Ears Listen In to Show How

New York is going to try to quiet its subways. The city has appropriated $5,000 for a preliminary study and the first step towards dampening the roar of its underground and overhead rail system has already been taken.

Cities throughout the country are following the investigation closely. During recent years the attention of civic authorities has been increasingly drawn towards the harmful effects of noise upon the nervous system.

In big centers of population, particularly irritating noises arise from a hundred different sources. There is no way for the city dweller to escape except by eliminating them.

City Already Quieter

Progress has already been made as a result of the surveys conducted by the Noise Abatement Commission. Obvious sources, such as radio loudspeakers blaring in the streets, have been removed. A campaign of education has diminished needless din such as horn-blowing and careless handling of noisy objects like ash cans.

However, the survey showed that some of the noisiest spots in the city were to be found in its subway tubes and in the streets beneath the tracks of its elevated lines. Hundreds of thousands use these facilities and are daily exposed to the effects of the din. Consequently New York's Board of Transportation, in launching the study, is attacking about the most crucial noise problem in the city.

Must Analyze Noise

The clamor of the subway is probably the most familiar in the metropolis. Yet nobody knows what kind of sound it is made up of or what causes the worst of it. That information is necessary before ways of reducing it can be worked out.

Recent developments in other fields have produced a new kind of engineer—the so-called sound expert or acoustic engineer. The New York Board of Transportation is employing a group of such experts to make this study. They are the acoustic engineers of Electrical Research Products, a subsidiary of the Western Electric Company, who have become specialists in the field through their work on talking motion pictures.

Can Hear Pin Drop

These engineers are equipped with devices many times more sensitive and accurate than the human ear. In a recent test one of them recorded the drop of a pin many feet away. The man who dropped the pin had to hold his breath which made more sound than the pin. The same device can measure the loudness of a cannon's boom.

The first thing the engineers did was to take one of the mechanical ears on a tour of the subway. One microphone "listened" outside the car and another inside. The engineers were able to report at once that inside is noisier than outside. They also found that the loudest noise is produced not when the train starts nor when it stops, but at about the moment when its acceleration is greatest, that is when it is picking up speed fastest.

Part of this device is a sound filter. It breaks up the noise, showing whether it is strongest in the high notes, or the low, or somewhere in between. This is considered important because high notes, even when not as loud as low, can be more irritating to the ear.

Like all pieces of scientific research, the investigation must be made a step at a time. On their first trip the engineers were gathering information to plan their campaign. They now propose to study the noise of wheels passing over different types of joint, cars going around curves, brakes being applied and the effects of reverberations in the tube.

New Materials To Be Used

Once the hubbub has been dissected, and it is known what parts of it and how much are caused by gears, wheels, tracks and echoes, the next step will be to determine what types of sound-absorbing and noiseless materials, what type of construction and what methods of operation will do most to hush the subways.

New Yorkers crowding into subway cars are hopeful of quieter rides in the future. At top: Sound experts touring tubes with devices that analyze noise and help single out parts that cause it.

If you inhale, you can quickly tell the difference between fresh and stale cigarettes. A Camel, protected by the Humidor Pack, retains its natural moisture, and gives you a cool mild smoke. But when you draw in the smoke from dried-out stale tobacco, it's hot and irritating to the throat.

If you haven't discovered this difference, we suggest you switch to Camels for just one day. Then leave them tomorrow, if you can.

PLAYMAKERS TO PRESENT SET OF ORIGINAL PLAYS

Four Productions by Members Of Playwriting Class on Latest Bill.

This year has been a productive one in the playwriting course, English 31. Already this season sixteen original plays have been produced, which were written by twelve authors from states ranging from California to Alabama. Folk-plays, society plays, Negro tragedy, domestic tragedy, domestic comedy, expressionistic drama, college comedy and satire have been among the types of plays produced.

The present bill presents four new playwrights and offers considerable variety in the themes of the productions.

Ever' Snitch by Irene Fussler is a comedy of the Carolina fisher-folk. The story deals with the interesting characters living among the dunes of the coast line, with the fisher-folk and old seamen who still cherish the customs and speech of the first English settlers.

Mr. Theodore Herman of Lancaster, Pennsylvania, has given in his The Blue Remembered Hills a sympathetic study of college youth. He reminds us that adolescence is like spring—happy enough if all the conditions be favorable, but only too likely to be full of rain and chill winds. Especially is this true if the adolescent is a sensitive person. The chillness of the winds depends to a great extent upon the sensitivity of the individual.

By the simple expedient of taking a few sharply sensitive, painfully self-conscious young college students and showing them in their dormitory room and fraternity houses, under conditions which tend to induce a certain mood, the author has attempted to allow them to work out their own salvation according to their own psychological patterns.

A Very Pale Pink Angel is a whimsical satire (which might be called A Tragedy of Heaven) with ultimate promise of a happy ending. The author is Ellen Stewart of Camden, South Carolina, and this is her first play. She holds that if it be true that the spirit world is of our own making, we may just as well conceive an attractive one. The thing is to believe in it implicitly.

"After all," she says, "who wants a sanctified heaven—the monotony of flapping wings and holy expressions even on week days?"

The author of Always A Bettin' Man comes from Hagerstown, Maryland. This little comedy, Tom Loy's first play, was so well received when it was presented as a studio production last month that it is being included in this list of plays.

Phi Beta Kappa To Announce New Men

Dr. Henry Van Peters Wilson, of the department of biology here, will speak in Gerrard hall tonight at eight-thirty as a part of the public initiation of Phi Beta Kappa.

At this time the winners of the coveted Phi Bete key will be announced. They will have been elected to membership upon the three qualifications of fraternity, morality, and scholarship.

PHI SOCIETY PLAN TO STAGE DANCE

The Di and Phi Societies held their weekly meetings Tuesday night. The Di Senate passed two resolutions, but the Phi Assembly failed to consider any of the bills on the calendar due to a great amount of new business.

The Di Senate passed the following resolutions:

1. Resolved: That the present fines placed on students missing classes in the psychology department is unwarranted and unfair.

2. Resolved: That interstate bus companies should be regulated by the government.

Both resolutions were passed by a large majority. A bill condemning the tax placed on football games was postponed indefinitely. Former president J. M. Little served as president

CREDIT WILL BE GIVEN FOR NEW WRITING COURSE

Phillip Russell's Conference Class Will Be Known as English 22.

Dr. G. R. Coffman, head of the English department, announced yesterday that hereafter credit is to be allowed to all undergraduates belonging to Phillips Russell's conference in experimental writing. And hereafter the course will be known as English 22.

This class has been meeting for some time, but it was thought that no credit could be allowed for the course. Now, however, credit is to be given and the class will be carried on as an experiment.

The English department is interested to see if the students are interested in trying to write by associating with a man who has devoted thirty years of his life to professional writing and whose business it is to write.

Students who have been attending the class thus far may register with the consent of their dean and the head of the English department. The registration will be limited to some fifteen or twenty students, and will be chosen from those who have already attended. Those who have not conferred with Dr. Coffman or Mr. Russell are urged to do so today between the hours of two and three in 104 Saunders. The final arrangements for the carrying on of this class must be completed tomorrow.

Those graduates and visitors who have been attending the class may still continue to do so since the restriction as to registration only concerns those students who desire to take the course for credit.

All members of the class will have the privilege of conferring with Mr. Russell as this is mainly a conference course.

The class will have a meeting tonight at seven-thirty o'clock in 302 Alumni building.

UNIVERSITY TO DEBATE APPALACHIAN COLLEGE

The University of North Carolina debating squad, represented by C. D. Wardlaw and H. H. Hobgood is scheduled to debate the Appalachian State Teachers college, of Boone, Friday night, April 10, on the question of Free Trade. Carolina will take the negative side.

Ben Greet English Players To Stage Production Of 'Hamlet'

Presenting a treat in the form of a different Hamlet, Ben Greet will lead his internationally known company of Shakespearean players to the University Tuesday, April 14, for an appearance in the new Memorial hall, sponsored by the Carolina Playmakers.

The Greet presentation of Hamlet, with the use of the first Quarto Version, which will be seen here, is out of the line of the ordinary Shakespearean production. This edition of the play is shorter than the one found in the usual text-book and contains lines which will be unfamiliar to the usual theatre audience.

The Greet Players will stage their presentation with the simplicity of the Elizabethan period, allowing one's attention to become fixed automatically on the magic words of Shakespeare. The beauty of the play is not marred by stiff and pseudo-artistic canvas. Clumsy and unnatural sets have done as much to ruin plays through their sheer ugliness as they have the retarding action. Likewise the costumes of the production are devised for harmony as well as for splendor in soft, well-directed lights.

The Greet players, led by Sir Philip Ben Greet, for many years one of the most famous producers and actors of Shakespearean plays, are on tour in America and will appear in Chapel Hill under the auspices of the Carolina Playmakers on April 14. The performance will take place in the new Memorial hall.

Ben Greet, as he has been known on the stage, was knighted by the British government on the King's birthday in 1929 as a recognition of his contribution to Shakespearean interpretation. Being of advanced age and achievement, he could have retired and have enjoyed the rewards of his long career; but the trouper's blood is still in his veins, and he is again undertaking the strenuous activity of traveling from one American city to another, presenting the classic plays in which he has appeared so often.

The Philadelphia Evening Bulletin said of the company upon their American appearance there in February: "Sir Philip Ben Greet and his band of English players paid another of their welcome visits to Philadelphia yesterday, returning after a year's absence. A large audience warmly appreciated the actor-manager whose fifty years' service to the stage and efforts to restore Elizabethan simplicity to Shakespearean drama earned him a knighthood bestowed in 1929.

"The Ben Greet Players develop their roles with remarkable smoothness and deliver their lines with a nicety of diction that is unfamiliar to American theatregoers. The staging follows that of the sixteenth century and eliminates the extensive changing of elaborate settings characterizing modern productions."

FINES MODIFIED IN PSYCHOLOGY 2

Student Committee Confers with Professors to Lessen Rigid Requirements.

At the request of a special committee appointed by the members of the Psychology 2 class Tuesday, the new attendance regulations put on by that department were somewhat modified.

According to the new rule there is to be no required make-up for the first three absences, but for the second three there will be a fee of twenty-five cents to make up an excused absence, and fifty cents for unexcused. Additional absences will necessitate the student's dropping the course unless the instructor requests that he be allowed to continue. Students missing quizes announced in advance will be required to pay a fee of one dollar for make-up of excused absences, and two dollars for make-up of unexcused unless the professor prefers to give the pupil an F on that quiz.

Aside from agreeing to make this change, the department has decided to refund all fees paid this quarter in excess of those put on by the new regulation.

The committee composed of Tom Rose, Bill Jarman, and McBride Fleming-Jones confering with Professors Crane, Dashiell, and Bagby agreed on the new revised rules.

Dance Committees

A special meeting of the dance committees of the Junior Prom and Senior Ball is called for this afternoon at five o'clock in the Y. M. C. A. building to discuss important matters regarding plans for the Junior-Senior Ball.

SPRING TAPPING DATE IS CHOSEN BY TAU BETA PI

Honorary Engineering Fraternity Plans To Select New Members April 21.

The semi-annual tapping by Tau Beta Pi, national honorary engineering fraternity, will take place on April 21, with initiation two weeks later, May 5. There were seven men honored at the last tapping of this organization. They were H. F. Chrisco, R. S. Ruble, G. F. Horney, C. E. Hubbard, R. J. White, D. J. Thurston, and John Andrews. Other members are G. J. Quinn, N. L. Bryan, G. D. Thompson, C. P. Hayes, and J. B. Pittana.

Membership in this fraternity is the highest honor to which engineering students may aspire. The men who are tapped are chosen because of outstanding scholarship, character, and fellowship.

The Beta chapter of Tau Beta Pi is one of the four national honorary societies on the campus; the other three are: Phi Beta Kappa, honorary scholastic fraternity; Sigma Xi, honorary scientific research society; and Sigma Gamma Epsilon, honorary geological society.

The Beta chapter is one of more than sixty chapters in colleges and universities in the United States. The first chapter of the society was organized at Lehigh University in 1885, and since that time more than 16,000 engineering students have been honored with membership. The Beta chapter was organized in 1928. The tapping on April 21 will be the sixth held under the auspices of the University organization.

STAFF BANQUET SET FOR TONIGHT

The members of the business, reportorial, and editorial staffs of the Daily Tar Heel will give a banquet in the Carolina Inn tonight at six-thirty to retiring editor, Will Yarbarough, and retiring business manager, Pat Patterson.

At the time of the occasion tonight the personnel of the new staff is to be announced by Jack Dungan, newly-elected editor of the publication. The newly-elected and retiring editors, managing-editors, and business managers will probably be called on to say a few words to the staff gathering before the program is completed. Charlie Rose will act as toastmaster.

Members of the staff planning to attend will be expected to notify Bob Woerner as soon as possible.

POSITIONS OPEN FOR THIRTY-FIVE NEW REPORTERS

First Meeting of New Editorial Staff Will Take Place Sunday Night.

For the benefit of all those persons desiring to try out for a position on the reportorial staff of the Daily Tar Heel, a special meeting has been scheduled for Sunday night at seven a. m. in room 104, Alumni building. With the graduation of several members of the present staff, room will be made for a large number of new men.

Places will be open for at least fifteen rising juniors and around twenty members of the rising sophomore class who have passed English 1. There will also be room for a few students who have not completed this course.

Those men who have taken some of the higher English composition courses who would be interested in expository writing and editorial work are asked to meet Sunday afternoon at five o'clock in room 104, Alumni building for try-outs. These try-outs will continue for a month or more and at the end of that time members of the editorial board will be chosen solely on the basis of their work done during this period.

It is the plan of the newly-elected editor to have a much larger staff than was used this past year, and promotion in the staff will be given on the grounds of ability alone.

At the end of each year, attractive charms are given to those men who have been doing consistent work during the entire time, and the ability, interest, and originality of the staff members play a large part in determining who are to receive these awards. Aside from the donation of these awards, the pictures of the best writers are also published in the Tar Heel page in the Yackety Yack.

HIGH SCHOOL STUDENTS PRESENT LATIN PLAY

The third year Latin class of the local high school, under the direction of J. B. Fisher, teacher of the class last quarter, presented a play of Cicero Denouncing Cataline at their regular chapel period yesterday.

Billy Howard, as Cicero, delivered the First Oration Against Cataline. The part of Cataline was portrayed by Lawrence Cheek. Ten other characters, referred to in the oration, completed the cast.

FRENCH ELECTED MANAGING EDITOR DAILY TAR HEEL

Manning, Worth, Silverstein, and Marsh Are Other P. U. Board Selections for Publications.

The Publications Union Board met Tuesday night to select the assistants on the three publications of the University. This board is composed of K. C. Ramsay, president, McBride Fleming-Jones, secretary, Professor J. M. Lear, treasurer, Holmes Davis, and Professor O. J. Coffin.

Ed French was appointed managing-editor of the Daily Tar Heel for the ensuing year. With the exception of Jack Dungan, recently elected editor of the publication, French has served longer on the staff than any other member working at present. He served as reporter and desk man for a year, and has also had a year's experience as city editor.

John Manning, who has been assistant business manager of the Tar Heel for the past year, assistant manager of the Buccaneer and also worked on the staff of the Yackety Yack, was appointed business manager of the Daily Tar Heel. Manning is also secretary of the Y for next year.

For circulation manager of the Daily Tar Heel, Tom Worth was chosen. He has been working on the circulation staff for two years.

Sam Silverstein was selected as business manager of the Yackety Yack. He has been actively engaged in work on all three of the publications during the last year, being librarian for the Daily Tar Heel, assistant business manager of the Yackety Yack, and also a member of the staff of the Buccaneer.

The final appointment was that of Steve Marsh as business manager of the Buccaneer. He has been assistant business manager of the Buccaneer and served on the Yackety Yack staff.

For the five offices there were twenty applicants from whom the above five were chosen for their outstanding work on the respective publications.

LAW SCHOOL BANQUET ARRANGEMENTS BEGUN

Several committees have been appointed and are completing plans for the annual law school banquet on May 1, in the Carolina Inn. Dean Charles T. McCormick, of the law school, is in charge of the affair, and Professor H. R. Wettach is to act as toastmaster.

President Frank P. Graham has been invited to make the principal speech of the evening.

The entire supreme court of North Carolina has been invited, and it has signified its intention to attend. Invitations have been issued to all the graduates of the law school for the last two years.

Previous law school banquets have gained a state-wide reputation for their entertainment. The following committees have been apointed to make plans for the occasion: Entertainment committee—Wex Malone, Moore Bryson, Mac Grey, Archie Cannon, and "Bunny" Chadbourn. Those on the speakers commitee are William Covington, Martin Kellogg, and Archie Allen. The arrangements committee is composed of James Williams, Bryce Parker, and Marion Alexander.

Without An Encore

As the Daily Tar Heel passes from its present board of control into newer hands we are tempted to close with the one word: Farewell. But as this is our last bow on the campus stage we are moved to write more.

Upon assuming the control of the Daily Tar Heel we were imbued with enthusiasm and ideas. Enthusiasm withered and died away with the grim realization that editing a collegiate publication consists chiefly of submitting to the daily grind and of compromising differing opinions. Ideas and plans were shattered upon being subjected to contact with forces superior to ours. Controversies have come and gone. Old issues have been revived and reburied. But through it all there has constantly gleamed a bit of humor. As those with whom we differed conquered or were conquered we have laughed. And criticisms of our policies have not weakened our belief in them.

It is with confidence and trust that we pass this student obligation into other hands. We have confidence in the ability and competence of the new board of control. We have the utmost trust in leaving with our successors the one responsibility of sponsoring and championing student privileges. For a year they will enjoy all the responsibilities and cares of controlling this experimental laboratory of the University. And then they will pass on.

And with the curtain we feel constrained to voice our "appreciation of the tolerance of this community for its kind inattention."

"Advanced"

To some of us, old fashioned creatures, the word "advanced" has come to smell to high heaven of dank tarns and boggy swamps and fishy marshes and dead buffaloes. In other words, we think, perhaps mistakenly, that the word has connotations. Any theory that the common garden variety of man can't swallow is advanced, moral theory, religious, political, economic, educational.

It seems a shame to put the Rollins educational plan in the category of advanced ideas. But it is advanced. But we will omit the marshes and the buffaloes.

We are old fashioned enough to want our education drilled into us, lectured at us, and quizzed out of us. "While on class the students and professor exchange their beliefs on the question at hand . . ." Personally, we'd rather have sat at Albertus's feet than slapped him on the back and said, "Wake up and hear what we have to say about the matter."

We can't see that the exchange of ideas will do much good. The students will come away from the course with an infinite amount of unrelated, useless nigh information. They'll get their learning painlessly. But there's a difference, and not a remarkably subtle difference, between learning and education. We don't think we'll omit the marshes and the buffaloes after all.

The Voice of The Masses

Arnold Bennett, when he wrote What The Public Wants, certainly knew his democracy and knew also those organs of democracy, the newspapers. No other medium affords as excellent a commentary on the public, its tastes, its likes and dislikes, its judgments, as the daily paper. The best examples illustrative of this generalization are seen possibly in the amount of space allotted to stories and obituaries of this or that personality or high light in the day's news when that individual meets death.

Knute Rockne dies in an airplane crash and the newspapers are full of the story, along with a wealth of details, of memories, of eulogistic praises, all of which trail after the account of the bare facts of his death in such a profusion as to make of the man a semi-hero. Arnold Bennett dies and the A. P., only shallowly stirred, sends out a few paragraphs, and some newspapers make it a front page feature; many others do not. And no follow-up stories appear; no magnificent tributes are paid, no ringing praises are sung. We do not learn the names of the pall bearers, nor do we hear that the public was excluded from the funeral. A similar example was furnished by the deaths, within a few days of each other, of Rudolph Valentino and Charles Eliot. Accounts of Valentino filled enough space in the American newspapers to have recorded the deaths of almost all the scholars that have added to the world's knowledge since Aristotle. The modest originator of the Five Foot Book Shelf received just about the same attention as the late Mr. Bennett.

Intellectuals became righteously indignant over this very obvious state of affairs, but all their wrathful waxing was impotent. Democracy is the keynote of the newspapers' selection of material. It must cater to the majority, and since the public as a whole is far more interested in the matters of the physique and in the lives of screen idols than in more esoteric matters then the majority are going to continue to buy newspapers to lap up all they can learn about Dempsey and Rockne and Valentino. The average Southerner would much rather have read some months ago that Alabama had won a game over Notre Dame than that Sinclair Lewis had won the Nobel award, while the average Easterner or Midwesterner, if such a football game had been scheduled, would much have preferred to hear that the South Bend team had triumphed again than that one of America's most promising bids for literary immortality had done something that no other American had ever done before in the realm of literature.

The intellectual can choose his magazines and can exercise a careful selection as to the books he reads, but when it comes to the views of the day then the voice of the masses overwhelms him and he must either submit or forego reading a daily newspaper entirely.—R. H.

OPEN FORUM

Action Desired

During the past few rainy days we have seen quite a few students splashing through acres of deep mud to get to Swain Hall. Is it necessary that they suffer martyrdom to get their three meals a day? But, aside from the question of comfort, the Swain Hall lawn is a disgrace to the University. As one enters the campus from Pittsboro Street, one is struck by the bizarre contrast between the lawns of Peabody Building and Swain Hall. On the one hand are colorful flowers and a trim lawn; while, on the other hand is a ragged stretch of grass, mud, and general unloveliness. We are not proposing to lay any blame on Mr. Harmon for this condition. It is purely a matter of official concern. Mr. Harmon can spend money only for supplies, food, and the labor necessary to prepare the food. We students are proud of the beauty of our University, and rightfully so. We have a spot of real loveliness in the Arboretum, and our campus on the whole is kept in a neat and trim condition. Men are kept constantly at work clipping, raking, mowing, picking up trash, and setting out shrubs; while the walks of Swain Hall are vaguely defined, are used for parking purposes, and are full of mudholes. Professor Coker has already vaguely promised to relieve the situation—when do we get action?

Education— What Is It?

What are the evidences of an education? What should we have to show for years of laboring over our books and burning the midnight oil?

Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia university, said recently that the five evidences of an education are: correctness and precision in the use of the mother tongue; refined and gentle manners; the power and habit of reflection; the power of growth; and the possession of efficiency or the power to do.

These characteristics, according to Dr. Butler, comprise the "outline" of an educated man. "That outline," he said, "may be filled in by scholarship, by literary power, by mechanical skill, by professional zeal and capacity, by business competence, or by social and political leadership."

In looking at this outline one sees that it includes the essential qualifications of a student, and yet none of the points are too difficult to master.

Correct speech requires thought and care. Carelessness is often the cause of a poor use of our language.

Refined and gentle manners are the products of environment in many cases, but education can make up for whatever may be lacking in environment.

The power and habit of reflection is the quality which university students, probably, give the least attention and require the most. In the hustle and bustle of our everyday lives, we often do things mechanically, without being conscious of thinking about them at all. The fault lies in the speed in which we live.

The power of growth becomes evident in a student as soon as he enters a university, if he has this power. If he has it, he is able to keep up the pace and to develop mentally by the contracts he has the opportunity of making. If he hasn't it, he falls by the wayside and becomes a nonentity.

During his student days, a person possesses as great or greater degree of efficiency than at any other time in his life. While he is young and strong and full of ambition, he has the power to do and to develop, and should take full advantage of it.

Whatever his line of endeavor, a student should keep in mind the importance of a well-rounded general education. Surely, these principles of Dr. Butler's are a worth while guide to the understanding of true education—Daily Iowan.

Exams On File

University professors, human beings, have often been privately criticized by students who have felt that examinations were not written on a model plan. More recent is the criticism that professors, having written good examinations, tend to ask the same questions, year after year.

At the University of Minnesota, students feel that repetition of questions is unfair to unorganized students, declaring in a recent petition that fraternity men can usually get copies of previous examinations from files kept from year to year. These students can, it is charged, pass examinations with a minimum of study, and receive unjustifiably high grades.

The petitioners ask that the university place on file in the library copies of all final examinations, giving students not in organized groups the same opportunity which Greeks enjoy. Over half the student body signed the Minnesota petition in seven hours, and were promised action by Dean R. A. Stevenson.

The same problem exists at Stanford, where back copies of examination questions are filed. However, few examinations are repeated unchanged here. And some Stanford professors make a practice of collecting all copies of questions at the close of examinations.

The unique advantage of the Minnesota plan is that it would afford all students the opportunity to learn what features of their courses professors consider most important, would enable them to organize more efficiently their lecture notes, and would aid them in getting the most from their work. — Stanford Daily.

A More Liberal College

Most of us are vaguely familiar with Dr. Alexander Meikeljohn's Experimental College at the University of Wisconsin. But our knowledge of the institution is in general quite limited. We have an idea that it is a diversion from the accustomed formulae of educational methods and that it practices a system of education quite unusual in its radical idealism. And also we heard that a whole year is spent studying Greek civilization. At that we stop.

An article by Eliseo Vivas in "The Nation," deriding Doctor Meikeljohn's noble experiment, bring the matter up in considerable detail. Moved by the announcement that the Experimental College would admit no freshman class next fall, this man has taken to task quite severely this latest trial in liberal education circles. He maintains that the students do not get accurate information nor do they develop habits of accurate work and that their instructors are not and cannot be fully informed on the too-wide field they supposedly cover.

STEPPING INTO A MODERN WORLD

"Test it!"

the watchword of an industry

The Bell System—whose plant cost more than $4,000,000,000 and is still growing—offers wide opportunity to the man of engineering bent. Here he has ample scope for testing new ideas, not only in telephone apparatus development but also in manufacture, construction, installation, maintenance and operation.

No matter what his particular branch of engineering—electrical, mechanical, civil, industrial, chemical—his training stands him in good stead. For "telephone engineering" calls for the broad engineering point of view as well as specialization.

Basic technical knowledge, an appreciation of economic factors and the ability to cooperate are some of things that count in Bell System engineering. For men of this stamp, the opportunity is there!

Tar Heels Slug Tiger Pitchers For 15-3 Win

Carolina Nine Counts Fifteen Runs on Like Number of Hits For Third Victory.

TIGERS GET SIX BINGLES

George Hinton Holds Princeton Tigers at Bay for First Win of Season.

Falling on four Princeton hurlers for fifteen hits and a like number of runs, Carolina defeated the Tigers yesterday, 15-3 at Emerson field in a game called at the end of the eighth to allow the visitors to catch a train.

George Hinton, hurling for the Tar Heels, received wonderful support from his teammates to hold the hard hitting northerners to five hits and three runs.

Princeton got away to an early lead in the first inning, getting two hits to score a run. Reinmund, the first batter drove a sharp single to center field, and advanced on Captain Muldaur's infield out. Reinmund went to third on Hinton's balk and scored when Bennett singled to right field.

The Tar Heels evened the count in the second frame when Powell walked, stole second and rode home on Waud's wild throw past the catcher.

The big explosion came in the third inning when the Carolina batters drove Waud to the showers under a seven run barrage. The hitters batted around twice, Henry House getting two hits in that inning. House started the fireworks with a single to left, and advanced on Dunlap's infield blow. Blythe then blasted his first double to right center scoring House and advancing Dunlap to third. Wyrick laid down a perfect bunt, scoring Dunlap and making first safely himself. Pattisall singled to right scoring Blythe. Hinton walked. Croom, batting for Peacock, was safe on Bennett's two base wild throw, scoring Wyrick and Pattisall and advancing Hinton to third. House's second hit in that inning scored Hinton and Croom.

The Tar Heels garnered one more run and three hits in the fourth, Wyrick's long single to center scoring Blythe after Blythe and Powell hit safely.

The fifth inning saw the finish of Whitman on the mound. In that session the Tar Heels hit twice for three runs. Consecutive errors by Knell, Tiger shortstop, put Ferebee and House on base. Dunlap singled to right scoring Ferebee, while House counted on Blythe's double to right center. Powell lifted a fly to center on which Dunlap scored for the last run in that inning.

Another Tar Heel flurry netted three runs in the seventh. Ferebee and Dunlap walked and immediately pulled a double steal. Eno, trying to catch Ferebee at third made a poor throw, enabling "Smokey" to score. Powell walked. Wyrick doubled down the right field line scoring Dunlap and Powell.

The visitors, mowed down regularly by Hinton, suddenly came to life in the eighth, scoring two runs by virtue of a pair of triples. Reinmund tripled to right, and scored when Dunlap dropped Hinton's throw on Muldaur's grounder. Knell tripled deep into center field scoring Muldaur with the final run.

Briefs

The Tar Heel bats played a merry tune on the offerings of the visiting pitchers. It sounded mightily like "Tiger Rag."

Two Carolina players were spiked. House was accidentally cut on his foot when he attempted to steal second in the fourth inning, while Powell met his in-

SPRING FOOTBALL

There will be a meeting of the candidates for the 1931 varsity football squad tonight in 103 Bingham hall at seven o'clock.

BOXERS FURNISH RAPID ACTION IN INDOOR TRAINING

Warren Brothers Prepare for Professional Bouts While Varsity and Intramural Fighters Begin Training.

With over sixty intramural and varsity boxing candidates at work every day, the Tin Can has been the scene of red hot action during the past week. The intramural boxers have been given instructions in fundamentals while some of the varsity candidates have been doing a little boxing every day.

In addition to the varsity and intramural men, the Warren brothers, Add and John, are using the Tin Can for training purposes. Add is getting in condition to take on Big Jack Parker in the first bout of his comeback campaign, while John is working for his first professional fight in Charlotte Monday night. John is to fight Ross Rowsey who has been doing prominent work around the Queen city for the past month or more.

Add and John have been sparring with each other for two rounds each day, and both boys are beginning to get into fighting trim. In addition to his work with John, Add has been sparring with Hugh Wilson, varsity lightheavyweight this year, and has had some chance to cut loose with both hands. Add went one round with Marty Levinson Monday afternoon to the amusement of a fairly large gathering. He is expected to add Archie Allen, freshman boxing coach and former Southern Conference lightweight champion, to his list of sparring partners this afternoon.

The intramural candidates, after spending the first week of their practice session in taking exercises and trying to absorb the various fundamentals, have been allowed to put on the gloves and are furnishing more action. None of the boys have been put in the ring yet, but they have been divided into sparring classes. Only the left hand has been used as yet, but the boys will probably get a chance to try their knockout punches sometime soon.

Several more varsity candidates have reported during the week and are working steadily to get into shape. George Biggs is the latest to report. Biggs is a bantamweight and fought in the first three bouts of the year. Aside from Biggs, Cliff Glover is the only bantamweight out for practice. Jimmie Williams, who fought in two freshman bouts this year has not reported yet.

Platt Landis, who with Levinson forms the veteran material for next year's squad, is not in school. Platt decided to take a trip to Europe this spring, so Hugh Wilson is the only varsity candidate out for the lightheavyweight class. Peyton Brown, freshman 179 pounder is still recovering from an attack of measles.

Other varsity candidates are: Red Allsbrook and Billy Stallings, welterweights, Jack Farris, and Bruce Langdon, lightweights, and Marty Levinson, featherweight.

TRACKMEN BEGIN DRILLS FOR TECH

Georgia Tech Slated as Tough Conference Foe; Farmer Still Out.

The Tar Heel track team, with wins over Presbyterian College and N. C. State already behind them, started work Monday afternoon for their meet Saturday with Georgia Tech at Atlanta. Both the early wins were by large margins, but the Techmen are expected to offer much stiffer opposition than the Tar Heels have faced so far this year.

Rain prevented outdoor practice Monday, and the Tar Heels were forced to hold a light workout in the Tin Can. However, with the return of good weather on Tuesday, Coaches Fetzer and Ransom began putting the boys through their regular drills on the track.

Charley Farmer is still on the injured list, but his loss is not being felt as much as it was feared. The good work of Ken Marland has done much to offset Farmer's loss. Marland took first place in the 100 yard dash against Presbyterian and then chalked up two third places against the Wolfpack dashmen in the 100 and 440 last Saturday. Marland had never run officially in any kind of race before being entered in the 100 yard dash at the Indoor meet here last March. He qualified for the finals, and then ran on the record breaking mile relay team. Against Presbyterian College, Marland ran in his first outdoor race and won the century in 10.2 seconds over a muddy track. He placed second to Rip Slusser against State when Slusser stepped the distance in ten flat over the same kind of track. In addition to his work in the 100, Marland ran second to Weil in the 440 which Weil won in 50.4 seconds.

The rest of the dash men have been doing equally fine work. Neither Presbyterian or State was able to place a man in the 100 although both teams boasted strong men in this event, and Carolina has claimed one first place, two seconds, and a third in the 220. The veteran Smith has scored a second and a third in the 100 and a first in the 220, and Slusser, has taken a first and a third in the 100. Slusser specializes in the low hurdles and has taken first place in both meets this spring.

Another newcomer who has been doing good work in his first year of varsity competition is "Red" Hamlet. Hamlet had little experience before coming to the Hill, but this year he has stepped out in the high jump to tie the veteran George Bagby at five feet seven inches against Presbyterian and take second place against State when Bagby won the event with a leap of five feet ten and one half inches.

If the rookies continue to come through and the veterans perform as they have in the past, the team will go to Atlanta with strength in every event in spite of the fact that several dependable men will be absent from the line-up.

The Flint Journal says that "one of the causes of all this distress is overproduction." Which indicates, however, plenty of prophets.—Weston

Carolina Netmen Will Turn Out En Masse For North-South Tournament

Heels Will Meet Wake Forest in Preliminary Match Today; Hines-Grant To Play.

FROSH BEAT RALEIGH HIGH

Harris and Bridgers Win Matches for Raleigh as Frosh Get Five to Two Win.

The Carolina tennis team will meet the Wake Forest Deacons in Wake Forest this afternoon. It will be the Tar Heels second match of the season, having defeated Clemson earlier in the season. Coach Kenfield is planning to take only six men, saving Grant and Hines for the North-South tournament, which will be held at Pinehurst next week.

Little competition will be given the Heels as the Deacon team is practically entirely made up of rookies. Last year the Tar Heels defeated Wake Forest twice, winning 8-1 and 9-0. This year the Carolina netmen are not expected to loose a single set.

Captain Graham, Hendlin, state singles champion last year, Liskin, co-holder of the doubles title with Hendlin, Wright, Abels, and Yeomans will make the trip.

Next week the Tar Heels will invade Pinehurst, eight men entering the North-South tourney. Coach Kenfield announced that he would enter the entire squad to give the men benefits of all the seasoning that playing against such a strong field can give.

In the singles the Tar Heels will enter Bryan Grant, Southern and National Claycourts champion; Wilmer Hines, National Junior champ; Hinkey Hendlin, state singles champion last year; Ed Yeomans, former state champion; Phil Liskin, state doubles champion with Hendlin last year; Lenior Wright and Lucas Abels, freshmen stars last year.

The new doubles team of Grant and Hines will also enter the doubles. The other doubles teams will be composed of Yeomans and Wright, Hendlin and Liskin, and Graham and Abels.

The Heels have won their opening matches by shutout scores, and Coach Kenfield, in announcing the sweeping entries for the tournament, made it clear that he thought some seasoning and reverses would be good for the team, which later in the season is to go north to meet the leaders of the collegiate firmament in a possible quest for the national title.

Freshmen-Raleigh High

In their second match of the season the Carolina first year men defeated Raleigh High school, 5-2. Harris, state high school singles champion, and Bridgers gathered Raleigh's only victories.

In the singles matches Harris of Raleigh defeated Dillard, of Carolina, 4-6, 6-2, 6-2; Bennett, Carolina, defeated Lynch, Raleigh, 6-3, 6-3; Bridgers, Raleigh, bested Poe, Carolina, 7-5, 6-4; Dockery, Carolina, won over Rann, Raleigh, 6-3, 6-3; D'Alemberte, Carolina, defeat-

Freshman Tennis

Coach Kenfield requests that all freshmen interested in trying out for the freshman tennis team report to the varsity courts this afternoon. A tournament will be run off, the winners to compose the team.

PHI GAM'S TAKE FENCING CROWN

Defeat Beta's 5-4 Before Largest Crowd Ever To Witness Fencing Match Here.

Phi Gamma Delta replaced the Betas as intramural fencing champions last night by defeating the Betas 5-4 in the fencing room of the Phi Gam House before the largest crowd to witness an intramural bout this year.

Kent Creuser and John Seon led the attack for the Phi Gams with two wins each while Don Waugh turned in two victories to lead the Betas. Creuser and Waugh showed the best form of the match, doing some of the best work ever seen in intramural fencing here. The most spectacular work was done by Seon of Phi Gam. Seon, a newcomer with very little experience, upset the dope by winning two of his three bouts in fine style against the veteran Beta organiztaion.

Herb Brown, last year's winner of the individual fencing title, ran into some hard luck and was unable to win more than one bout. The Phi Gam's caught on to Brown's weaving style of attack and he was held down most of the time.

The All-Campus fencing team will be picked before the end of this week by Director Hendlin, who plans to choose three teams.

Box score:
Phi Gams	W.	L.
Creuser	2	1
Seon	2	1
Pitkin	1	2
Beta Theta Pi	W.	L.
Waugh	2	1
Fenker	1	2

Rifle Club Plans Meets With State and Davidson

For the first time this year the Rifle Club has revived an interest in the war-like sport sufficient to have a meeting Tuesday night with fifteen members present. J. P. Still was elected president for the coming year. His co-officers are: C. W. Duncan, vice-president; B. A. Flusser, secretary; and Thomas Badger, treasurer.

At the same meeting, matches were planned with Davidson, State, and Durham rifle clubs.

The club will meet again on Saturday in the basement of the Alumni building at two-thirty p. m.

LAW ASSOCIATION STOPS FRAME-UPS

Lobdell Elevated President of Association and Langdon Chosen Vice-President.

In a special meeting of the law school association Tuesday morning, a resolution was passed "That the law school association go on record as being opposed to political frame-ups in the law school." A political frame-up was defined as "any combination of students, or student organizations, organized for the purpose of electing any officer, or group of officers, by the method of swapping votes, rather than permitting each individual to vote for the man whom he thinks best qualified to occupy the position, and whom he thinks will most industriously carry out the duties of the position."

A nominating committee, composed of H. B. Parker, chairman, Martin Kellogg, Ambrose Humphry, Seon Felshin, and Wex Malone, was selected and approved by the members to nominate not less than two men for each office of the law school association. After nominations by the committee, further nominations will be made from the floor. Pursuant to the resolution, and the selection of a nominating committee, all contemplated political organizations were abandoned.

At the elections yesterday morning at chapel hour Hugh Lobdell was successful over Mac Grey for the presidency of the law school association. Allen Langston won over Hugh Campbell for the vice-presidency. Hugh Campbell won over Travis Brown and Howard Klutz for secretary-treasurer.

The hardest fight in the election centered on the contest for the student councilman. Paul Boucher was successful in defeating Dallas McLennon and Ed Butler.

Italian Reference Work Obtained By University Library

The library has just received the first seven volumes of the Encyclopedia Italiana. Considered one of the most important encyclopedias to be published within recent years. It is edited by the well known Italian psychologist, Giovanni Gentile and will be complete in thirty-five volumes. This is the first important Italian encyclopedia to be published within half a century.

Although written in the Italian language, this work will be of considerable use to other than those who wish to use it for Italian purposes.

The encyclopedia's most striking feature is its remarkably rich illustrations, which are both finer and more numerous than in any other general encyclopedia. These illustrations are of three kinds: colored plates, sepia rotogravure plates of excellent quality, and text illustrations of high grade, some of which are almost as large as the plates.

The illustrations deal with all subjects, but predominate in the articles on art and localities, where the scenic illustrations are exceptionally fine. In the article on the Alps, for instance, there are thirty-two plates from photographs; in the article on Abruzzo, there are twenty-eight plates covering scenery, architecture, and native costumes. The pictures are especially useful for information about Italian subjects, such as Roman archaeology, Italian art, the classics, etc.

This encyclopedia will be available within a few days in the rotunda of the main reading room.

Perhaps the most important feature of the educational procedure in the Experimental College is the reading of a carefully selected group of books on the various phases of the civilization in question and the writing of weekly reports on the content of the reading. This basic principle Mr. Vivas has unfortunately overlooked in his denunciation. In his rejoinder to Vivas, Meikeljohn says, "Mr. Vivas gives us the impression that discussion is conducted in a vacuum." He is emphatic over the inaccuracy of the report and the failure of the attacker to resolve himself to the problem at hand, why one set of standards has been kept and the other discarded.

Mr. Vivas seems to have happened upon two or three possible scores which support his disapproval of the Experimental College. In making a point of them he has over-looked the main issue. He says nothing of what is being attempted, but stresses a few things that are not being done.

Meikeljohn is a man of great personal magnetism. His personnel is of highest calibre. Together they have attacked a vital problem in education—the question of curriculum for the first two college years. A report is being prepared of the experiences and findings in the Experimental College. Until this is forthcoming we believe undue comment, especially the seemingly unsubstantial type such as Mr. Vivas proffers, to be without justification.

We are in direct sympathy with Doctor Meikeljohn's educational experiments. Certainly they involve the principles we follow now. And if new ones ameliorating these can be formulated so much the better. We at least applaud any attempt whether successful or not to create an educational Utopia.

Forty-Six High Schools Enter Debating Contest

Thursday and Friday of next week forty-six debating teams from secondary schools all over the state will be in Chapel Hill to engage in the final competition for the Aycock Memorial cup. All of the teams entered have won both sides of the question to be argued. The final debate will be held Friday night at eight o'clock.

Conveyors Carry Ford Car Parts

Trains unload in the plant.

Bodies starting through the shop.

Conveyors carry wheels with mounted tires over a line on which cars pass to completion.

The highly important part played by conveyor systems in all Ford Motor Company manufacturing and assembly plants is graphically shown in the above three pictures taken in the recently opened Edgewater, N. J., plant. One of the pictures shows how parts may be unloaded from freight cars within the plant only a few feet from the various assembly lines. Another picture shows automobile bodies starting their trip on a conveyor while the third view is of the conveyor system used to bring wheels to the chasses which are also moving on a conveyor. As indicated in the picture, a constant flow of wheels on which the tires have already been mounted moves around and over the chassis assembly line. As a chassis enters the section, workers, in groups of four, each take a wheel from the hooks and fasten it to the chassis.

due to the absence of President K. C. Ramsay.

The Phi Assembly considered the question of whether they would have a dance or a banquet this quarter. The question arose when Representative Sasser gave the entertainment committee's report. The committee's report favored a banquet for entertainment. At this point Representative Greer put a motion before the assembly favoring the rejection of the committee's recommendation. The motion was passed, and it was decided that a dance should be held instead of a banquet.

Representative Simons gave a report on the committee's recommendation on initiation. The committee's report was accepted by the assembly. It recommended that there not be less than two and not more than three initiation ceremonies each year.

MECHANICAL ENGINEERS ELECT YEAR'S OFFICERS

Tuesday night at seven-thirty the local branch of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers held its regular meeting in room 206 of Phillips hall. The meeting was opened with an address by N. P. Bailey on "Soaring Flight."

The business part of the meeting consisted of the election of officers for the next year. E. L. Midgett was elected president; R. T. Burnett, vice-president; B. Kendall, treasurer; and Van Kenyon, secretary.

It has been decided that the senior class in mechanical engineering will go to the national meeting this year at Birmingham, Alabama. Professor E. G. Hoefer will accompany the class which will leave for the national meeting April 20.

Horse racing is still a favorite in old Maryland and the gambling instinct often becomes an obsession to those who follow it. A devotee of the track, may, as the wind blows, be on top of the pile or he may be crushed by it; he may pass from periods of well-calculated respectability to periods of extreme depravity; he may become a pillar of the community or he may become a public charge. But regardless of where fate may lead him he is "always a bettin' man."

The author tells us that the path of his particular friend of the play has led him to Sykesville, Maryland's state hospital for the insane. But some insist that his residence in that place is merely an arbitrary adjustment, that he is still his old time self, still true to Lady Luck, and still the best of company—an admirable tribute to his profession.

The casts for the productions are as follows:

Ever' Snitch.

Henry Jeffcoat (fisherman), Donald Wood; Huldy (his wife), Marian Tatum; Laura Bickles (a neighbor), Muriel Wolfe; Tom Gatlin (a fish dealer), Evan Vaughn; and the Widow's small son, Bobby Koch.

The Blue Remembered Hills.

Peter, Robert Lankford; Richard, James Queen; Thomas, Samuel Peace; Jerry, Robert Reid; David, William Harris.

A Very Pale Pink Angel.

The Pink Angel, Ellen Stewart; The Man, Ralph Westerman; The Cherub, Charles Keener; The Driver of the Celestial Bus, Robert Proctor.

"Wee Willie" Powell's pick-up of Morse's hopper in the fourth inning brought the crowd to its feet. Willie turned a sure hit into only another time at bat.

Pat Pattisall, starting his first game, caught beautifully, steadying Hinton down when the going got tough.

Powell is one of the toughest men to pitch to. Waud, the starting Tiger pitcher, threw seven balls before he cut the plate on Powell.

The umpire got it in the neck again yesterday. The Princeton boys, led by Muldaur Squawked on every doubtful play, but they might as well have been trying to knock down Gibralter and they would have had as much success. In a professional ball game, half of the Tiger team wouldn't have lasted ten minutes.

FORTY MEMBERS TAR HEEL STAFF ENJOY BANQUET

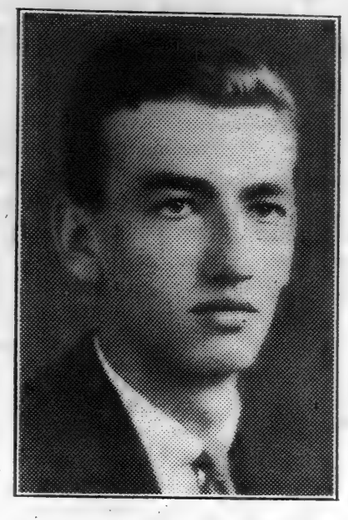
Editorial and Business Departments Honor Retiring Editor And Business Manager.

The combined editorial and business staff of forty members of the Daily Tar Heel gathered in the private dining room of the Carolina Inn last night for a banquet in honor of the retiring editor and business manager of the paper. It was the first occasion of its kind in the thirty-eight years of the Tar Heel's existence. Charlie Rose, who has been news editor of the paper for the past year acted as toastmaster. Short talks were made by Dan Kelly, representing the reporters, K. C. Ramsay, retiring sports editor, John Manning, the new business manager, Ed French, newly elected managing editor, Pat Patterson, retiring business manager, Will Yarborough, retiring editor, and finally Jack Dungan, the new editor, who announced the temporary staff promotions for the coming year.

Will Yarborough in his last talk before the staff of the paper he has worked on for four years stressed three things. First he wanted it made known to the campus where the money they spend goes, secondly, he wanted the staff members to wage a fight against the curtailment of student privileges, and finally, said that one should work with the Daily Tar Heel not for honor and glory but for pleasure and experience, stressing that it was a distinct honor to be on the staff, even if one was only a reporter.

Jack Dungan told a little of his plans for the paper during the next year and stressed the fact that members must work for any promotion they may secure, as the responsible positions on the paper were to go only to efficient and capable men. The staff for the next year as announced by the new editor will be found in the masthead.

LECTURE SERIES IS PLANNED BY LAW ASSOCIATION



Coates, Van Hecke, and McCormick to Explain Relation of School to College.

A series of three lectures have been planned by the directors of the University law school association for the purpose of illustrating to students now in the law school and those planning to enter the school the interrelation of law courses with the regular college courses, and to show men now in college and planning to enter the law school the direct bearing of certain courses on the law school course.

The first of this series of lectures will be given Monday night, April 13, at seven-thirty o'clock in the first year room of the law building. Professor Albert Coates will speak on the subject of "Crime and Punishment." The subjects of the other lectures, which will be given at a date to be announced later, are "The Chief Justiceship of William Howard Taft," by Professor M. T. Van Hecke, and "Science in the Court Room," by Dean Charles T. McCormick.

Anyone interested is invited to attend this series.

In Charge of Daily Tar Heel Next Year

Pictured above are the three men who will control the policies of the Daily Tar Heel for the year 1931-32. They are Ed French, managing-editor; Jack Dungan, editor; and John Manning, business manager. This issue is the first to be put out by the new editorial management. The newly-appointed business manager does not go into office until next fall.

SPRING FESTIVAL DANCES TO OPEN IN GYM TONIGHT

Five Fraternities Are Staging One of Outstanding Social Events of Quarter.

Bynum gymasium decorated in blue and white will be the scene of a merry gathering this week-end as members of five fraternities participate in the annual Spring Festival. Pi Kappa Phi, Alpha Tau Omega, Pi Kappa Alpha, Phi Gamma Delta, and Phi Delta Theta have joined in planning the occasion, one of the gayest of spring events on the campus.

The enticing music of Mike Speciale and His Crusaders will draw the several hundred participants and their guests to the New Moon Ball, first of a series of three dances which will be given tonight from nine to one. This will be followed Saturday afternoon from four to seven by the Sunset Dansant while the Dance of the Shadows from nine to twelve Saturday evening will consumate the set.

Sponsors for the event will be Miss Nell Adams, High Point, sponsor for Pi Kappa Phi; Miss Kitty Boddie, Louisburg, for Phi Gamma Delta; Miss Frances Stowe, Charlotte, for Phi Delta Theta; Miss Em Green, Wilmington, for Pi Kappa Alpha; and Miss Julia Orr, Charlotte, for Alpha Tau Omega.

Ten men, two from each fraternity are in charge of arrangements. Pi Kappa Phi is represented by George Newman, chairman, and Pitt Davis; Phi Gamma Delta by Bill Bliss, secretary, and Arthur Flemming; Phi Delta Theta by Moseley Fonvielle, treasurer, and Ted McLaughlin; Pi Kappa Alpha by Ed French and Ward Thompson; and Alpha Tau Omega by Barron Grier and Jones Pollard.

Period of Silence To Start Tonight

John Phil Cooper, secretary of the Interfraternity Council announces that a strict period of silence for the spring quarter starts at six o'clock tonight and ends Sunday at six p. m. when the rushees will be permitted to go to the fraternity of their choice and be pledged. During this period of silence all the rules of the fall quarter will be in effect.

Playmakers Produce Bill of Four Plays

Last night four plays, products of the University course in playwriting, English 31, were presented in the Playmaker's Theatre before an audience of appreciative students and townspeople.

Ever' Snitch, the first on the bill, is a comedy of our Carolina fisher-folk by Irene Fussler of Chapel Hill. Not since The Playmakers produced Off Nag's Head by Douglas MacMillan eleven years ago has there been a play dealing with the interesting characters living among the dunes of our shifting coastline.

Theodore Herman of Lancaster, Pennsylvania, has given a sympathetic study of college youth in The Blue Remembered Hills. Ellen Stewart, of Camden, South Carolina, is the authoress of a whimsical satire, A Very Pale Pink Angel. Tom Loy, of Hagerstown, Maryland, is the author of the comedy, Always A Bettin' Man.

This bill, presenting four new playwrights, is to be repeated tonight and tomorrow night.

DELTA SIGMA PI HEARS BRADSHAW

Francis F. Bradshaw, dean of students, spoke before the first spring quarter smoker given by Delta Sigma Pi, professional commerce fraternity Tuesday night.

Dean Bradshaw's topic was "Business and Ethics." He pointed out that the inhabitants of the world can be divided into three classes: those who leave the thical standards and conventions of the world as they find them, those who attempt to pull them lower, and those who attempt to raise them.

He went on further to say that although the latter course is the most difficult, the individual will derive the greatest satisfaction out of following it. When the speaker applied these observations to the business man, he stated that the principles were particularly pertinent because of the important position occupied by this type of professional man.

SOCIAL SERVICE STUDENTS CHOOSE MOORE PRESIDENT

Mr. Comer and Billy McKee Attend State Conference at Goldsboro.

Beverly Moore, a member of the senior class of the University was elected president for the coming year of the student section of the North Carolina Social Service conference which met in Goldsboro Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday of this week. Other student officers were S. B. Hines of State college, vice president; and Martha Davis, of Salem, secretary.

The student section of the conference convening for the first time as an official body had its first meeting Monday night. Representatives were present from Duke, State, Meredith, Queens-Chicora, Salem, N. C. C. W. and Carolina. Harry F. Comer and Billy McKee were the representatives from the University. State College had the largest number of representatives.

During the Monday night section which was presided over by the president, Elouise Banning of N. C. C. W., Dr. W. A. Stanbury, pastor of the Duke Memorial Church, Durham, and Mr. W. C. Jackson, vice-president of N. C. C. W., were the speakers. Dr. Stanbury told what he thought the responsibility of the church was towards social betterment in the matter of the evils in the new industrialism, in the crime situation, and in attitude towards war. The essence of Mr. Jackson's address was that before people could hope to make social progress we must first know the facts.

The student division again met Tuesday morning in a joint meeting with the minister section. Professor J. M. Ormand of Duke University, was the only scheduled speaker who was present, and he gave some very interesting and surprising facts about the relation of the country church towards rural progress. He thought that the country had a great field and a great opportunity which they were not making use of. The fact that there are too many rural churches, that they are poorly equipped, insufficiently financed, and unsuitable located for the reasons the speaker gave for the present situation. Mr. Comer and Dr. Roy Brown, both of Carolina, also spoke at the meeting, along with several of

According to the latest figures the University's appropriation for each of the next two years will be $724,000. These figures are not final, however, as this is only the figure set by the house appropriations committee. This is a reduction of $76,000, the previous figures being $800,000. The recommendation of the house appropriations committee has not yet reached the floors of either the senate or the house.

The original budget bill called for $573,000, for the University, the joint appropriations committee raising it to $875,000 and later reduced it to $800,000. Since then there has been a struggle in the committee between members who favor curtailing the state's educational program and those who favor an increased appropriation.

PLANS ARE MADE FOR SENIOR WEEK

List of Men Who Are to Speak To Graduating Class Not Decided Yet.

At the meeting last Tuesday afternoon of the committee in charge of senior week it was decided tentatively that the annual Senior Week should occur the week following the Human Relations Institute.

The class of '31 will begin its farewell activities by donning the usual senior regalia during the progress of the week. It is planned that the insignia this year will consist of flannel jackets. Negotiations are already being made to procure the jackets in order to insure a uniform appearance.

Last year the insignia worn by the proud and dignified members of the graduating class was a white sleveless sweater upon which the Carolina colors were pinned. A very colorful effect is noticed every spring with the seniors promenading in their gayly-colored coats.

According to the long-established custom the campus will be nominally ruled by the seniors for the brief term of five days. During that time there will be many events sponsored by the class or held for its benefit.

Last year talks were held each evening under the Davie Poplar by various prominent men. Among the men addressing the graduating class last year were President Chase and Dr. R. D. W. Connor. This year the same program is to be followed in regard to the talks for members of the senior class exclusively each evening at seven-thirty under Davie Poplar. Speakers for these occasions have not been announced, but the subjects for these addresses will probably deal mainly with such topics as philosophy, business, vocations, and social problems.

Besides this series of talks there will be numbers of benches placed at strategic points about the campus in the attempt to promote friendly gatherings among the members of the graduating class. These benches will be painted in the class colors, maroon and white.

The chairman of the committee attending to the plans for this week's activities is Clyde Dunn. Assisting him on this committee are Will Yarborough, Kermit Wheary, Charles de Wolfe, Bill Lindsay, and Bert Haywood.

PHI BETA KAPPA SOCIETY TAKES IN TWENTY-FOUR

Dr. H. Van P. Wilson Addresses Group on Teachers He Has Known.

At the meeting of Phi Beta Kappa, honorary scholastic fraternity, last night, Joe Eagles, president, presided and Beverly Moore, secretary, read out the list of men who were elected to this society. Dr. Henry Van Peters Wilson, who has been an outstanding and active member of this organization, addressed the public meeting citing several outstanding teachers he has known and studied under.

The first teacher mentioned was a certain Morbin, who taught Latin and Greek, of whom he said, "Morbin realized that all boys are martyrs." Dr. Wilson also quoted Dr. Huxley, outstanding English scientist, when he said, "Science is fundamentally based on experimentation." Dr. Wilson says, "It was while studying under Ira Ranson, leading American chemist, that I first found out the difference between generalized facts and explanatory theorys. The former changes gradually with experimentation and new discoveries while the latter changes quickly due to a discovery which changes the entire theory. He further said, "Students are hardened and do not like to accept new facts about anything."

The following men were elected:

TWO PROGRAMS ARE SCHEDULED FOR NEXT YEAR

"Beggar's Opera" and "Irish Players" Are Definitely on Entertainment List.

As yet the entertainment committee has not made many definite plans for the programs to be presented next year. However the Beggar's Opera and the Irish Players have been gotten for the program. Both of these companies have long been sought after and the committee considers itself fortunate in having secured them.

In the past the committee has employed the system of having the students vote on a list of entertainments in order to show their preference.

Now it is thought that the voting plan will be abolished in favor of an expression of student opinion through representation of the student body or the committee. The best plan according to Dean A. W. Hobbs, is to allow the committee a free rein, in order that they may get what is best in their opinion when it is available.

At present the committee is holding off to see if the engineering and commerce schools are going to come in. If they do, it would permit the committee to obtain the finest entertainments that may be offered anywhere. It is rumored that the committee may raise the price of the entertainments to a dollar and a half per quarter so that this may be accompolished regardless of the entrance of the two schools into the proposition.

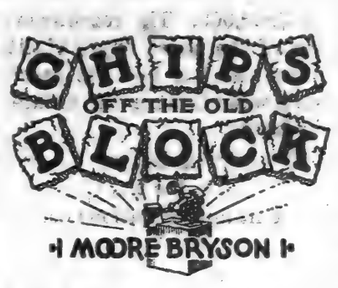
An Editor's Credo

Most college editors enter upon their new duties with a zeal and inspiration that characterizes most young men. They conceive great crusades for student rights (just as if there were student rights apart from the rights of all men). They revolve in their heads collossal schemes for the betterment of their institutions, their political and geographical divisions, or the race of man. This and more—some feel that they have on their shoulders a mantle which calls for great and noble deeds.

These editors struggle with the average college audience for some few weeks and gradually sink down to the level of mankind which rebels at crusades, looks at reformers, and has no use for radicals.



Taking this valuable lesson from those men who have preceded us, we enter our office with no radical ideas whatsoever, with no intention of recreating a world which is a pretty good one, and with no fervor for political, social, or ethical upheavals.

We are pledged to see that the Tar Heel grows—that it takes its rightful place among the important college dailies in the United States, and further that each issue as it comes from the presses is absolutely the best that could have been accomplished by an intelligently trained and fair-minded staff working in harmony for a better University and a more productive and comfortable life.

The Daily Tar Heel is the property of the entire student body, with each member of the student body as a member of a giant board of directors which is in control of the paper. The duty of the editorship is to interpret the will of the largest number of the student body. Loudspoken minorities will have their hearing, but we shall attempt to maintain a logical and sane balance, refraining from being influenced by the hysteria of the moment, but rather by the lasting and significant needs of the student body and the community.

Convinced that a thing is right, the editor will refuse to soft-pedal any issue in order that he may more comfortably come and go upon the campus. There will be no truckling to individuals.

Finally, we shall devote our time in an effort to bring about an even more logical and sane interpretation of the events which happen to transpire here.

What Ho! and the merry days of spring are once more with us. At least, it looks as if this weather will stay with us for a few days. (It will probably be raining again by the time you read this, that is, if you do read this.) The law school will again start basking itself between classes; the girls will take their place in the sun, and gin will become the popular drink. Dear, dear, and why shouldn't I be bright and gay with such an outlook?

The old law building on Henderson street is now a thing of the past. The wreckers and the town council have taken away another old land mark. Well, quite a few changes have taken place since I arrived on the old campus. (Echo from the rear—Yes, they were starting to build Old East when you made your debut as a freshman.)

Paul Story seems to resent people who whistle or sing such songs as "Gimme a little kiss, will yuh, huh?" and "Kiss Waltz" within his hearing. I didn't realize that Brother Story had such a sensitive, aesthetic nature. There must be some other reason.

N. C. C. W. sent its share of fair visitors to Chapel Hill during the Easter holidays. I managed to meet a couple of them most every morning in Patterson's over our tomato juice, and thus began another day.

One of the visitors, whom I shall call "Beautiful" for short, had a date with one of our leading humorists and punsters. After listening to such things as "I have never seen a fouler girl," she decided that she had had enough. She told him that it was five minutes of one and that she had to go home. The future editor realized the truth in her remarks, so he did as he was asked. After getting back to the house he found that her watch had said five minutes after eleven instead of five minutes of one.

What, oh whot, is this town coming to? Not so many nights ago I saw a girl in the Waffle Shop in flowing, blue pajamas, and a few minutes ago I saw some goof on Franklin Street in pajamas which were not so flowing and not so blue. If the fad increases, I wonder what the girl who wears a night gown is going to do.

The report is abroad that Emmie Frances Polliell had a telephone call Wednesday night from some boy who claimed to be one of her admirers of last year. The boy refused to give his name, saying that she should know it without being told, and Emmie Frances is still wondering the identity of the person with whom she talked for thirty minutes.

Imagine the law school resolving to keep politics out of its elections and then carrying out that noble resolution. There just isn't anything that a columnist can say about a thing like that.

Now that my old friend and running mate, Wex Malone, has started to write a column, I will be unable to tell any more absent-minded stories for he will have too good an opportunity to come back at me.

OPEN FORUM

Anent The New Education

Editor The Daily Tar Heel:

I am glad to see the Tar Heel taking an interest in educational matters as is shown by the number of articles appearing on the editorial page. I hope however that the time will come when more of them will be written by students here.

In the discussions of educational matters we all should remember that experience must have a part as well as mere theory. Many fine theories go to pot from sheer inertia. I believe it was Jefferson who said something to the effect that those people are best governed who are least governed. He knew about this inertia business. If the Russian experiment can survive too much government it may work, but it has a hard road ahead to keep the people up to the high pitch necessary to carry out such a program. People get tired of being rushed here and there, being made to sign up for this and that, in short they get terribly bored with too much government. The same thing applies in education. We may think out in the seclusion of our rooms very fine schemes of education. They are all doomed to failure because they all proceed on the assumption that there exists some ideal machinery of education whereby every thing will go smoothly and every student will be guaranteed an education if he will conform. The gods may know about it. The central point in all education is that we must all get it ourselves by digging in, it can come no other way. We may pass some courses but we cannot even get on the road to an education until we are willing to pay the price of individual effort. Examinations or no examinations, two-hour classes or one hour classes or no classes at all, tutors, honors, courses, reading periods or what not, the central fact remains that we are not going to get any education unless we are willing to put out for it. When we are ready to do that then nothing can keep us from some kind of worth while education.

I write this letter merely to encourage our students to think about the educational problem and write about it if they will, but not to put too much faith in any scheme which it is thought will open up the royal road to learning. There is no royal road and it is just as well that there is not. A few years ago Dean Hibbard offered a plan to the students which I thought was a good one, whereby those who thought themselves being sufficiated in the mass of mediocrity could escape into the elysian fields of freedom where there would be no class attendance at all. A student was to go his own way and dig in to his heart's content. When this was announced we all expected to see the plan swamped with applicants. On the contrary the intellectuals who had been doing all the talking about the present stupid system somehow silently stole away and, I suppose, all went back to the poor makeshift of courses and credits as being the line of least resistance. We must not put our faith in any kind of machinery of education. It would work fine if the students would set out to educate themselves, but then we would not need the machinery.

A. W. HOBBS.

Declaration Of Independence

In deciding to allow entrance credit in subjects which do not conform exactly with the College Board Requirements, the University of California adopts an excellent solution to a perennial problem. Unable to change the rigidity of the board system, California follows other colleges in declaring its emancipation from this restrictive mechanism.

Although the general clamor against the narrowing influence of College Board Examinations on school curricula has been fully justified, some colleges have been less rigorous than is often supposed in their adherence to board standards. In special instances Princeton has granted credit for work in non-theoretical music; through the New Plan of admission Harvard, Yale, and other universities allow considerable latitude in the choice of subjects presented for entrance.

Schools cannot provide the best educational opportunities, as schoolmasters continually explain, if they are strait-jacketed by college admission requirements. The entrance examination system by its very nature can never be really flexible, but colleges can neutralize its restrictive influence by allowing credit for subjects outside its narrow range. By its recent decision California joins a number of Eastern colleges in taking a liberal attitude on the question. This stand indicates that colleges are recognizing more completely what they can do to offset limitations which a strictly interpreted examination system places on secondary schools—Harvard Crimson.

A College Man's Budget

An alumnus—he has been an alumnus for three months now—remarked the other day that there were a good many men in college now who would be surprised at the total of their budget when they got out of school—surprised because it would be so much smaller than their present expenses. He was suffering from exactly that thing at the time.

Sellers consider the college market a gullible one. College men are to them free and easy buyers. They are most of them partly or wholly irresponsible for the source of their income; they have not learned intimately the pressure of working for every cent they spend.

Of course, exaggerated pictures have been painted of the super-wealthy college man, but even though they may be partially false, there is enough truth in them to warrant a little hesitancy on the part of the college man who thinks his lot is too hard.

The college man will make apologies for these extraordinary expenses, and he will probably list, among other things, the following items of his budget that he will not have to pay when he is out of school:

Fraternity bills—from $20 to $60.

Honorary initiation fees—from $5 to $20.

College dances from $2 to $15.

College fees—from $20 to $125.

Transportation to school—from $5 to $40 monthly.

The college man is likely to find all these expense items cut out completely, and a lot more items down considerably—less money for collegiate clothes, for collegiate dates, for collegiate "good times," and so on.

The alumnus was right. It will be quite a "come-down" for a great many collegians to start paying rent, taxes, board and all petty expenses from a starting salary of $30 or $40 a week, after Dad's elastic monthly check.—Daily Bruin.

HAMRICK PRESIDENT OF THIRD YEAR LAW CLASS

At a called meeting of the third year law class the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: F. D. Hamrick, president; C. C. Cates, vice-president; Howard Klutz, secretary and treasurer; Dave Craig, sergeant-at-arms; Naomi Alexander, sponsor of the law school baseball team; Cicero Lobdell, mascot of the law school baseball team.

The highly revelatory clothes era ended just in time to keep the girls from utlizing cellophane.—Arkansas Gazette.

Ashmore Leads Baseball Squad On Northern Tour

Team Will Meet Five Southern Conference and Tri-State League Foes.

SEVENTEEN MAKE TRIP

Tar Heels Handicapped by Lack Of Practice Due to Rainy Weather.

Coach Jim Ashmore, Manager Art Sickles and a squad of seventeen baseball players from the University left here last night on a week's Northern tour which will carry them against five strong Southern Conference and Tri-State League foes.

Maryland, tied for the lead in the Tri-State, will be met at College Park Friday, with the first of the annual three-game series with Virginia to follow at Charlottesville Saturday. After a rest on Sunday the Tar Heels will jump back across the mountains to play Washington and Lee and V. M. I., both at Lexington on Monday and Tuesday, winding up at V. P. I. on Wednesday.

The seventeen players Coach Ashmore picked for this hard trip were: Captain Potter and Pattisall, catchers; House, Peacock, Blythe and Croom, outfielders; Dunlap, Wyrick, Ferebee, Powell, Leonard and Moore, infielders; and Longest, Edwards, Shields, Hinton and Griffiith pitchers.

Longest, Shields and Edwards have all been rested since last Friday, and Coach Ashmore will probably rely most on these three veteran right-handers of the Tar Heel mound corps. Which one of the trio will start at Maryland, however, hasn't been decided.

The Tar Heels will be handicapped by lack of practice as they fare forth on the tour, for five of nine games scheduled to date have been rained out, and there hasn't been a chance for much practice. The team hit and fielded well in opening victories over such Northern leaders as Cornell and Pennsylvania, but in its one previous Tri-State League start, it was an easy prey for Pitcher Williams and the hard-hitting Washington and Lee Club, 8-2.

Symphony Orchestra To Play for Children

For some time the department of music has been engaged in working out a plan whereby the children of the Chapel Hill schools might hear a series of two or three concerts played by the University Symphony Orchestra, or a selected group of musicians from that organization. Miss Katheryn Brown, teacher of school music in Chapel Hill has been preparing the children for these concerts by a series of lessons of explaination utilizing pictures of the instruments in conjunction with the phonograph.

The date of the first concert has not been set but it is planned for the near future. There will probably be one concert in April and at least one other during May. Music suitable for the development of the power of appreciation among the children will be utilized with the various instruments individually and in groups being featured for special teaching purposes. Professor Harold S. Dyer is working with Miss Brown on the plan and will direct the concerts.

INTERSCHOLASTIC TRACK MEET SET FOR THIS MONTH

Nineteenth Annual Meet for High Schools Will Take Place April 17.

The nineteenth annual interscholastic track meet for North Carolina high school will be run off at the University April 17. The complete list of high schools that will enter teams is not yet known but it is thought that the entries will not be less than those of previous years.

The committee in charge of this annual affair is composed of N. W. Walker, chairman, C. G. Credle, R. A. Fetzer, H. D. Meyer, J. P. Moore, E. R. Grumman, J. R. Hawkins, and W. F. Warren.

In the eighteen years of competition only five schools in the state have won the championship. In 1913, the first year that the meet was held, High Point High School won. For the next seven years straight the Friendship high school won the meet. Since then the Charlotte high school has held the championship except in 1928 when the Greensboro high school took the trophy.

The program consists of fourteen events, the usual thirteen in a regular track meet and a relay event. Ison of Charlotte high school is the only man to hold more than one individual record, holding the fastest time in the hundred yard and two-twenty yard dashes. His time for the hundred is ten and a tenth seconds and two-twenty in twenty-two and three fifth seconds.

COMMUNITY CLUB LISTS PROGRAMS FOR THIS SEASON

The bulletin of the Chapel Hill Community Club for the coming season includes events of varied interest.

The citizenship department will meet Wednesday, April 7, at three-thirty o'clock in the Episcopal parish house. The Garden Club will meet at eight o'clock, April 8, in Davie Hall.

A representative of the Morrison-Neese Furniture Company of Greensboro will talk on "Interior Decorating" at a regular meeting Tuesday, April 14, in the social rooms of the Methodist church.

The two final programs of the year, which will culminate the year's activities, will be the program of modern Spanish music rendered by Mrs. T. Smith McCorkle on April 15 in the music building and a review of Selma Lagerlof's "The Ring of the Lowenskolds," by Mrs. J. H. Valentine.

TAR BABIES WIN FROM WINSTON BY SCORE OF 17-10

Contest Turns Into Slugging Fest; Visiting Hurler Allows 19 Hits But Fans 11.

In one of the most listless games played this year, the Tar Baby nine won its second straight victory, trouncing the Winston-Salem team by the score of 17-10, on the freshman field Wednesday afternoon, Yerton, who started the game for the Tar Babies, worked a nice game for the first five innings, and allowed five hits but kept them well scattered. Clodbetter, the visiting hurler, although touched for nineteen hits, fanned eleven men and got a triple himself.

Coach Sapp used twenty-two men during the whole game and Phipps, Parker, Matheson, and McIver were the hitting stars. John Phipps drove a terrific homer into left field late in the game while Mabel Matheson, the redheaded catcher, had three hard singles for four attempts. Voss, visiting first baseman was the big gun for the losers, getting a double and a single, and on top of that he made a remarkable catch of a foul fly in the fifth inning which was nothing short of a miracle.

The Tar Babies have another game Saturday with the Campbell College team and this is expected to be a real test of the team's strength. So far the season's record of the yearlings shows a lost to Wardlaw and victories over both Roanoke Rapids and Winston-Salem. The team is anxious to win tomorrow and with two days of hard practice it should give the opposition some real trouble.

The game with Winston-Salem began with each team scoring two runs in the first stanza and was rather close. The visitors bumped Strickland and Crouch for five runs in the fifth. Then the Tar Babies came back with six runs in their half and then in the eight sewed the game up with four runs.

After the game Coach Sapp seemed satisfied with the hitting of the team but was seemingly irked at the work of the players afield. There was a total of at least six official errors recorded and the players made several "bonehead" plays which can only be cured by a lot of hard practice.

There seems to be a wealth of material at the disposal of the coaches and before the season ends there should have been ample time for each man on the squad to have shown his stuff and a very powerful nine rounded into shape. The pitching department seems to be the most uncertain at present. Yerton showed good form yesterday and should develop, and Elon Crouch has been doing some good work. Outside of these two men nothing definite is known.

The summary of Wednesday's game is as follows:

Winston-Salem	10	13	4
N. C. Freshmen	17	19	6

Batteries: Clodfetter, Reed, and Carter; Yerton, Strickland, Crouch and Parker, Matheson.

GRANT WILL NOT ENTER SOUTHERN MEET THIS YEAR

Carolina Net Ace Picks Hines And Sutter as Outstanding Southern Prospects.

Bryan Grant, ace of the powerful University of North Carolina tennis team, will abdicate the southern amateur throne this year and leave the field wide open to all comers for the first time since 1927.

The 64-inch sophomore announced during the course of a radio speech last night that he does not plan to defend the Dixie title he has held for three consecutive years. He said, however, that he would compete again in the national clay court tourney, which he won in 1930.

Grant, who ranks tenth on the national list, was a speaker on one of Chuck Collins "B. C. Sports Revue" programs broadcast by Sation WPTF in Raleigh. He told his audience he rated Bill Tilden as the greatest player of all time, although he himself had held the tall Philadelphian to close scores in two matches.

Grant said he rather believed the court master was toying with him on those occasions.

The hardest match he ever played, said Grant, was against Cliff Sutter, national intercollegiate champion, in the finals of the southern tournament last year.

It was played in the broiling sun through five hard, close sets. Grant won, as he has be-jinxed the college champion every time they have ever met.

Grant picked Clifford Sutter, intercollegiate champ and Wilmer Hines, Junior Singles Champion, as the outstanding youngsters in Southern tennis today.

Wilmer Hines, Carolina's national junior champ, also a sophomore, and Coach John Kenfield made short talks as part of the program. Coach Kenfield, for 15 years a professional and coach, made interesting observations on his conception of tennis as a sport.

Kenfield said he always has advised his proteges to go out for a major sport in addition to tennis, but he thought golf and tennis would give them pleasure and enjoyment in later life, long after they're too old to be a halfback or a sprinter. To that end he supervises 40 tennis courts at the University and gives individual instruction to a large squad of ambitious hopefuls.

PHI KAPPA SIGMA PLANS MAY DANCE

The Carolina Inn ballroom will be the scene of a dance held by the Phi Kappa Sigma fraternity Friday night, May 15. This is the second affair given by this group during this year and will be the final dance staged by the fraternity in this quarter.

Jelly Leftwich and his University Club orchestra has been secured by the committee in charge of arrangements to furnish the music for the occasion.

As the second unit in the series of two dances offered by the Phi Kappa Sigma and Kappa Alpha fraternities will come the tea dance of Kappa Alpha fraternity the following afternoon. This function will also take place in the ballroom of the Carolina Inn and Leftwich will play.

Trackmen Entrain For Georgia Tech Tonight

ATLANTA HIGH TO MEET FRESHMEN IN TENNIS TODAY

Georgia School Will Invade Chapel Hill for Brace of Matches.

The Atlanta Boys High tennis team, runners-up for the Southern title last year, with two veterans back and added strength by the addition of an extra star in Billy Reese, will invade Chapel Hill this weekend for a brace of matches with the Carolina Frosh and with the Varsity Reserves.

The Frosh will probably be met at 3 o'clock this afternoon, the Varsity Reserves at 3 o'clock Saturday afternoon, although the order may be reversed.

The Carolina Frosh in their previous matches beat Wake Forest Yearlings 9-0 and Raleigh High 5-2. The top four who will be picked to play the strong Boys High team will probably be Dillard, Shuford, Morgan and Dockery.

For the varsity reserves the lineup will probably be Phil Liskin, Captain Ed Graham, Lenoir Wright and Lucas Abels.

The Carolina Frosh also have a return date with Wake Forest's Frosh for the weekend. If Boys High is met here Friday the Baby Deacons will be played at Wake Forest Saturday, or if the Freshman matches with Boys High are set for Saturday, Wake Forest will be met there Friday.

Tar Heels Hold 104-27 Win Over Atlanta Cinder Squad; Tech Without Eddie Hamm.

CAROLINA STRONG IN POLE VAULT

Clash With V. P. I. Next on Schedule; Contest Is Set for April 18.

Carolina's Southern Conference track champions will leave Chapel Hill tonight for Atlanta where they will meet the strong Georgia Tech cinder squad Saturday afternoon. Last year the Tar Heels swamped the Techmen by a score of 104 to 27 in their second meet of the season, but the boys from the "Flats" of Atlanta are said to have a much stronger team this year and are out for revenge.

Tech will be without Eddie Hamm, the great broad jumper who led their scoring last spring, but they still have enough veterans left over to make things interesting if the new material lives up to early promise. Doug Graydon, the boy who has been doing such outstanding work with the javelin for the past few years, will be one of the veterans back. Graydon, along with Hamm, accounted for the majority of Tech's points last year.

The Tar Heels will present their greatest strength in the pole vault where Brodie Arnold

ILLINOIS UNION IS WIDELY USED

It Is Estimated That About Six Thousand Attend Union Functions.

A topic of interest to University students now that the long-deferred completion of the Graham Memorial building is about to be finished pertains to the uses of the student union building at the University of Illinois. It has been estimated by the manager of the building that an average of more than 4,000 students enters the building daily and some 6,500 different students attend various functions at the Union each month.

The purpose of this building is "to provide a center for university life, a place where students can meet and mingle in comradeship, and where factional lines are not recognized."

"The Heart of Illinois," as the Union is called, is a veritable beehive of student activities. The basement floor houses the offices of the different campus publications and the publishing offices of the university press.

A cooperative book exchange is another feature of the union where the students sell their used books and find those they desire in return.

There are two sections to the Illinois Union, one the Union itself, and the other the Union Arcade. The first floor of the former is given over to the different lounge rooms, reading rooms, and an auditorium seating 300 persons. On the main floor are maintained military stores, information desks, a soda fountain, a tailor shop, and a public stenographic bureau.

In the Arcade building is located a large ballroom in which the Union holds weekly dances. There is also a banquet hall devoted to the various civic functions.

The uses of this building are divided between special events include such things as elections, and conventions of outside groups.

Such a varied list of uses to which the Union may be submitted demonstrates the high degree of efficiency that is evinced by the concentration under a single roof of such a large number of interests and activities.

the students.

The last student session took place Wednesday morning when Dr. E. C. Branson, head of the rural social economics department of the University, spoke on "Achieving Citizenship." According to Dr. Branson the four essentials of citizenship are (1) generous, genuine interest in the whole community, (2) to be competently acquainted with affairs in county and community, (3) to have civic courage, and (4) to be a home or farm owner. It was at this meeting that the offices for next year were elected.

The officers of the main conference for the next year are Mrs. W. B. Waddill, of Henderson, president; Dr. S. H. Hobbs, of Chapel Hill, first vice-president; N. C. Newbold of Raleigh, second vice-president; J. S. Holmes, of Raleigh, treasurer, and Miss Gertrude Weil, of Goldsboro, secretary.

Dashiell Lectures At N. Y. University

Dr. J. F. Dashiell, head of the department of psychology at the University, appeared before a meeting of the Psychology Association of New York University last Saturday as guest lecturer. The subject of his address was "Some Revisions of Psychological Theory Based on Recent Experimental Findings."

Dr. Dashiell is at present engaged in a series of lectures and addresses before some of the leading schools of the East. He is to appear before psychological groups at Vassar and at the University of Virginia in the near future.

As an exponent of the behaviorist school of psychologists he discussed and analysed the theories of behaviorism. He gave the results of some recent experimental research work he has been carrying on along these lines.

Following the meeting Dr. Dashiell was the guest of honor at an informal tea held by the faculty and staff of the psychology department of New York University.

German Measles Very Prevalent in March

During the month of March German measles was the most prevalent contagious disease, according to the report of the city health officer. The cases were as follows: German measles 119, measles twelve, syphilis two, gonorrhea one, pneumonia two, scarlet fever two, and whooping cough three, making a total of 142 cases. Students of the University accounted for fifty-two of these, as there were thirty-nine cases of German measles, eleven of measles, and two of pneumonia among the University boys. Among the white population there were two births and no deaths, while colored birth numbered three and deaths three. Causes of deaths were: tubercolosis one, syphilis one, and still-born one.

For the first week of April sixty-seven cases have been reported. Measles is at the top of the list, there being forty cases. The others were: German measles twenty-one, chicken pox four, scarlet fever one, and whooping cough one. Only eight cases came from University students. German measles are still very prevalent over the state; nineteen hundred new cases having been reported in Durham county alone.

Plessow To Discuss Modern Germany

Gustav Plessow, the German scholar now visiting Chapel Hill, will deliver several lectures before local students and faculty members. The subject of his main address will be "The Features of German Life of Today." This address will be delivered May 12, at eight-thirty in Gerrard hall.

Any students or faculty members who would like for Mr. Plessow to discuss any particular feature of his subject in his lecture should write to him at the home of Professor E. W. Zimmerman, 508 Pittsboro street. Mr. Plessow has asked that all requests for a discussion on any particular feature be mailed to him by April 15.

His engagements include those at Castle Farms, Cincinnati, Bamboo Gardens in Cleveland, and Young's Million Dollar Pier in Atlantic City.

President Frank Graham and his sister and hostess, Miss Kate Graham, will head the list of chaperones for the Festival which includes Dr. and Mrs. W. S. Bernard, T. F. Hickerson, Dr. and Mrs. W. F. Prouty, Dr. and Mrs. A. C. McIntosh, Mrs. F. G. Patterson, Dr. and Mrs. T. J. Wilson, Jr., George McKie, Mr. and Mrs. C. P. Spruill, Dr. and Mrs. E. L. Mackie, and Mr. and Mrs. S. A. Stoudemire, all of Chapel Hill. Local and out-of-town chaperones for the Phi Gamma Delta and Alpha Tau Omega house parties, who do not have house mothers, have not yet been announced. Mrs. Mabel Florence is house mother for Phi Delta Theta and Mrs. V. C. Lewis for Pi Kappa Phi. They will chaperone the parties at those respective houses.

Favors, pendants bearing the seals of the individual fraternities, will be given each girl attending the Festival.

and Ray Ruble have been doing consistently great work all year. Both boys went twelve feet six inches against N. C. State here last Saturday to take first place, while they won the event against Presbyterian College with a height of twelve feet. Ruble is the present holder of the Southern Conference Indoor record for this event with a height of twelve feet eleven and three quarters inches, while Arnold was the holder of the record for this same event last winter with a height of twelve feet seven and one quarter inches.

Theron Brown, leading individual scorer so far this season, will be in all three of the weight events in addition to the broad jump. His strongest event is the discuss.

Archie Davis and Rip Slusser will probably take care of the hurdle events. Both boys have been showing good form this year and have been turning in their share of the points. Slusser is a junior while Davis is a graduate from last year's freshman squad.

In George Bagby and Red Hamlet, Coach Fetzer has two consistently good men in the high jump. Hamlet and Bagby tied for first in this event against Presbyterian College while Bagby took first and Hamlet second against N. C. State. Bagby went five feet ten and one half inches here last Saturday and holds the Southern Conference indoor record jointly with Bostick of South Carolina at a height of five feet eleven and one half inches.

Mark Jones will probably lead the Blue and White milers with the veteran Cliff Baucom in the two mile event. Both boys have been turning in good performances in these events and have captured first places in both their races this season. Jones ran the mile against State in four minutes and forty seconds, while Baucom has taken both his runs with a time of ten minutes and eight seconds.

Carolina has five men in the 100, 220, and 440 that should give Graydon and company plenty to worry about. Ken Marland, J. K. Smith, and Rip Slusser will probably handle the cenutry dash while Smith, and Bob Drane will be in the 220. Lionel Weil, in the 440 is one of the foremost runners in the South and holds the Southern Conference indoor record. He ran the quarter in 50.6 seconds against State here Saturday over a muddy track to give indications that he means business this year.

Following the Tech meet, which will be Carolina's first appearance of the season away from home, the Tar Heels will return to Chapel Hill to prepare for their clash with V. P. I. here Saturday April 18.

DECORATIONS FOR CLASS DANCES TO BE MODERNISTIC

Johnny Hamp Engaged to Play For Junior-Senior Balls.

The junior and senior classes have decided to combine this year and have two big dances on two successive nights rather than have separate dances altogether. The Junior-Senior Ball will be given on the twenty-fifth and twenty-six of April.

The committee in charge of arrangements succeeded in securing Johnny Hamp and his "Kentucky Serenaders" to play for the occasion. Hamp's orchestra, conceded to be one of the ten best aggregations in the country, is very popular in this section, and the committee considers itself fortunate in having gotten him to play.

The dances will be given in the Tin Can with the Junior Prom opening the affair on Friday from nine to one. The Senior Ball will take place from nine to twelve the following night.

Those men of the committee who represent the junior class are: Theron Brown, president of the class; Jack Dungan, Jack Farris, John Phil Cooper, Steve Lynch, and Harland Jameson. Those from the senior class are: Pat Patterson, president, John Idol, Cliff Baucom, William Cooper and K. C. Ramsay.

According to all reports, the color scheme which will be used in the decoration of the Tin Can are to be predominantly black and white.

Patronesses from all parts of the state are expected to attend the ball. Those who are not members of either the junior or senior classes need not have any expectations of attending, as this affair is strictly a class function. Each member of either class, who is eligible to attend, will receive two bids, one for each dance. Formerly it was thought that each person would have a bid to give to a guest, but this is not true.

Battle Park Paths Are To Be Reopened

The Battle Park Association was formed last night at the home of Colonel Pratt. The purpose of the association is to reopen the old paths in Battle Park, and to build new rustic bridges across the brook to replace those that formerly were there. No type of modernization or elaborate change of any sort is planned by the association. All that is planned is the clearing of the paths and the replacement of the little bridges that were cared for by Kemp P. Battle while he was president of the University and for years after that until his death.

"A great charm of Battle Park," said Colonel Pratt, "has always been that it is woodland in the natural state. In talking among old acquaintances I have found considerable interest in the idea of restoring Dr. Battle's paths and bridges. Maybe it's a minority who love to walk in the woods, but it's a sizeable minority; and I believe that as time goes on the park will be used more and more."

Guests at Inn

Among the prominent guests at the Carolina Inn are Mrs. John J. Parker, wife of the judge of the fourth circuit court of appeals, and Judge R. W. Winston, noted author.

Johnny Hamp and his "Kentucky Serenaders" are engaged to play for the Junior-Senior Balls which are to be given in the Tin Can on the evenings of April twenty-fourth and twenty-fifth.

ADVERTISERS OF 'HAMLET' ARRIVE

Two Graduates of Ohio State Come Here to Publicize Production of Ben Greet.

Misses Anne Bettle and Mary Boesel, graduates of the University of Iowa and University of Ohio, respectively arrived in Chapel Hill Thursday to advertise the Ben Greet Players who are to appear in Memorial hall Tuesday night, April 14, in a presentation of Shakespeare's Hamlet.

Both these young ladies, who have been with the organization since it came to the United States, came here from Chattanooga, Tennessee, where the company presented a bill before an audience of four thousand people. Sir Philip Ben Greet and his associates have played in leading cities and universities throughout the United States on their return tour of America. Some of these include Yale, Harvard, University of Wisconsin, University of Iowa, University of Michigan, and the University of California.

The Hamlet which is to be presented here Tuesday night is known as the first quarto edition. This is only about half as long and is twice as dramatic as the edition which is used as a textbook in schools. Only two copies of the first quarto are in existance, the first being owned by the British Museum, and the other by the Henry Huntington collection in California.

This is the first time that this edition has ever been produced in America. Sir Philip obtained the copy of it from the British Museum by the permission of the consul in charge. In his presentation of Shakespearean plays, he adheres closely to the old Elizabethan ideas of stage setting.

Lyon Addresses Foreman's Club

Norman W. Lyon, of the psychology department, addressed the April dinner conference of the Durham Foreman's Club, Thursday evening, on the subject, "The Will to Work." The dinner was given in the Durham Y. M. C. A., and attended by forty members and guests. The club is an organization of the foremen and superintendents of Durham industries, the purpose of which is to consider mutual problems of human relations in industry.

Architect Of Gimghoul Castle Lectures On Old New Orleans

Professor N. C. Curtis, of the Tulane University architecture department, spent a few hours in Chapel Hill yesterday while on tour for the Committee of Education of the American Institute of Architects. He is an alumnus of the University class of '00, and taught here from 1904 to 1907, and is the architect of the Gimghoul Castle and the A. T. O. fraternity house here. Mr. Curtis lectured to Dr. J. P. Harland's 9:30 archaeology class on "The Architecture of Old New Orleans," illustrating his talk with numerous lantern slides of the unique buildings of this colorful and romantic city.

"The buildings of New Orleans are not as old as are popularly supposed," began Professor Curtis. "In fact none of those standing today are much over a hundred years old, as none survived the great fire which swept the city in 1787. Their appearance of age is accredited to the dampness of the climate which causes the brick and plaster to disintegrate rapidly, and which gives paint a soft mellowness. It is the custom in New Orleans to repaint everything yearly due to the extreme amount of moisture. In the early days, the danger of fire was so great that the city passed an ordinance prohibiting wooden shingles, hence slate and tin are used entirely.

"By far the most interesting section of New Orleans is the French quarter or Vieux Carre, covering a hundred city blocks, which were originally enclosed by ramparts. This part of the city centers around Jackson Square, and is divided by Chartres, St. Peter's, and Royal Streets on which are located some of the most interesting historical buildings. Because of the shallow structure of the soil and the lack of firm foundations, none of the houses have basements underground, but have the ordinary first floor reached by a curved stairway with graceful sweeps of handrails.

"The streets in this section are very narrow and the buildings have overhanging balconies almost touching. Here is found much ornamental grill work in non-rusting iron, and even monograms have been painstakingly executed in metal. All of the Creole houses face directly on the street with a private courtyard in the rear. It is the nature of the Creole to keep the shutters of the beautiful casement windows of his home always closed, and this gives occupied houses the appearance of being deserted. During its early history, New Orleans was frequently under several feet of water caused by the Mississippi overflow, and it was not unusual to find skiffs tied up beside the houses, Louisianians dislike red brick, and when this material is used for building, it is always painted or whitewashed. The courtyards of the older homes are paved with purple and yellow flagstones imported from Germany many years ago.

"Facing Jackson Square are the famous Cabildo and the St. Louis Cathedral, the former one of the most interesting buildings from a historical and architectural standpoint in the city. Other important buildings are: the General Beauregard house, which is a fine example of the raised cottage type; the home of Jean Lafitte, who was a skilled iron worker besides being a noted pirate; the Patio Royal, which was formerly the Louisiana State Bank and is now a

Pledges Hold Forth Before Crowd On Franklin With Usual "Shines"

(By Roscoe Rollins)

Spring has come and as the buds sprout, just as prolifically do ideas shoot up in the minds of the fraternity men by which they can make the pledge's life more miserable, if possible, than it has been during the course of the pledging term.

Yesterday afternoon the balminess of the air and the brightness of the sun brought forth several aspiring fraternity men, or at least they were led forth "as lambs to the slaughter."

Probably the most spectacular "shine" of the day was the one in which a Zeta Psi pledge promenaded along Franklin street in a pair of wrestling tights.

Attracted by the dense throng crowded about Pritchard-Lloyd's drug emporium, your trusfy reporter, eager to pick up all the news unfit to print, ran across the street, being narrowly missed by a passing trolley car, and with pad and pencil in hand overlooked the scene and cause for the unusual excitement.

There before my horror stricken gaze I found one of my fellow reporters exhibiting his manly chest and swelling biceps, I wonder why he didn't show his forceps, to a tittering group of the fair sex who didn't seem quite fully impressed by the expanse of muscle displayed before them. After his demonstration with an ostensibly heavy weight, the strong arm man explained that two months before he had been weak and puny, but after taking C. C. pills for that length of time his muscles had swelled two inches, his chest had expanded immeasurably and he had become a man among men. Despite the muscular marvel's ardent appeals and convincing demonstration, his enrapt audience remained aloof and refused to purchase any of his C. C. pills even at reduced price.

While intently listening to the strong man's high powered spiel, yes I intend to become a traveling salesman, a queer character togged out in a red and black striped coat, a huge curved pipe, gaiters, glasses, a long flowing moustache, a pad, a pencil and a magnifying glass came slithering through the assembled throng, his eyes carefully searching the shoes of all persons. Upon some he bestowed a subtle compliment by gazing at their pedal extremities through a microscope, but alas when he came to the broad and solid foundation upholding this carcass, the poor fellow had to squint his eyes—his retina couldn't take in an object of such great size. Having often been told by the loving mater that I'm a bright boy I'll hazard a guess that the person in question, he was a questionable character to say the least, was supposed to represent Sherlock Holmes. Right again Watson.

Phillips To Speak On African Negroes

Dr. Ulrich B. Phillips, of Yale University, will deliver an address in Gerrard hall Monday night, April 13, at eight-thirty. His subject will be "Tribal Negroes of Central Africa."

Dr. Phillips was the holder of a fellowship under the Albert Kahn Foundation for the foreign travel of American teachers. At this time he made extensive researches in central Africa. He will also be remembered as the recipient of the award by Little, Brown and Co., for the best unpublished historical manuscript, "Life and Labor in the Old South," published by that company in 1929.

'COLD BLUE MOON' IS EPIC OF SOUTH

Howard W. Odum's New Novel Continues the Story of Black Ulysses.

Dr. Howard W. Odum has just released his newest book, Cold Blue Moon, or Black Ulysses Afar Off, completing a trilogy to Rainbow Round My Shoulder and Wings On My Feet.

The story in itself can not be called a novel, for it is a series of anecdotes related by Black Ulysses otherwise known as John Wesley Gordon, who designated himself "the greatest water boy and helper in the United States and maybe the world."

The setting of the story is this: a fine old southern mansion dating from ante-bellum days has been purchased by some northerners, who are having it remodeled as a hunting club. Black Ulysses returning from his wanderings through forty states is one of the workmen. One rainy day a group of his fellow workmen are gathered in a barn, telling stories. He condescendingly listens to their tiresome tales, and then begins to relate the stories told to him by his Mama's mama.

Thus he begins his tales. Ghost stories, tales of fox hunts, stories of coon dogs, and stories of the war, tales of the coming of Yankee soldiers, and of the quality folk who live in the big house.

The old South lives again in all its glory and rarely indeed has any writer succeeded in recreating the life of the old South as successfully as Howard W. Odum.

Black Ulysses, consenting to shelve himself to the background is perhaps the truest portrait of a southern negro that has even been written by a modern novelist. Ulysses says "Ever since I left by Mother's home everybody has been down on me; I got dem crazy blues, can't be satisfied. I'm living now and I'm last year and I'm last year and tomorrow, and I'm Thursday and next week. I'm Saturday and good ole rest 'em Sunday too. I'm Friday with devil jaybird, and Monday rolled in black cat bones asleepin' in the shade. I'm Adam walkin' in the Garden of Eden, and Lawd, Lawd; I'm a sinner man in the last judgment. I'm a man standing was off and looking on. Heard about it Lawd. I heard about it. Big house setting up in the trees on the hill. Got to know about it to understand ghosts and slave tales. Lawd, Lawd, I don't know; but believe I'll tell that story. Talk about it. I've got dem crazy blues, and I can't be satisfied."

NEW SYSTEM OF LISTING COURSES IS MADE KNOWN

New University Catalogue Prints Old Numbers Alongside the New Ones.

In the recent issue of the University catalogue, the numbering of the various courses has been completely revised. So that students may not become confused as to which courses they may take when they register, the new numbers are given, followed in parentheses by the old numbers. In case of courses not listed last year no old numbers are shown and similarly in case the number is the same as it has been.

Courses numbered from 1 to 10 are for freshmen only, from 11 to 20 are ordinarily for freshmen and sophomores, from 21 to 40 for sophomores, from 41 to 50 for sophomores (but open to juniors or seniors), from 51 to 100 for juniors and seniors, from 101 to 200 for advanced undergraduates and graduates, from 201 to 400 for graduates only. Courses numbered 301 to 400 are research courses.

Undergraduates may not take courses numbered above 200 except by special permission of the instructor in the course and the head of the department. Courses numbered from 1 to 100 carry no credit towards any advanced degree.

In the event that required freshmen subjects are taken after a student begins his seventh quarter or required sophomore subjects after he begins his tenth quarter, such subjects carry half credit only.

Courses with a double number are completed in two quarters, and in general credit will not be given until both quarters have been completed, for example, Economics 31-32. Certain of these courses meet only three times a week and together count as one course. Courses which meet five or six times a week for two quarters carry a credit of two courses.

Courses with three numbers require three quarters to complete, and in general credit will not be given for the work of one or two quarters only. Those meeting five times a week carry a credit of three courses. Those meeting only three times a week carry a credit on one and a half courses.

Richards To Give Sigma Xi Lectures

The Sigma Xi lectures will be delivered April 27 and 28, by Dr. Alfred N. Richards, head of the department of pharmacology at the University of Pennsylvania. While he is in Chapel Hill, Dr. Richards will be the guest of Dr. William de B. MacNider.

The lectures will deal with the general subject of the physiology of the kidney, the specific titles being: "The Function of the Glomerulus" and "The Function of the Renal Tube."

Dr. Richards was graduated from Yale in 1897 and holds the degree of Ph.D. of Columbia. His achievements in pharmacology have won recognition in Europe as well as in America. In 1917-1918 he was a member of the British Medical Research Committee, and as a major in the Sanitary Corps, U. S. A., he was attached to the Chemical Warfare Service in the A. E. F.

From Failing Hands The Torches Thrown

Tuesday of this next week the retiring president of the student body together with the rest of the student body officers and editors will publicly induct those successful candidates for the thirty-three campus elective offices of distinction.

A new departure, and one which should become permanent, this occasion will not be just another opportunity for these successful candidates to bask in the warmth of mutual admiration or the laudatory praise and congratulations which preceded and followed their being elected to office. It will and should present the opportunity to solemnly impress upon each man entering upon the duties of his office the fact which they should never lose sight of—they are ach day of the year servants of the student body, and not of their private wishes, those of their clique, or any minority of the student-body.

Money collected from students and disbursed by student officers or student-faculty committees, or by faculty boards for the students should be rigidly supervised and a full account in strict detail should be made to the student body through the Daily Tar Heel. There has been an ever increasing demand on the part of the student body to know just where their money goes. The Publications Union Board, and the Y. M. C. A. have made reports but in the case of the former the presentation was so general that no inkling could have been made as to whether the money had been spent in the fashion that the students and their representatives, the editors, desired. The Publications Union Board has been storing up thousands and thousands of dollars for an emergency, and when that emergency did hit them this year they wonder how they are going to meet it. No one knows in what stocks or what bonds this reserve is held. The student body demands to know about these things and many others. The Y. M. C. A. report was in such vague terms that no one knew whether salaries and expenses were managed as the student body intended.

These are only two of several departments which must carefully report all expenditures to the governing body of this institution—the student body. It is their money and these newly elected officers who are to be inaugurated Tuesday should consider it their primary duty to demand and insist that this information be forthcoming. Extra-curricular activities are paid for by the students, and are theoretically managed for them, and it is now the time to return them and the control of them to the body from which they evolved—the student body.

For The Best

Since the announcement of his proposal to find the sentiment of the Democratic party concerning the prohibition question, Chairman Raskob has been both condemned and exalted. A big majority of the Southern drys have been responsible for the first, while the wets and more intelligent drys, seeing that the old problems must be faced, have taken part in the latter.

By taking such a stand as they have, the larger part of the drys have signified one of two things. They either haven't the backbone to face the question squarely and get it out of the way, or else they fear that their party chairman is trying to force them to take up arms with their rivals—the wets. Their stand has also brought about another complication, which in our minds will eventually work for the betterment of the party itself. By making their bold accusations of their chairman, who is merely trying to seek the truth, the drys have, for the first time in many-a-day, started a conflict which will probably end in a split in the old Democratic party. Such a result is, we think, the best thing for the party at the present time. It is true that as long as the existing financial depression retains its hold on the country, an action of this sort would be insane. But so long as there is even the slightest possibility of the black cloud of unemployment rising before the general election of 1932, a Democratic party split, would, in time, be to the advantage of the party.

A split might mean the loss of the coming election, but it would bring about the organization of a new party based on a more substantial platform. A new party, with a well-rounded platform, would be able to draw members from the anti-Hoover Repubs as well as the wet and dissatisfied Democrats.

As things look at the present moment it will require almost super-human power to formulate a party platform, which would be favorable to both the wet and dry Democrats. If the election were to come off immediately, the poor condition of finances would win for the "outs" party with practically any sort of platform, but the trouble is that there is no promise that this depression will last until the election of 1932. If it does remain that long—a thing which the economists think practically impossible—the Dems have a small chance of election; but if it does not, it will mean almost certain Republican victory.—C. G. R.

Erection of a new $25,000 home for University of Michigan student publications, to be completed within 18 months, has been authorized by the Board in Control of Student Publications at the Ann Arbor school.

With Contemporaries

Matrimony

Universities exist for a lot of things. We have heard it rumored that they often serve as a matrimonial bureau. Just to impress this on us, Dr. Clarence Cook Little has recently added his bit of original thought to the subject, by warning states that they are wasting their funds in a co-educational university.

"The only reason women come to college is to find a marriageable man," says the educator. Whereupon all the rest of the educators throughout the country who have been nursing their tender ideals will awake to the true hypocritical character of the younger generation. Perhaps they will not like knowing that their efforts are wasted. They may hide their hurt pride in the knowledge that youth has sinister motives, and this will set them to philosophizing. Then they will feel better.

Being a part of this generation which uses the state funds to find a matrimonial partner, we should defend. The theory is an old one and calls up several romantic visions of love blossoming beneath the Campanile, and nothing better to do than decide between masculine wiles—or perhaps, to hope for the chance to decide.

Yet announcements and schedules continue to be printed and we have heard that students buy them. This, of course, is only an outward manifestation of education. But we have heard of more things—of professors, and classes and occasionally, the library, and of students who number these things among their active interests. Could it be that this is an illusion, and that all the time somewhere in faculty glade there is a little matrimonial bureau?

Just so a great many outsiders are not accused of lying, perhaps more college people could get married.—Daily Californian.

Marriage Of the Arts

Until recently there has been little recognition of the far reaching possibilities of the moving picture field. These are gradually coming to light and as a result the movies are becoming increasingly interesting and entertaining. The announcement that Leopold Stokowski, conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra, will make a sound recording of Stravinsky's "Oedipus Rex" and Prokofieff's "Pas d'Acier" is another indication that the moving picture is slowly coming of age.

Limited as may be the influence of this particular film it points out a fertile field for movies in the future. With the present technical knowledge it is doubtful whether music for its own sake will ever be really important in the sound picture, but in combination with visual forms it still has far to go. What the movies need now, which the filming of "Oedipus Rex" should illustrate, is the development of an art and technique peculiarly suited to the medium of the screen. Chaplin has worked out one type of movie style, the silhouette is another, but in most cases movies are but literal translations of an art which is at its best in the theatre.

Opera, as opera, will probably not be successful on the screen. In Stravinsky's work however, where super-marionettes are used in place of men and the parts are carefully subordinated to the whole effect, lies a possible opening of the motion picture. It is not the content which matters so much in this case as the creation of an art built for the movies which will combine the elements of music and stage in a new way. Mickey Mouse has successfully done this for comedy and it should be possible to do the same type of thing for great music and plays. Perhaps Mickey Mouse and "Oedipus Rex" are destined to be the forerunners of a new art indigenous to the movie which will evolve from the union of sound and form by means of a new technique.—Harvard Crimson.

George Babbit Himself

When Sinclair Lewis received the Nobel prize for literature in Stockholm, he made a pretty little speech in Swedish thanking his benefactors. George Babbitt could have done no better. For weeks Lewis practiced his Swedish speech, just as Babbitt would have done had he been selected for a signal foreign honor. The situation contains a full measure of irony.

Why the American author should struggle with the Swedish language in order to thank the trustees of the Nobel fund is beyond understanding, unless one cares to think that Lewis is the counterpart of the fiction character which won him the award. The incident matches Lewis with Babbitt to the last detail. The author's bitter criticism of the American man through his pompous, bustling puppet comes now to rest on his own shoulders.

In his excitement over winning the prize of $46,000 Lewis undoubtedly forgot that the Swedish trustees probably can speak and understand English well. But Lewis instinctively felt that they were as provincial as he and that they would be greatly complimented if the latest literary genius spoke to them in their own language. Such Babbitry!—Yakima Daily Herald.

Diversified Development

There are students attending nearly every college and university in the country whose sole purpose in going to school is the absorption of technical knowledge and information. They seldom appear outside the study room, at least in connection with work in addition to the regular class preparation. They are commonly known by the associates as "book-worms."

Such students are very proficient in at least one phase of their education; they are grade getters and have an abundant store of information at their finger tips. They are, however, sadly neglecting to develop themselves along other lines nearly if not entirely as important as good grades. The successful man or woman today must be a well balanced individual. Technical knowledge is important and essential, but its most effective use by the successful leader is dependent on certain other characteristics.

The man holding the leader's position must be a good social mixer, must be able to make a new friend of each new acquaintance. He must by no means neglect his personal social development. Since the extent to which he will be able to use his mental and social development is naturally more or less dependent on a strong physical body, it is imperative that physical development be constantly striven for. Mental, social, and physical development are three-fourths of the well rounded individual, but even these are likely to get out of balance without an understanding of and appreciation for the moral codes and practices prevalent in the social strata in which the leader is to operate.

The classroom and the text book supply the mental. The extensive athletic program, both intercollogiate and intramural, offers physical training and development to more than three-fourths of the students in the University. Fraternity and University dances, dinners, and other social functions provide ample chance to polish off the rough edges and to become at least a moderately well rounded social individual. Moral development finds its expression in the Purdue Religious council, Y. W. C. A., and the numerous city Sunday schools and churches.

The student who is neglecting to make use of facilities offered at the University for four-fold development is failing to realize the most possible good from the time and money he is investing in an education. Diversity of personal development is essential in coping with the ever growing complexity of social and economic life.—Purdue Exponent.

Pledges Hold Forth On Franklin Street With Usual "Shines"

a sizeable audience was the sight of a youth attired in the guise of a member of that illustrious and noble organization, the Boy Scouts of America, squatting on the sidewalk calmly toasting marshmallows over a can of Sterno. The chap was a true Boy Scout for before thrusting the green twig through the marshmallow he first carefully wiped it on his begrimed breeches. True to the creed of his organization, the marshmallow toaster was unselfish. After eating the better part of a half pound box of the sweets, his stomach probably reminded him of the duty as an efficient scout, and accordingly he offered some of the toothsome dainties to dainty teeth, but the onlookers politely declined.

Thus endeth a perfect daze for all pledges involved in fraternity initiations, and thus endeth a marvelous tale told by one whose days may soon be ended.

Many Foreigners Enroll at Harvard

Records of the geographical distribution of students coming to Harvard University during the current academic year show that there are students from every state in the union and from fifty-three foreign countries or possessions of the United States.

The ranking of the states shows that the first five states in point of attendance are respectively, Massachusetts, New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and New Jersey. California and Illinois occupy the next two places.

Of the foreign countries represented at Harvard, Canada holds first place. China is second, Hawaii is third, and England and France are tied for fourth place. More than half of the Canadians at Harvard are students in the graduate school of arts and sciences. The majority of the Chinese, thirty-one out of fifty-four, are also in this school. Hawaii is represented by twenty-seven students, and the British Isles have twenty-three students present at Harvard.

Peacock Clouts Homer To Lead Tar Heel Win

Longest Holds Maryland to Two Hits in First Seven Innings; Edwards Finishes.

DUNLAP LEADS HITTERS

Star First Sacker Gets Two Triples and Single in Five Trips to Plate.

College Park, Maryland, April 10.—The University of Maryland baseball team was a four to two victim of North Carolina here this afternoon in the first game of a tri-state league double header.

Cecil Longest hurled the first seven innings for the Tar Heels and held the Old Liners to a pair of safeties both by Paul Cronin, Maryland left fielder. In the eighth Longest developed a wild streak and passed three men. It was at this point that Edwards relieved him and was able to retire the home team without a run.

Carolina took the lead from the very start when Peacock, Tar Heel outfielder clouted a homer in the third inning giving his team a lead which was never relinguished. One run was added in each of the fourth fifth, and seventh frames by the visitors.

Both of the Old Liners' tallies were scored in the fifth inning. Maxwell, Sterling, and Connally, batting for Milburn, walked to fill the bases with only one out. Cronin then doubled to left scoring Maxwell and Hess, who ran for Sterling. Derr and Berger flied out to end the inning.

Dunlap, Tar Heel first sacker, led both teams at bat with a pair of triples and a single in five times at bat. House, visiting left fielder, collected three singles in five attempts.

TAR BABIES DROP PRACTICE GAME

Play Campbell College This Afternoon in Fifth Game; Have Won Two and Lost Two.

The Tar Baby nine bowed to the local high school Thursday afternoon in a practice game, 6 to 2. The game was played in an effort to give as many men as possible a chance to show their wares in competition. Coach Sapp, besides playing four innings himself at the receiving post, and making a star catch of a high foul, used twenty seven men in the game.

His first two combinations were unable to hold the high school lads, playing erratic in the field and failing to make their hits count for runs. The first stringers went in for the last two innings but could not overcome the lead that the reserves lost in the third inning.

Three hurlers made their debut on the mound in this game. Whitley, pitching the first three frames, looked good, allowing only two hits, but his support was ragged, and four runs counted in these innings. Clayborn Carr, a southpaw, seemed to have plenty of stuff on the ball, making the first two batters who faced him pop up. However, the next man got a fluke homer when the outfielder misjudged an easy fly, and two more men got singles. Tatum, who has been catching, tried his hand at the mound and held his opponents to three scattered singles in the last three stanzas and allowed but one run.

No freshman stayed in long enough to get more than one hit. Wright pitching for Chapel Hill, allowed eight safe hits, none of which went for extra bases. King, catcher for the high school, garnered three hits in four attempts. Dashiell got a homer, two free passes and accounted for three runs.

The frosh meet Campbell College on Emerson field today at three o'clock, and Tuesday they will play Danville Military Institute here at four o'clock.

ILLINOIS COACH HAS ASHMORE ON ALL-TIME TEAM

North Carolina Coach's Record For Consecutive Games Without Errors Stands.

Jim Ashmore, genial baseball mentor at Carolina, has just been named on one of the All-Star All-Time baseball teams picked for the University of Illinois by Director of Athletics G. Huff, who has been associatd with Illinois baseball activities for 43 years.

Coach Ashmore was picked as first baseman on the second team. He held down first team rank for years, but Harry McCurdy took precedence over him by a slight margin on the more recent picking. Ashmore's record for consecutive games without an error still stands at Illinois, and Huff rated the Tar Heel mentor with the greatest Illinois has ever produced.

The complete first team included Harry McCurdy, 1b; Billy Fulton, 2b; Carl Steinwedel, 3b; B. Loptec, ss; Jimmy Cook, Otto Vogel and Ray Thomas, outfield; Jake Stahl, c; and Carl Lundgren (present Illinois coach and Frank Pfeffer, p.

The second team had Jim Ashmore, 1b; Righter, 2b; Jim Lymperopoulos and Paul Stewart, 3b; Eddie Tryban, ss; Wallie Roettger, Don Peten and Art Zangerle, outfielder; Jack Bradley, c; and Harvey McCullon and James Busick, p.

Many of the names are those of old-timers, and many have won later fame in professional ball. Ashmore himself played professional ball for several seasons, then turned coach. He has been here since 1926 and has had a good record with Tar Heel basketball and baseball outfits.

CAROLINA FROSH BEAT BOYS' HIGH

The Carolina Tar Babies defeated the Boy's High of Atlanta yesterday afternoon, 6-3. All matches were closely contested with the Yearlings holding a slight edge.

Billy Reese, who was defeated in the finals of the national junior singles by Wilmer Hines, Tar Heel star, led the Atlanta Boys, defeating Morgan, of the first year men, 6-3, 6-3, after a hard fight. Morgan displayed a good brand of tennis but was outclassed by the former Southern champion.

The Freshmen won four out of six singles matches, and two of the three doubles matches. Reese and Kingdon won the high school boy's singles matches, and Kingdon and Torrence paired to win the visitors' only doubles victory.

The scores follow:

Reese (A) over Morgan (C), 6-3, 6-3.
Shuford (C) over Morrison (A) 6-4, 6-2.
Dillard (C) over Tumlin (A), 6-1, 4-6, 6-3.
Bennett (C) over Torrence (A), 6-3, 6-3.
Dockery (C) over Glenn (A), 6-4, 6-8, 6-3.
Kingdon (A) over Currie (C), 7-5, 6-2.
Shuford and Morgan (C) over Reese and Tumlin (A), 2-6, 6-4, 6-2.
Dillard and Dockery (C) over Morrison and Glenn (A), 7-5, 6-2.
Kingdon and Torrence (A) over Bennett and Currie (C), 6-4, 7-5.

TAR BABIES HAVE PERFECT RECORD IN TRACK MEETS

Smother All Rivals By Big Scores in First Three Meets; Five New Records Set.

The three opening performances of Carolina's freshman track team have brightened the horizon for Coach Bob Fetzer, director of athletics and moulder of championship track teams at Carolina, and his chief assistant, Dale Ranson.

The Tar Babies have smothered all rivals under big scores in their first three meets. They defeated Charlotte High's state high school champions by 89½ to 22½, the Duke Freshmen by 90 to 36 and the State Freshmen by 108½ to 17½.

In administering these defeats the freshmen have made fine individual records. In the State meet last Saturday, for instance, four of them turned in five marks which equalled or bettered freshman records here.

Floyd Higby, a 177-pounder, led the parade. He won the quarter-mile event in 51.6 seconds, broadjumped 21 feet 8½ inches, and was close at the heels of Alex Weisker, who stepped off the hundred in 10 seconds flat, a time as good as any made by Charlie Farmer while that noted sprinter was a freshman.

Bob Gold vaulted 11 feet 8½ inches and Floyd LeGore threw the javelin 175 feet 1 inch. LeGore, in a previous meet with the Duke Freshmen, had a throw of 178 feet, better than any performance turned in by a varsity man here since Jeff Fordham left.

Goodwin has won both low and high hurdles in every meet except the Duke contest, when his teammate, Glenn, finished in the van. Other high class performers include Kimrey in the half mile, Groover in the mile, the Sullivan twins in the two-mile, and McBrains, Mullis, and Horney in the weight events.

Sullivan Twins Puzzle Judges In Frosh Meet

Compose One of Two Brother Acts on Freshman Athletic Teams.

State College frosh runners, judges at the finish line, and spectators who attended the Carolina-State freshman track meet here last Saturday saw double as Carolina's Sullivan brothers crossed the line in one-two order to win the two-mile run.

The Sullivans, Henry and Louis, are twins. They step the distance events and are members of the cross country team, and when both are in form, usually race along neck and neck so that judges often find it necessary to stop them at the finish and inquire as to which is which. They come from Anderson, S. C.

Louis won the two-mile Saturday, and Henry, who hasn't been in training as long this season as Louis, finished second.

The Sullivans compose one of tw obrother acts on freshman athletics teams at the University, with the Phipps boys constituting the other.

Harry Phipps has earned a regular job at second base on the Tar Baby nine while brother John plays shortstop.

John is the more versatile of the two. He was an outstanding halfback on the freshman eleven last fall, and in the frosh track meet on Saturday, he tied for a first place in the high jump. He and his brother hail from Fries, Va.

Carolina Trackmen To Meet Stiff Competition At Tech This Afternoon

Sidelights

By Phil Alston

Now that the rainy weather has passed (for a time at least) and the sun, birds and other springtime accessories have put in their appearance, the spring sports calendar should really begin to operate with some sort of regularity. Out of the eight games scheduled to be played on the Hill during the past two weeks, five of them were either rained out or called off on account of wet grounds. Even the Easter Monday classic with the Davidson Wildcats drew a flood and was called off.

But that's all over now, and we'll probably spend most of our time at the remaining ball games taking sun baths when we're not busy dodging foul balls knocked into the stands.

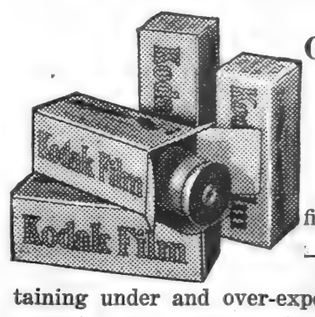
Coach Bob Fetzer's track team will perform away from home today for the first time this season. The Tar Heels turned in two decisive wins so far this season and seem to have another strong team. It's too early yet to start talking about running off with the Southern Conference title again, but if Coach Bob's boys get a few breaks they may do just that. So far, the cindermen have had about everything possible to go wrong with them including everything from charley-horses to measles. Charley Farmer is the most prominent casualty, and his loss was a tough one for Coaches Fetzer and Ranson, but they seem to have a knack of turning out great teams regardless.

Two boys that have really been doing some great work this spring are Ray Ruble and Brodie Arnold. They went twelve feet six inches in the pole vault last Saturday and let it go at that. Both stand a good chance of breaking the Southern Conference outdoor record this year and Ruble already holds the indoor record. These boys have been performing with such consistent brilliancy that most of us take their work as a matter of course. If they happened to slip up and turn in an average performance once we would think something was radically wrong merely because we are used to seeing them clear the bar over twelve feet without any difficulty.

All the boys that spent the winter howling that the Tin Can would make a good refrigerator should pay the old place a visit now. The place is sizzling, which goes to show that if you howl long enough you'll get what you want.

Tech Team Improved This Year; Ed Hamm Is Only Loss.

TWENTY MEN MAKE TRIP



Carolina Possesses Only Pair of Thirteen Foot Vaulters in South.

The Carolina track team, twenty-five strong, left Chapel Hill yesterday for Atlanta, where they will meet Georgia Tech this afternoon in their third meet of the season. Tech is expected to give the Tar Heels much more opposition this year than last when Carolina walked off with a 104-27 victory in the first official meet of the year.

In addition to Coaches Fetzer and Ranson and Manager Bill Dunn, the following men made the trip: Brodie Arnold, George Bagby, Cliff Baucom, Theron Brown, Wallace Case, Tom Cordle, Sandy Dameron, Archie Davis, Bob Drane, Charley Farmer, Dick Garrett, Red Hamlet, Harry Hodges, Bob Hubbard, Mark Jones, Ken Marland, Ray Ruble, Rip Slusser, J. K. Smith, Joe Straus, Tom Watkins, and Lionel Weil. Although Farmer is being taken on the trip, he probably will not enter the meet. Farmer is still suffering from the effects of an injury sustained in the Southern Conference Indoor Meet here last March, and is not expected to be in condition to run for two weeks yet.

GAY GATHERING ENJOYS INITIAL FESTIVAL DANCE

Three Hundred Dance to Music Of Mike Speciale at New Moon Ball.

A gay and brilliant crowd of around three hundred University students and their girls, gathered last night in Bynum gymnasium for the New Moon Ball, the first of a series of dances comprising the Spring Festival. From the orchestra stand in the rear center of the floor, Mike Speciale and His Crusaders played for the dancers.

A canopy of blue and white crepe paper streamers overhung the dance floor, reaching to the floor on every side, hiding the ugly, workaday appearance of the gymnasium. The chaperones were seated around, and in booths at opposite ends of, the floor.

In mid-afternoon yesterday, girls came in from every section of the South and East for the house parties being given by the Phi Delta Theta, Phi Gamma Delta, Pi Kappa Phi, and the Alpha Tau Omega fraternities. Last night, at 7:30 o'clock, Pi Kappa Phi entertained their guests at a formal dinner in their residence on Pittsboro road.

This morning, at eleven o'clock, Pi Kappa Phi, which is the fifth of the fraternities sponsoring the Festival, will be host at a breakfast party at the Carolina Inn. The Sunset Dansant will be the attraction this afternoon, lasting from four until seven o'clock. Another formal dinner, at which Phi Gamma Delta will be host, will be given for the members of that fraternity and their guests at the fraternity residence on Columbia street at 7:30 this evening.

The A. T. O. fraternity gave a dinner for their Spring Festival guests last night in their house on Franklin street.

Culminating the Festival will be the Dance of the Shadows tonight, from nine until twelve o'clock. Speciale and his band will play for the two dances today, also.

DAIL HOLDERNESS TO LEAD DANCE FOR MAY FROLIC

Emerson Gill has been secured to play for the May Frolic to be given May 5 and 6. This orchestra is at present playing at the Bamboo Gardens in Cleveland and broadcasting over station WTAM.

The May Frolic was inaugurated last year to replace the old German Club Easter dances which were done way with at the time the spring holidays were changed.

Last year the frolic was given the second and third of May and met with such wide approval that it was fixed as an annual affair. A permanent organization was formed composed of the following fraternities: Zeta Psi, Delta Kappa Epsilon, Sigma Nu, Kappa Sigma, and Beta Theta Pi. The following officers were elected: president, Art Sickles; vice-president, Willis Henderson; secretary-treasurer, Buck Snow; and dance leader, Dail Holderness. The committee in charge of arrangements this year are: Henry Anderson, Beta Theta Pi; Clyde Dunn, Kappa Sigma; and John Jemison, Sigma Alpha Epsilon.

Lord Bryce Writes Article on Politics

New York, April 6—Lord Bryce devotes a chapter in his famous study of American institutions to an explanation of "Why the Best Men Do Not Go into Politics." What he said many years ago about the failure of the two major parties to challenge the interest of the best equipped men in society still holds today. Men and women who graduate from our colleges and universities with a special training which ought to be utilized in our political life are repelled by the low level of politics. This is another aspect of the tragedy of waste.

The reason for this condition is easy to find. Political conflict in the United States has degenerated into a conflict over political plums. There is essentially no difference between the two old parties on the great fundamental issues that should form the basis of a political alignment. Concerning the paramount issue of the day—the struggle between "rugged individualism" and a program of social planning and control, these parties have nothing to say.

The student who would enter politics must forget the political scientist and sit at the feet of the political boss. To succeed he must be a Democrat in New York City, and a Republican if he lives in Chicago. The methods are the same everywhere. Under either label the political machine is a cold business proposition dedicated to the prosaic job of delivering the vote. To whom the vote is delivered is decided by one man, the political boss who rules his province like a Chinese general, treating public office as private plunder. The student who has a stomach for these methods will go up the escalator as far as fortune and his conscience will permit.

Inevitably political parties resting on such a foundation are more concerned to serve the selfish and financial interest of the few than the human needs of the many. For many years the Republican Party has been in an alliance with big business. It has claimed to be the guardian of prosperity, on the assumption that if it fostered the prosperity of the few at the top something would seep down to the many at the bottom. The present industrial crisis which fell squarely in the middle of a Republican administration is sufficient refutation of the Republican myth.

The Democratic Party instead of assuming the role of opposition has gradually become a poor imitation of its rich rival. Having no Mellon it offers a Raskob. To the student in search of a career in politics it satisfies no better than the Republican Party.

What is badly needed is a new political alignment that would range conservatives against progressives. There are progressives in the two old parties who ought to be in a party of their own. There are minority groups whose efforts ought to be coordinated rather than scattered as they now are.

Such a conservative-progressive re-alignment of forces is the goal of the League for Independent Political Action. It is an effort that conservatives as well as progressives should applaud. When it succeeds the voter will be able to go to the polls with the certainty that his vote will count for a principle. And the student will find the place in politics now denied him. Politics will once more have the vigor and the reality it possessed in the days when Jefferson and Hamilton were alive.

cafe; the Old Mint, from whose porch a man was hanged during the Civil War; and the city hall, one of the best examples of the Greek revival in America. The renowned French opera house, which unfortunately burned several years ago, was not especially interesting or unusual from the exterior, but the interior, with its rows of boxes and rooms for all kinds of entertainment, was typical of Creole gaiety and splendor.

"Unique among places to see are the quaint little shops specialing in some particular ware such as metal work. These are literally museums in themselves. The many convents of the city are full of old world simplicity and charm. Up the river from New Orleans are the stately plantation homes of the ante-bellum planters. Some of these are in a good state of preservation today, but many are fallen to ruin, while some have actually dropped into the river due to the gradual sluffing off of its banks.

"No one ever leaves New Orleans without visiting the cemeteries, especially on All Saint's Day in November, when many beautiful flowers, mostly chrysanthemums, are on display. On account of the shallow soil, few burials are performed below ground, and the poor are even buried along the cemetery walls. There used to be a bone pile of the poor whose families could not pay rent on burial space. No other American city can touch New Orleans in the realms of uniqueness."

Professor Curtis plans to publish a book soon on New Orleans architecture for the special collection of the American Institute of Architects.

INTRAMURAL RESULTS

New Dorms Wins Opener

The New Dorms won the opening game of the intramural season yesterday afternoon, defeating the Law School 6-3. New Dorms bunched hits in the opening frame to score two runs, Martin and Shelton scoring. Again in the fourth, the New Dorms boys bunched hits to counter three runs, Martin, Shelton, and Scott scoring in this inning. The other tally came in the third, Hampton countering.

The Law School tied the New Dorms boys in the first inning, scoring two runs also, but from then on New Dorms led. The final Law School tally was scored by Merritt in the fourth.

New Dorms out hit the law school by five hits to four.

The line-ups:

Law School: Gray, c; Campbell, lf; Martin, ss; McLennon, 1b; Merritt, 3b; Kellog, cf; Marshall, p; Speight, 2b; Cole, rf.

New Dorms: Martin, 3b; Shelton, 2b; Williamson, c; Hampton, 1b; Wheeless, rf; Deans, cf; Perry, lf; Choate, ss; Scott, p.

Manly Beats Grimes 7-4

Manly won its opening game of the season yesterday afternoon, defeating Grimes, 7-4.

Fields led the Manly scoring with two runs, while the losers were led by Watson, with two runs, and D. Jones and Allsbrook, with one run each.

The line-ups:

Manly: Field, 2b; Nisbet, rf; Aman, ss; Kennerly, cf; Curl, 3b; Bullock, 1b; Witherow, lf; Johnson, c; Laws, p.

Grimes: D. Jones, p; Allsbrook, 1b; F. Jones, 2b; Watson, c; Biggs, 3b; Cummings, rf; Edmundson, cf; Brown, ss; Watson, lf.

BUTLER PRESIDENT FIRST YEAR LAW CLASS

At a meeting of the first year class of the law school yesterday morning at chapel hour, officers for the rising second year class were elected. Pete Butler was chosen president; Bill Adams, vice-president; Homer Lyon, secretary; and Bill Speight, treasurer.

With Farmer out of the dashes, it will be up to Marland, Slusser, Smith, and Drane to carry on in these events against Yarborough, Goldsmith, LaForge, and Graydon, the Tech speedsters. Marland will also be in the quarter mile with Lionel Weil, who ran a fast 50.6 for this event last Saturday.

Rip Slusser and Archie Davis will be in the hurdle events, with Slusser specializing in the lows, and Davis in the highs. Dick Garrett and Tom Watkins will be in the half-mile, with Mark Jones and Bob Hubbard running in the mile.

The veteran George Bagby, who cleared five feet ten and one half inches against State here last week, and Red Hamlet, sophomore star, will be entered in the high jump. Bagby will also compete in the broad jump which he won against State with a leap of twenty feet ten inches in his first attempt at this event. Bagby will have with him in the broad jump Theron Brown and Brodie Arnold, both of whom have been performing consistently all year.

Coaches Fetzer and Ranson will offer their special attraction in the pole vault when they present Brodie Arnold and Ray Ruble, two of the foremost vaulters in the South. These boys have been attracting attention throughout the Conference this year, and under good weather conditions may better the Conference record this afternoon. The present record is held by Odell of Clemson with a vault of thirteen feet three inches.

Cliff Baucom and Tom Cordle, the former a senior and the latter a sophomore, are scheduled to take care of the two mile event.

In the shot put will be Theron Brown, Carolina's jack of all trades, and Harry Hodges, sophomore, Brown and Straus are due to enter the javelin, with Sandy Dameron, teaming with Brown, in the discus.

Carolina Golfers To Meet W. and L. Today

The undefeated Carolina golf team will get its third test of the season this afternoon when Washington and Lee will be played over the nearby Hope Valley course.

In previous starts the Tar Heels have already beaten Georgetown and Boston College, despite the fact that Captain Meade Willis is out of competition temporarily due to a recent illness.

The Tar Heel team to play Washington and Lee Saturday will probably be picked from Al Brown, Joe Adams, Beverly Mason, Paul Carter, Fred Laxton, Ben Goodes and Aubrey Brooks.

Infirmary List

The infirmary list for yesterday included: E. B. Grady, J. R. Riley, A. E. Hughes, G. D Thompson, B. S. Solomon, Lathan Byron, J. C. Harris, R. M. Byrd, B. F. James, M. L. Hall, J. R. Wall, Ralph S. Crum, and L. C. Stewart.

GREET PRODUCES SHAKESPEARE IN ORIGINAL STYLE

Knighted English Actor Is Considered Greatest of All Shakespearean Producers.

Sir Philip Ben Greet, splendid actor and greatest of all Shakespearean producers, is presenting his brilliant cast of English players to the students and townspeople of Chapel Hill in the first quarto edition of Hamlet, at eight-thirty o'clock Tuesday night in Memorial hall.

Sir Philip has been on the stage for fifty years and has taught more actors than any other living man. He is world famous as one of the greatest living authorities on the English drama, and his Shakespearean productions have set the standard in both America and England. In recognition of a life devoted to the cause of drama in education, he was knighted by King George V of England, June, 1929.

For all of the Shakespearean plays presented by the Ben Greet Players the stage is set as far as it is practical to indicate the simplicity of the theatre of Shakespeare's time. The plays are acted in a manner approximating that of the Elizabethan period, with such modern modifications as may be necessary. However, the purpose of Sir Ben Greet is not merely to reproduce dramatic conditions under which Shakespeare worked, but to present the plays as they were written.

Ben Greet was born on the River Thames on a recruiting ship, commanded by his father, Captain William Greet, of the Royal Navy. Choosing the stage as his profession, he served an apprenticeship in J. W. Gordon's stock company, at Southampton, and was for three years with Miss Thorne at Margate. Later he joined the company of Mary Anderson at the Lyceum in London, where he also was in the supporting cast of Lawrence Barrett.

During the years of the war Ben Greet was requested by the board of education of London to present Shakespearean plays in every part of that city and its suburbs. More than a million school children attended these presentations.

In appearance Ben Greet is distinctive. His abundant hair in snowy white, and is brushed back effectively from a fine forehead. His face is clean shaven, with well marked features that add dignity to a commanding physique.

Incoming Officers To Be Inaugurated

The newly elected campus officers will be inaugurated Tuesday, April 14, from ten-thirty to eleven-fifteen in Memorial hall, at which time the third period will be cut short of 15 minutes.

Each speaker will be formally introduced by the incoming president of the student body, Mayne Albright. "Red" Green, retiring president, will preside. He will give a survey of student government after which the president-elect will outline the policy of next year.

Three other officers will outline their policies for the coming year. The officers to speak will be Jack Dungan, editor of the Daily Tar Heel; Pardner James, president-elect of the Y; and Hamilton Hobgood, president of the rising senior class.

Many University Alumni Are Among Baseball's Immortals

Appearing yesterday, the April issue of the Alumni Review carried a story written by Glenn Holder, assistant to the editor, which reviews the history made by University graduates in professional baseball. In the beginning, it makes reference to the ex-Tar Heel diamond stars who are going into big league this year. The story follows:

A quartet of promising rookies has been sent up to major league and Class A baseball this spring from Emerson field. Two of the former Tar Heels, Jim Maus and Nap Lufty, were in the spring training camp of the St. Louis Cardinals, National League champs, while the other two, Burgess Whitehead and Lewis S. Riggs, are with the Columbus, Ohio, club of the American Asociation.

Jim was star catcher and captain of the Carolina nine last spring, while Nap played first base last spring and was captain and third baseman the year before. It is probable that both boys will perform this summer with the Greensboro Patriots of the Piedmont League.

Whitehead was captain-elect of the 1931 Tar Heels, but he was ruled ineligible a couple of weeks ago after he had signed with Columbus. Riggs, a sophomore last fall, played freshman ball here last spring and was slated for a berth with the varsity this year. They left Chapel Hill several days ago to join the Columbus club in spring training.

The advent of these Tar Heels into professional ranks recalls the careers of a large number of former Carolina baseball stars who made their marks in the big leagues and the minors after they left the University. Recently the writer "chewed the rag" with three authorities on things baseballistic at the University, thereby secuing some interesting glimpses into the past. These men, R. B. Lawson, director of the University gym, Coach Jim Ashmore and "Dean" Paulsen, manager of the University Laundry and proprietor of the Smoke Shop, are probably better acquainted with University athletic history than anyone else in Chapel Hill.

ANNUAL FESTIVAL OF THREE DANCES PROVES SUCCESS

Excellent Music, House Parties, And Gay Spring Apparel Enliven Week-End.

By the unanimous agreement of those who were present, the three dances of the first annual Spring Festival, which was concluded last night with the Dance of the Shadows, were a success. "Maestro Mike" Speciale and his Crusaders, who furnished the music, fulfilled the promise of their slogan, "Everybody dance." It was said by those who heard Mike and his band, that they furnished some of the best dance music ever heard on the Hill.

Directly after intermission, at every dance, the Crusaders rendered a group of novelty numbers of the type which have made the orchestra so popular as a radio and supper club feature. At regular intervals during the two night dances, the orchestra played the songs of the five fraternities sponsoring the dances for no-break dances for the members of those fraternities and their girls.

The Festival, it seems, afforded the first real opportunity for a spring fashion display in Chapel Hill. Against the sharply contrasting background of the young men's black and white outfits, the girls paraded their lovely evening dresses at the two night dances. Then, at the Saturday afternoon dansant, the light grey, tan, and green of the young men's suits and the brilliant, light dresses of the girls presented a scene of kalaedascopic beauty.

Blue and white crepe paper streamers covered the roof and walls of Bynum gymnasium in which the dances were held. The chaperones' booths at either end of the floor and the orchestra stand at the rear center of the floor were covered in blue, trimmed with white.

Official chaperones for the Festival were: President Frank Graham, Miss Kate Graham, Dr. and Mrs. W. S. Bernard, T. F. Hickerson, Dr. and Mrs. W. F. Prouty, Dr. and Mrs. A. C. Mc-

ALUMNI REVIEW PRINTS STORY ON NEW UNIVERSITY

"The Greater University—What It Will Embrace" Is Prominent Among Interesting Articles.

The April issue of the Alumni Review was released from the press yesterday. The cover portrayed a scene from the University's beautiful arboretum.

The leading article was "The Greater University—What It Will Embrace." The story reviewed the passing of the consolidation bill in the legislature and its contents. In concluding, the history of State College and N. C. C. W., the two institutions which are to be joined with the University was cited.

"The Sun Glass" contained a personal message from Kemp P. Lewis, president of the General Alumni Association. In his letter Mr. Lewis expresses his sincere regret that the late J. Felix Harvey was taken so early in his term. He also stated that he was surprised to find that out of the 15,000 living alumni only about 1,100 paid dues last year as members of the Association. As a concluding statement he said, "Please do not stand aloof, continuing to procrastinate in this matter. The Association needs you and most of all the University needs your sympathy and your support."

There followed a series of short articles headed by "Commencement Will Be An Unusually Attractive Event This Year." Then there was an item concerning Dean Bradshaw and his recent work. The Human Relations Institute, which will meet at the University May 3 through 10, occupied the next position in the Review.

The fact that the University will add a new school to its already numerous list was brought out in another article. This new school will be the School of Library Science with Dr. L. R. Wilson, head librarian as director.

A page of cuts of the newly elected campus officers was run, which included Mayne Albright, W. C. Medford, F. M. James,

TAR HEEL STAFF ISSUES CALL FOR NEW REPORTERS

Men Interested in Writing Are Asked to Meet in Staff Office Sunday Night.

Men interested in journalistic work will be given a chance to try out for a position on the Daily Tar Heel staff when a special meeting of new reporters convenes this evening in 104 Alumni building at seven o'clock. Those desiring to participate in the tryouts for the editorial board will meet in the same room at five o'clock this afternoon.

Carrying out the plans of the new editor and managing editor, there will be places for twenty rising junior and fifteen rising sophomores. Men who would be interested in doing special expository writing are also asked to report with the reporters at the night meeting. It will be necessary that these men have passed at least two or three of the higher English composition courses here in the University.

Special Tar Heel charms are given to the men doing the best work during the entire year. These awards are made at the end of each year, and are presented only to those members of the staff who have shown the most ability, interest, and originality in their work.

Aside from the actual journalistic experience which the work on the paper affords, pictures of the staff's most efficient men are published each year in the Daily Tar Heel page of the Yackety Yack.

The editorial try-outs tonight are the first which have been held this year, and according to the present plan they will be the last chance for new men to secure a position on the staff this year.

Committee Encounters Difficulty In Securing 'A Chair And A Rose'

Angna Enters, the pantomimc dancer who appeared in Memorial hall on the student entertainment program last week, had the members of the entertainment committee in the well-known swivet when she demanded, for use in her performance, certain properties which were not to be found in Chapel Hill on the short notice that she gave.

One of these was an Empire chair and the other nothing more than a red rose. When the committee was called upon to produce the chair, the happy thought came to J. P. Harland, archaeology professor and a member of the committee, that the chair might be secured from William Steene's home which has just such articles of furniture in it. But the Steenes had left town for Mississippi just ten days before.

Then Mr. Burch, whose University buildings department shop turns out anything from freshman paddles to houses, was called in. One of his assistants, Mr. Horner, was put on the job and instructed to build within four hours something that should answer the committee's description of an Empire chair.

That was at two o'clock. Within two hours the chair was finished, Mr. Horner and another man having done the work. Miss Enters used it in her performance and it is now in the Playmakers' property shop, to be saved for their use. Mr. Horner's chair had the required two arms, and no back; upholstery, consisting of a pillow covered by red cloth; a substructure in the form of two letter U's, the lower one inverted and supporting the other; and a coat of bright gilt paint on all the woodwork.

Then, after the difficulty over the Empire chair, while Miss Enters was preparing for her performance Tuesday night, she let it be known that a red rose was needed for one of her interpretations. Dean A. W. Hobbs thought that would be an easy bill to fill, and he told the lady as much.

In his official capacity as chairman of the committee, he set about to procure one plain and simple red rose, as might be found in anybody's garden. His difficulties were numerous. Due to the Easter demand, there was no red, red rose to be found. Finally his search downtown led him to Spencer hall. Mrs. Lee, the matron, said that all her flowers were withered, but a much-bedraggled rose was put in water to revive and Miss Enters used it in her interpretation of "The Madonna of the Rose."

Such is the life of an Entertainment Committee-man.

Legislature Names Trustees To Govern Combined Schools

Di Will Discuss House Taxation of Football

The bills on the Di Senate calendar for consideration at the Tuesday night session are as follows:

1. Resolved: That the House tax of ten percent on college football games is unjust and unfair.

2. Resolved: That the Federal government should institute a plan to limit tobacco production, similar to the Stevenson plan for limiting British rubber production.

MOVIE GUILD TO OFFER TROPIC PICTURE TODAY

The Movie Guild program for today is the feature "Rango," another of the usual productions, of the nature of "Chang" and "Grass," laid in the jungles of tropical lands and dealing with the conflict of primitive forces. "Rango," produced by Ernest Schoedsack, was filmed in the wilds of Sumatra, and the whole task required eighteen months for completion.

The regulations governing attendance at these Guild programs have been modified to the extent that no longer is membership in the organization necessary in order to enjoy the Sunday features. Admission may be gained at the door whether anyone has attended any of the previous shows or not.

French Club Meets

The French Club met Friday night in the Episcopal Parish house. Charles Gault was elected president to fill the vacancy left by the resignation of Benjamin Napier.

Dr. J. C. Lyons and Mr. J. A. Downs told something of the night life of Paris which was followed by a general discussion. After that the club played French games.

ASSEMBLY ALSO FILLS VACANCIES ON OLD BOARDS

New Board of 100 To Take Office Next Year When Merger Of Three Schools Occurs.

Trustees of the newly-consolidated University of North Carolina were named by the General Assembly in a special joint session of the two houses Friday. Of the three sets of trustees appointed, two are to fill out the terms of the individual boards of the present University and State College until July 1, 1932, at which time the third board of one hundred members is to take their places.

For the first time since its establishment, the University of North Carolina will have twelve women trustees on its board.

There was considerable struggle and sacrifice shown on the floor as old members held on, new ones contended, and others effaced themselves for friends. Senator Harry P. Grier added a Jr. to his name and thus conveyed the position to his son. Many others resigned in favor of friends while others struggled mightily to maintain their positions.

Following is the list of those who were named as trustees of the Greater University:

Terms Expiring 1933

Sidney B. Alexander of Mecklenburg, Pascal S. Boyd of Iredell, Josephus Daniels of Wake, Arthur M. Dixon of Gaston, Richard Tillman Fountain of Edgecombe, C. W. Gold of Guilford, Mrs. Annie Shepherd Graham of Chowan, James Alexander Gray of Forsyth, George Chancellor Green of Halifax, Junius D. Grimes of Beaufort, A. A. Hicks of Granville, Robert Eugene Little of Anson.

Mrs. Lillie C. Mebane of Rockingham, Angus Wilton McLean of Robeson, Cameron Morrison of Mecklenburg, Harris Newman of New Hanover, Clarence Poe of Wake, D. Reeves Noland of Haywood, Mrs. May Tomlinson of Guilford, Miss Easdale Shaw of Richmond, B. F. Shelton of Edgecombe, George Stephens of Buncombe, Irvin B. Tucker of Columbus, J. Urgent Meeting Of Friendship Council

The Freshman Friendship Council has been asked by the University Administration and those conducting "High School Week" to set as host to the high school boys and girls who will crowd the campus the latter part of this week for the debate and athletic contests.

This means, first, that the council must find homes for about three hundred and fifty high school boys in the dormitories and fraternity houses for April 16-17. Each member of the council will be asked to respond promptly and cheerfully and do the small part of this task assigned to him. It is therefore urgent that every council member be present at the next council meeting, Monday night, April 13, at seven-fifteen o'clock in the Y parlor.

This Splendid Isolation

"Splendid Isolation" is a phrase with which well-bred Americans have felt intrigued for more than a century and a half. This despite an ever narrowing world horizon, and an interdependence which makes it obligatory for every individual to become without further delay a citizen of the world.

If we are to ever break with this principle, this find old tradition, the effort will have to be make by the colleges. The brave axiom, "America, may she ever be right, but right or wrong, my country." One of the most popular and pureile of the national weeklies flaunts this in their "flag." It is part of bone and sinew among the great majority.

Insidious in its conception, and destructive in its self-complacency, the doctrine of the infallible offers the greatest threat to continued world peace that we are faced with today. War is not the spontaneous outbreak of hostile sentiment between two or more otherwise friendly countries, but rather the climax to a long series of misunderstandings, mistreatments, and tactless isolations. War is the outgrowth of attitudes built over decades and even centuries, which cause the contesting parties when hostilities break out to be unable to judge accurately because of the prejudices accumulated over long periods of time. No nations can struggle to exterminate each other if they have been unanimously friendly toward one another. Differences are easily settled by arbitration and conference quite readily between or among friendly groups, but rarely among hostile ones.

War can only embitter for relatively long terms the contesting parties. On the one hand the bloated condition of victory, and on the other the hate and sting of defeat make reconciliation and normal exchange of cultures, and the benefits of art, science, and literature impossible.

Provincialism in its chilling, stultifying isolation and contempt for that which does not belong is the world's most potent influence toward war, another which would, we are assured by scientists, move civilization back to a condition bordering on the dark ages.

The Higher Higher Education

During the past week more than three hundred letters were sent out by the graduate office—and all but a handful, about twenty-five, were politely worded "rejection slips" to the amazingly large number of applicants for fellowships and scholarships.

It has been a universal experience among the colleges and universities of America to find that for every available fellowship, there were anywhere from thirty to two hundred applicants. It is said that at Tuft's College, a rather small school, more than 1000 applications were received for two teaching fellowships, paying $1000 for the academic year. Among numerous graduate students, complaints and regrets were heard that so many students in America are turning to advanced studies, and research work. But it is probably only among that group that adverse criticism of the expansion and democratisation of advanced education is heard; for it is apparent that with the increasing number of graduate students, the graduate schools all over the country will have to resort to the medium of tightening up on their standards in order to prevent a veritable inundation of mediocre and uninspired students. And those mediocre advanced students, who heretofore found a pleasant haven in the graduate schools, will be forced to the secondary schools to teach, and so, too, will the elementary schools be officered by teachers with advanced studies to their credit.

Whatever may be the disruptions to the time honored scholar class, minute and exclusive, the increasing number of research students will certainly benefit the elementary and secondary schools—and it is no secret that they have long been wanting in properly equipped staffs.—M.

The Carolina Playmakers
Thursday, Friday and Saturday Nights
Reviewed on Friday Night

In their twenty-eighth bill of original plays The Carolina Playmakers presented four plays by four new playwrights. Continuing the policy which the management inaugurated this year, many new and practically inexperienced actors were seen in all the plays. The departure from the former plan of using the most experienced actors available for the parts is due primarily to a desire on the part of the Playmakers staff to bring more students into intimate contact with the stage, thereby giving the participants an opportunity to acquire a deeper appreciation for the drama. While the quality of the histrionics may have suffered to a considerable degree this year, I feel that the benefits which will be enjoyed by the greater number will more than justify this change of policy.

The first play of the bill was little more than a character study of Nag's Head fisher-folk. The author, Irene Fussler, attempted to inject into Ever' Snitch the semblance of a plot concerning the desire of a man to father children, but it was completely lost in the characterization. Muriel Wolfe as the neighbor completely walked off with the acting honors. Chapel Hill audiences have grown to expect an excellent performance from Miss Wolfe and they have yet to be disappointed. Donald Wood as Henry and Marion Tatum as his wife were both satisfactory. Mr. Wood, however, failed to give the impression of the hardy seaman which we have so long associated with the Eastern North Carolina coast. Bobbie Koch, a mere youngster, succeeded in remembering and delivering his lines in a manner which would have been a credit to a more mature actor. Evan Vaughn deserves commendation if only for his make-up. All of the actors failed to use the dialect which is so peculiar to Nag's Head. Instead they resorted to the traditional folk-language which has been made famous by the Playmakers. The directors must bring themselves to realize that North Carolina is not limited to one dialect but that each section has its own enunciation.

I wish that I could simply say, "The Playmakers presented The Blue Remembered Hills for no reason whatsoever," and let it go at that, but, of course, such a procedure is impossible. The play is undoubtedly the worse which has been presented while I have been at Carolina. It is impossible to imagine the play committee selecting the manuscript to be given in its present form. Just who is to be held responsible for the hour of boredom which the audience was compelled to endure, I can not say. The first scene of the play is complete in itself, and if the author had stopped there this tirade would be unnecessary. Not content, however, with a lengthy scene, filled with lengthy and unnatural speeches, the author forced an unwilling audience to sit through another scene equally as long and infinitely more tiresome. The program said that the action was continuous form 9 o'clock until 11:30 o'clock, and it came very near to being the absolute truth. The acting, considering the vehicle, was passable.

A Very Pale Pink Angel by Ellen Stewart came as a very delightful relief. I was even able to forgive some of the most atrocious puns ever heard on or off the Playmaker stage. The play is a fantacy of Heaven in which the author expresses some opinions which could only have been acquired during an earthly existance. The title role was played by Miss Stewart, who made a beautiful and attractive pink angel. Ralph Westerman in the part of The Man was both handsome and convincing. The lighting and sound effects during the arrival and departure of the Celestal Bus were excellent.

The last play on the bill, Always A Bettin' Man, by Tom Loy had previously been given in a studio production. As a skit, it is funny enough. Charles Elledge as the Lunatic gave an excellent comedy performance, which was really worthy of a better play. If some of the unnecessary blasphemy had been omitted, the play would have been much more enjoyable to a large number in the audience. The use of profanity, even before a modern audience, is permissable only when it adds to the characterization or the plot of the production.

I would not feel justified in concluding this article without first having mentioned the ungentlemanlike conduct of several students who occupied the right hand portion of the front row. It is to be regreted that decent people should be forced to listen to the very audiable dissensions of these self-appointed critics.

The Sunday Hangover

By Wex Malone

The grapejuice was unusually bad last night, consequently this column is likely to be unusualiy bad this morning. All of which goes to prove that in the end it is the public that suffers from prohibition.

All hail the purified law school! The politicians are prophets without honor in their own country. President Williams announced that the law school should pass a resolution to abolish politics in its annual election. "Yes and we'll pass another to abolish this bad weather," came a voice from the rear. Well, it was done. The weather is still bad, but politics are now a thing of the past. All in all, it was a grand and glorious frameup to end frameups.

This doesn't mean, however, that everything is hotsy totsy with the lawyers. Prospects for the new dormitory are fading away. The "med" students insist on letting their dogs bark, which is going to make it hard to sleep in Carr Building. Already applicants are striking their names from the list. Miss Alexander, the co-ed department of the law school, announced that she could never room in a building in such close proximity to a kennel.

Turning our attention to number two Valley View Terrace we find things rather blue there. The young people are having a hard time with their mural decorations. Professor Scott insisted paternally on hanging a Japanese print termed "T[he] Wrestler" over the sofa.

Scott's idea really wasn't so bad. The young folks had banded together to form a misogynistic organization. This fail[ed] too. Bryson turned Nunn-conformist.

Speaking of Bryson. I had the intention of even mentioning him this morning. He brought the following remarks on himself. 'The dear old 'Pow-House' has turned story-teller. It reached your columnist's ears that he went down to the Pi P[hi] house and entertained the lovely creatures with his tales about Hennie-Pennie, and Piggy-Wiggie. I should have known it without being told, because the dear little elf toddled into the room and announced, "Block[y] Wocky is going to beddie-we[ll] die." I misunderstood the last word and kept him on his feet for a good hour.

There are ways to travel, and then there are ways to travel. Charlie Shannon has the best method. He suddenly announced that he was going to take an extended tour to the west coast. When someone timidly inquired how he proposed to finance such a lengthy voyage he was met with this retort from the famous old gentleman and slave-owner, "Burn my bridges behind me and collect the insurance."

List prices of stock exchange securities increased by nearly $5,000,000,000 in the last month. These are certainly hard times. —San Diego Union.

Tar Heels Take Sixth Victory Over Virginia

CAROLINA ATTACK LED BY HITTING OF HOUSE, DUNLAP

FROSH BEAT CAMPBELL

George Hinton Pitches 6-1 Victory Over Brewer, Virginia Twirler.

The Carolina Tar Heels won their sixth game of the season yesterday afternoon, defeating Virginia, 6-1. The Heels now have a record of six victories and one defeat, bowing to Williams, Washington and Lee pitching ace, in their only loss.

George Hinton won his second victory of the year, holding the Cavaliers to six scattered hits. Hinton's first win was over Pennsylvania, holding the runners-ups in the eastern intercollegiate league to three runs, while his team mates slugged three pitchers for fifteen runs.

Brewer, twirling for the Virginians was hit hard by the Heels, yielding twelve hits and half as many runs.

House, stellar left fielder, and Paul Dunlap, slugging first sacker, led the offensive with three safe blows each. Peacock, center fielder, Captain Potter, catcher, and Wyrick, second baseman, gathered a brace of safeties to take second place hitting honors.

Today's win left Carolina leading the Tri-State League with four wins and one loss in five league games. Washington and Lee went into second place with three wins and one defeat.

Freshmen-Campbell College

The Carolina Tar Babies won their third game of the season here yesterday afternoon, defeating Campbell College 10-4. The junior college nine jumped away to a four run lead but were unable to hold it, the Yearlings bunching six singles, with a walk and a fielder's choice in the sixth inning to score six runs.

The Campbell runs came in the first and third frames, bunching two singles with a walk, a fielder's choice, and an error, in the third inning to counter three runs.

Harman, with two out of five, and McElver, with three out of four, led the Campbell batters.

Harry Phipps, frosh second sacker, led the Tar Babies, getting three singles in five trips to the plate, two of these coming in the sixth inning. Brandt, first sacker, got the only extra base hit of the game, doubling to center in the fourth.

The score by innings:

Campbell 001 003 000—	4	9	5
Freshmen 000 006 04x—10	9	8

Batteries: Coffee, Thigpen, Menan, Hight, and Tomasino; Frankel and Mathewson.

Tennis Reserves Win 5-4

The Varsity Reserves defeated Boy's High, of Atlanta, 5-4, yesterday afternoon on the University courts.

The Tar Heels won three singles matches and two doubles matches for their margin of victory. With the score 4-4 and one match to play, Bailey and Huskins came through for Carolina, although Boy's High held a 5-2 lead in the third set in the early stages. Boy's High reached set point twelve times according to official count but were unable to hold the fighting Tar Heels.

Carolina Trackmen Are Winners Over Georgia Tech 89-37

Continuing their perfect record, the Carolina trackmen defeated Georgia Tech 89-37, at Atlanta yesterday on a heavy track. Carolina won eleven first places, seven second, and nine third places to run up the margin of victory. Those winning first places were: Marland (2), Drane, Watkins, Jones, Baucom, Slusser, Ruble, Hamlet, Bagby, and Dameron.

Marland, with ten points gathered from first places in the 100 yard dash and 440 yard run, led the Tar Heel scoring.

North Carolina
North Carolina State
Duke

Now that "Lefty" Jenkins, Bill Werber, Henry Kistler, Nick Warren, and "Foxy" Dean have all graduated at Duke, North Carolina has a splendid opportunity to regain the state championship in baseball once more. During the past three years, "Lefty" Jenkins has beat the Tar Heels six times. All the seniors here on the Hill are hoping for at least one diamond victory over the Dukemen before they step up and grab their sheepskins. All of the "Big Five" teams appear to be more evenly matched this year than they have been in a long time, In fact, any one of the teams may win the championship.

When Captain Burgess Whitehead, star short-stop, was found to be ineligible, it looked like Carolina's baseball prospects had gone the way of all flesh." However, "Pop" Ashmore has whipped a new infield into excellent shape. In Paul Dunlap, the Tar Heels have the best first sacker they have had since Ed Mackie left. Dunlap, a terrific hitter, should lead the team in batting this year. His fielding, while still a bit unsteady, will improve with experience. Pete Wyrick has swatted and fielded well in all of the games played so far. Furthermore, he functions well with "Smoky" Ferebee around the keystone bag. Ferebee, a sophomore, has done a clever job at filling the shoes of Whitehead. His fielding has been unusually brilliant, while he has maintained his batting above par. Willie Powell, another second year man, has been playing a sensational game at the hot corner. Both his fielding and hitting have been good. He is fast on his feet and possesses an accurate throwing arm that enables him to get men out on first with regularity.

Carolina has a slugging outfield. Henry House, John Peacock, and Tom Blythe are "framming" (apologies to Boucher) the ball to all corners of the field. House and Blythe, two of the few veterans on the squad, are batting and fielding better than ever this year. House's comeback is particularly impressive. The Weldon boy broke his arm last year and didn't have such a good season. John Peacock has been holding down centerfield in a fine manner. The Wilmington boy has been getting more than his share of the extra base knocks. He is fast and rangy, just the right kind of man for the center field.

Captain Potter and Pattisall are about the best pair of masksmen in the state. Both boys are good batsmen and have good throwing arms.

Before the season started, the pitching staff was a big problem. However, "Nonchalant" Longest, George Hinton, Shields, and Paul Edwards have given Coach Ashmore a "Big Four" hurling staff which is about the best in the State. Longest looks like he will have his best year. George Hinton has come through in fine style this spring. George has hurled 12 1-3 innings, allowed seven hits, fanned eight, and walked four men. That is good pitching in any man's league. Hinton never pitched any baseball before he came here; he was formerly an outfielder. Through hard work he has developed into one of the most dependable hurlers on the team. Shields looked very good in his start against Pennsylvania. The boy has plenty of stuff, but needs more confidence in himself. Paul Edwards, after taking it on the chin against Washington and Lee, came back last week to beat Maryland. His work will improve as the season grows older, Griffith is another good mound prospect who will be good for relief roles. Croom, Leonard, and Jimmie Moore are good reserves for the infield and outfield.

Chick Doak has plenty of players over at the West Raleigh institution, but it is mostly new and untried material. State's infield has Gerock on first, Wood at second, Wilkie patroling short, and Morris looking after things at third. Hargrove, Goodman, and Duke are the regular fly chasers. The best reserves are Blake, Brewer, and Ebey. Turner will do most of the catching for the Techmen. The ineligibility of Captain Bill Averette took away Doak's best

SPORTS PROGRAM FOR WEEK LISTS THIRTEEN EVENTS

Golf, Baseball, and Track on Week's Schedule of Events In Sports.

Carolina athletic teams have another heavy week ahead, with several home events of more than usual interest, and a triple-header program for Saturday that promises to be a corker.

On next Saturday Carolina's track and baseball teams meet V. P. I. on Emerson field, while Grant, Hines and Co., of tennis fame, will meet Duke on the varsity courts.

The varsity nine, on Northern tour, plays at Washington and Lee Monday; V. M. I., Tuesday; V. P. I., Wednesday; returning home to meet V. P. I. here on Saturday in another Tri-State League game.

The V. P. I. meet is the only engagement for the Tar Heels' Southern Championship trackmen, but it should be a good-sized job. V. P. I. has a long line of fine distance stars, along with such others as Rule, quarter miler; Turner, vaulter; and Swart, shot putter.

Besides their Saturday meet with Duke here, Carolina's tennis team will play in the big North-South Tourney at Pinehurst beginning Monday. Entries will be Grant, Hines, Yeomans, Hendlin, Liskin, Captain Graham, Wright and Abels.

The undefeated golfers will play Duke, Wednesday, and Georgia Tech, Saturday, both over the nearby Hope Valley Country Club course.

Several frashman events are also carded. The Tar Baby nine plays Danville Military Institute here, Tuesday afternoon and Mount Airy High here, Thursday afternoon, while the Tar Baby tennis team will meet Winston-Salem High here, Wednesday afternoon, and Greensboro High here, Saturday afternoon.

SIXTY WORK OUT FOR INTRAMURAL BOXING TOURNEY

Lightweight and Welter Classes Prove Most Popular as Varsity And Freshmen Work Out.

The second week of spring boxing practice ended Friday afternoon with over sixty men working out for the intramural tournament, which is scheduled to be run off sometime the first part of May. The remaining members of the squad are varsity candidates who are trying to get the jump on their competitors for next year's boxing team.

There has been very little actual warfare in the ring as yet, but the intramural candidates have been sparring for the past week and several of the varsity men have been going a few rounds each day. Coach Rowe has been putting the newcomers through drills each afternoon with the emphasis placed on the use of the left hand. The boys have been jabbing and hooking with their lefts all week and, so far, have not been allowed to use their rights at all. Still, the workouts have been far from tame, and the squad has continued to thrive on the work given them.

The lightweight and welterweight classes claim the majority of the tournament entrants, with comparatively few men working in the other divisions. The lightheavyweight class is the smallest with only three men entered, but the bamtamweight and featherweight classes are also poorly represented.

Potsy Daniels, heavyweight, Preston, welterweight, Francis, middleweight, and Brooker, lightweight, have been showing the most promise so far. Several others who have been doing good work are Burgwynn, middleweight, Cahoon, Brown, Brunda, and Finlator, welterweights, and Errico, bantamweight.

Billy Stallings is another man out for the intramural crown in the 145 pound class. Stallings was a member of the varsity squad last winter, but has never competed in either varsity or freshman matches and hence is eligible for another crack at the intramural championship. Stallings went to the semi-finals in the tournament held last December, but lost to Paul Hudson, by a technical knockout in the fourth round, after one of the best intramural fights ever staged in the Tin Can.

Bruce Langdon, a rising member of this year's state championship freshman team, is one of the men out for a varsity berth. Bruce is a lightweight and is making a determined bid for Noah Goodridge's old position. He will find opposition in Jack Farris, a veteran of the 1930 varsity team, who is also out for this class.

Men working out for the welterweight place, made vacant by the graduation of Dail Holderness, include Cecil Jackson, holdover from this year's team, Paul Hudson, Red Allsbrook, and John Nicholson, frosh battlers, and John Preston, Billy Stallings, and George Brown.

Golfers Defeat Generals

Led by Adams and Goodes, with perfect scores, the Carolina golfers defeated the Washington and Lee Generals 17-1 over the Hope Valley Course yesterday afternoon. Carolina has yet to suffer a loss.

Adams, Carolina No. 2, turned in a seventy-seven on the first eighteen holes and a seventy-four on the final round, to get a 151 for the match. Goodes, Tar Heel No. 4, turned in a score of 157 to take second place.

Diamond Squad Out To Avenge Defeat By Washington And Lee

Carolina Team to Meet V. M. I. and V. P. I. on Virginia Trip, Also.

WILLIAMS IS HEEL JINX

Ashmore Takes Likely Squad of Seventeen Men on Five Game Tour.

The University of North Carolina nine concluded its visit to the University of Virginia yesterday, packed its bags, and set out across the mountains for Washington and Lee, where on Monday, the Tar Heels will take up the second half of their Tri-State League tour.

The Tar Heels will play Washington and Lee at Lexington Monday afternoon, V. M. I. at Lexington Tuesday afternoon, and V. P. I. at Blacksburg Wednesday afternoon, returning home to get ready to engage V. P. I. again at Chapel Hill on Saturday.

North Carolina will be playing V. M. I. and V. P. I. for the first time, but at Washington and Lee they will be out for revenge in the worst way. Pitcher Leigh Williams set them down 8-2 in a previous meeting, and was so unkind as not to give them a hit for six innings.

Washington and Lee will probably have the old jinx Williams ready for the Tar Heels again Monday, but he may meet a different fate if the Tar Heels are on their hitting stride. Coach Jim Ashmore's most probable mound choice for Carolina is George Hinton, who did excellent relief work in the first game with the Generals, and who held Princeton to five hits and beat them 15-3 last week.

The Tar Heels have a likely squad of 17 men on this five-game tour: Captain Potter and Pattisall, catchers; House, Peacock, Blythe and Croom, outfielders; Dunlap, Wyrick, Ferebee, Powell, Leonard and Moore, infielders; and Longest, Edwards, Shields, Hinton, and Griffith, pitchers, made the trip.

Intramural Wrestlers

All men planning to enter the intramural wrestling tournament are requested to report to the Tin Can, to start training Monday, April 13, at four o'clock. Entrants are required to attend these practices for a period of two weeks to be eligible to enter the tournament.

ANDERSON NAMED AS NOTRE DAME COACH FOR 1931

Heartley "Hunk" Anderson will carry on for Knute Rockne.

Anderson, who played for Rockne at Notre Dame, closing his intercollegiate career in 1921, and later became assistant to the dead leader, was named by the Rev. Fr. Charles L. O'Donnell, C. S. C., president of the University, to direct football next year, but without the title of head coach—a title that belongs to Knute Rockne.

Anderson, who will be assisted by Jack Chevigny, star halfback who finished his playing days in 1928, will be known as "senior" coach. Chevigny's title will be "junior" coach.

Anderson came to Notre Dame from Calumet, Mich., in 1928 with immortal George Gipp and O. J. Larson. He became a regular guard in 1919 and served three years. While he did not reach sensational heights, he was considered by Rockne as one of the greatest of Notre Dame's linemen. His spirit and capacity for work appealed to Rockne, and when Anderson was graduated, Rock made him line coach.

He remained at Notre Dame until the 1928 season when he became head coach at St. Louis University. He remained at St. Louis two seasons, but returned to Notre Dame last fall when Tom Lieb resigned to go to Loyola of California. The Notre Dame line of 1930 was a huge factor in helping the Irish to their greatest heights. Notre Dame was not too well equipped with first rate line reserves through more than half of the season, but at the finish, when they were most needed, Anderson had them ready for their tasks.

Chevigny was rated as outstanding back in 1928, his only season as a regular, but the team that year was the weakest Rockne turned out, and Chevigny failed to gain as much recognition as he might.

At The Carolina

William Haines' latest feature starts the week off for the Carolina Monday. In "A Tailor Made Man" the incorrigibly chesty Haines is seen again in one of his characteristic comedy-dramas, and one dealing with big business as the theme—combined with a love element of course. The star abandons some of his wise cracking in this performance, but manages to supply as many laughs as ever in spite of the more serious tone of the picture. Dorothy Jordan supports the leading player, and others in the cast include William Austin and Marjorie Rambeau.

Will Rogers, who needs introductions to no one whether screen or stage fan, appears in his newest, "A Connecticut Yankee," based on the celebrated burlesque-historical novel by Mark Twain. A better role than that of the wisecracking, materialistic, kind hearted American who goes to sleep and wakes up in the days of King Arthur could not have been selected for the inimitable Will, whose talents are perfectly suited for a performance of this nature. All the atmosphere and background of the original is preserved, and the odd mixtures of the new and the old that are constantly arising under Rogers' efforts to civilize the people, cause many laughs.

"Strangers May Kiss," Norma Shearer's latest, brings that polished performer back to the screen with all colors flying. Miss Shearer, who last year won the motion picture award for the best screen performance of the year in her "Divorcee," is perhaps the best known actress of the vitaphone and has a string of successes to her credit. She is ably supported in this feature by Robert Montgomery, who has been seen with her before.

The modern language production for the week, coming Wednesday night at eleven o'clock, is the all German talkie "The Tiger Murder Case," made in Berlin and produced with an all German cast.

"Ten Cents a Dance," a dance hall drama starring Barbara Stanwyck, is the feature for Thursday. Miss Stanwyck, who has a number of past successful performances to her credit, is remembered especially for "Ladies of Leisure" and "Illicit."

There followed a complete account of the spring sports at the University including baseball, track, tennis and fencing.

There was, of course, the departments, "Here and There with the Alumni," "Around the Well," then "Topics in Brief." A final article on the recent campus elections and their heat, along with "Keeping Up with the Classes" completed the issue.

pitcher. Vance Scott, McLawhorn, and John Lanning are the leading pitchers in the Tech camp.

Jack Coombs is faced with the job of rebuilding a team over at Duke. He lost his infield, star battery, and a couple of outfielders last June. Colley, Kersey, Robertshaw, and Shore compose Duke's rookie infield. Time alone will tell what they can do. Captain Bennett, Rochelle, Harrington, and Bost make up the outfield brigade. Bennett is the only experienced man in the outer garden. Voorhees is attempting to fill Nick Warren's big shoes. Bob Coombs, Coach Coomb's nephew, and Tim McKeithan are the best pitching prospects. Duke was also dealt a body blow when it was discovered that Cochrane, Mickey's brother, was ineligible for college baseball; he was a pitcher. Old Jack Coombs is a wise baseball man, and will have a good team over at the Duke flats.

Coach John Caddell has bright prospects over at Wake Forest. Joyner, Mills, Earp, and Captain Benton give the Deacons a pretty good infield. Mills and Benton are hard hitters and fast fielders. White, Lister, and Bethune compose a fast trio of gardners. Bethune is a heavy swatter. The Baptists were hard hit behind the plate when Captain Ralph Gillespie was found to be ineligible. Hicks, however, is a fair catcher. Joe Meador looks like the best of the Deacon pitchers. Tom Lanning will be missed very much over at Wake Forest this year. Van Griffin and Junie Barnes are both good mound prospects.

Davidson, on paper, looks like the weakest of the "Big Five" teams. Proctor will hold down the initial sack, Goodson the keystone post, Mills the shortfield position, and Bernhardt will handle the third base assignment. Proctor and Goodson, both seasoned players, assure the Wildcats of a pretty good infield. Mathis, Bradsher, Morrison, and Covington give Davidson a fine outfield. Mathis and Bradsher are hard hitters and speedy fielders. The Wildcats have one of the best receivers in the State in Armfield; he hits hard and often, and has a nice throwing arm. Davidson is short on slab material. Bailey and Croker are two of their best hurlers.

Henry Ford says a dollar will now buy from 50 to 75 per cent more than it would before it became 100 per cent harder to get.

Intosh, Mrs. F. G. Patterson, Dr. and Mrs. T. J. Wilson, Jr., George McKie, Mr. and Mrs. C. P. Spruill, Dr. and Mrs. E. L. Mackie, and Mr. and Mrs. S. A. Stoudemire, all of Chapel Hill.

In addition, the chaperones of the four house parties and other specially invited guests acted as dance chaperones also. Chaperones for the Phi Gamma Delta house party were Mrs. Sterling Stoudemire of Chapel Hill and Mrs. Summerville of Durham; for Alpha Tau Omega, Mrs. F. G. Patterson of Chapel Hill and Mr. and Mrs. Andy McIntosh of Raleigh; for Phi Delta Theta, Mrs. Lillian M. Florence, house mother; and for Pi Kappa Phi, Mrs. C. V. Lewis, house mother.

Friday evening the Pi Kappa Phi and Alpha Tau Omega fraternities entertained at formal dinners, honoring their guests. Yesterday morning, the Pi Kappa Alphas were hosts at an eleven o'clock breakfast at the Carolina Inn.

Following shortly after the Sunset Dansant yesterday afternoon from four until seven o'clock, Phi Gamma Delta gave a formal dinner in their residence.

Every young lady attending the Festival, of which there were around one hundred, received as a favor a pendant bearing the seal of the fraternity on whose invitation she was attending the dances and with the words, "Spring Festival, '31" engraved on the back.

Phi Delta Theta, Phi Gamma Delta, Pi Kappa Alpha, Alpha Tau Omega, and Pi Kappa Phi staged the affair jointly.

The Festival was the first major event of the spring season on the campus. It is to be followed shortly by the Junior-Senior Ball, for which Johnny Hamp and his Kentucky Serenaders have been engaged, on April 25 and 26 and the May Frolic, with music by Emerson Gill and his orchestra, on May 5 and 6.

Robert B. Lawson himself was one of the first and most successful Tar Heel stars to turn professional. He was captain and pitcher of the University club in 1900. The following spring he went direct from the college campus to the majors, playing in 1901 with the Boston National League entry. The next year, 1901, he performed under John McGraw, now manager of the New York Giants and famous "master mind" of baseball, who was then just beginning his career as a manager. The club was the old Baltimore Orioles of the American League. After playing a year with Trenton in the Tri-State league, Doc dropped out of professional ball. He coached the baseball team here in 1906 and since that time has served as physical director of the University.

But the most illustrious of them all is old Bunn Hearn, who is managing the Winston-Salem Piedmont League entry this year. Bunn played here in 1909, going from the campus to the New York Giants, then one of the strongest teams in the history of organized baseball. For six years he was in the majors, two each with the Giants, the St. Louis Cardinals, and the Boston Nationals.

One man pitching twenty scoreless innings in a single afternoon—sounds like a Ripley. But Bunn has proof positive of the fact that on August 12, 1913, he subdued the bats of the Jersey City Skeeters so completely that they attempted in vain for twenty long innings to shove a run across and break the 0-0 tie with the Toronto Leafs. Another feat of which Bunn is especially proud occurred while he was with the Giants on their famous world tour with the White Sox in 1913-14. He pitched before the conventional "crowned heads," but he did more than that—he is probably the only man who ever showed King George how to curve a baseball.

Returning to the University in 1918, Bunn coached here for a short time and entered the insurance business in Wilson. But the lure of the game was too strong, and he re-entered baseball as player-manager-owner of the Wilson club of the old Virginia League a few years ago.

Earle P. Holt, who finished here in 1903 after playing varsity baseball for three years, was in major league ball for a short time. He was captain of the University team in 1902. In 1904 he became connected with the Oak Ridge Institute and has served there since, the past few years as head of the institution.

Dr. John Donnelly, now superintendent of the Mecklenburg Sanitorium at Huntersville, was a varsity player here for five years, captain in 1904. He played for a few years with Charlotte in the old Carolina League. Charles Vedder Sitton, pitcher on the University baseball team and student in medicine in 1905, was in professional baseball a number of years several of them with the Cleveland Indians. As last reports he was with the Hercules Powder Company at Brunswick, Georgia.

John R. Carr, shortstop at the University in 1899-1900, was in professional ball for a short time. He is now practicing medicine in Philadelphia. Barney Cleveland "Red" Stewart, a graduate of 1911, was with Winston-Salem in the Carolina and Piedmont leagues for a number of years.

Dr. Harry Malcombe Hedgepeth, pitcher and student in medicine in 1909, played for many years with Petersburg in the now defunct Virginia loop. He is practicing medicine in Richmond.

Fred B. Stem, captain and first baseman of the University nine in 1907, played successively for Trenton in the International loop, the Boston Nationals, and the Sioux City club. He is now vice-president of the Gray Tobacco Company in Constantinople, Turkey.

Carles Lawrence "Larry" Woodall has been with the Detroit Tigers since he secured an M.A. at the University in 1915. He caught for the American League team until last year, when he was made a coach. He has served in the big leagues longer than any other University alumnus. Samuel Strang Nicklin, here in 1894-95, had a long and colorful career in professional baseball, and he is now owner of the Chattanooga Lookouts of the Southern League.

That about completes the list of University men in professional baseball before the World War. Since that time there has been a host of contributions to minor and major league baseball from the University. Clement Manly Llewellyn, captain and brilliant twirler here in 1922, served his time with the New York Yankees, Buffalo in the International loop, and Greenville in the Sally league. Lawrence G. (Lefty) Wilson, captain in 1921, pitched for Danville and Salisbury in the Piedmont for a few years.

Fred Morris, star Tar Heel catcher in 1920-22, was with the Rochester club in the International loop for a while. E. M. Sweetman, outfielder in 1921-23, took a brief fling at professional ball. J. C. "Buck" Stanton, first baseman here in 1924, was with the St. Louis Browns until a broken leg halted his career. Ed Mackie, now practicing dentistry in Atlanta, who was a hard hitting right fielder in 1926 and 1927, was with Rocky Mount in the Eastern Carolina league for one season.

Robert Buck Finlator, Tar Heel left fielder in 1927, will play with Mobile in the Southern Association this year. He was sold to the Chicago White Sox for a reported price of $10,000 a year or so ago. Bill Ferebee, mainstay of the pitching staff here six or seven years ago, will twirl for Raleigh in the Piedmont loop this summer. Charles Frank "Red" Ellison, pitcher here in 1927 and 1928, has signed with the Winston-Salem Twins this season. J. B. Harley, captain and center fielder in 1927, is out of professional ball this year after a two-year try at it. Ernest R. "Mule" Shirley, scintillating first baseman who went with the Washington Senators after he left the University in 1923, is in the Southern league this year. Tom Young, first baseman and outfielder here three years ago, played with Raleigh last summer.

Joe Westmorland, captain and star southpaw hurler in 1928, is with the Charlotte Bees in the Piedmont this year. He warmed the Philadelphia Athletics bench for a year after he graduated, but he secured his release from Connie Mack to return to Chapel Hill and enter medicine

FOREIGN SERVICE GROUP TO HEAR DUKE PROFESSOR

Rippey Will Address International Relations Club on "Pan-Americanism" Tonight

Dr. J. F. Rippey of Duke University is scheduled to address the International Relations Club tonight at 7:15 o'clock in room 214, Saunders hall, on the subject of "Pan-Americanism." The speaker has an international reputation as an authority upon Latin-American affairs, and one of his articles was recently published in the Current History magazine.

Letters have been sent to students on the campus, who have shown themselves interested in international affairs, and these men are invited to attend the lecture regardless of whether they are members of the club or not, President Clyde Dunn stated yesterday.

Mr. H. K. Laski, of the University of London, and Dr. H. H. Wilson, of Duke University, are two of the speakers who have been secured to address the club sometime during the latter part of this quarter.

The program has been scheduled so as to be completed in time for the Ben Greet production in Memorial hall at 8:30.

Cokers Will Open Gardens To Public

On account of the unusually bad weather Easter Sunday, Doctors W. C. and R. E. Coker were unable to open their gardens to the public. However, last Saturday Dr. W. C. Coker personally conducted the Danville Garden Club through his own garden and then took the group for a tour of the arboretum. He also entertained a party of fifteen local and visiting nature lovers with trips in the arboretum and his gardens.

Dr. W. C. Coker announced that his gardens will be open to the public during the remainder of the week and Sunday afternoon. He stated that the red buds, yellow jasmines, woodbine, and wisteria would be at the height of their beauty at this time.

Dr. R. E. Coker's gardens will be ready for exhibition next Sunday afternoon.

Mrs. George Logan, Mrs. James M. Bell, Mrs. I. H. Manning, and Mrs. F. P. Venable have already opened their gardens during flowering season.

Graduate Notice

The Graduate school announces that they have made several changes in the form requirements of theses. These new rules and regulations may be obtained from the office of the Graduate school in 202 South building, and all graduate students are asked to find out about these important changes immediately.

The changes refer to the form for theses and also the preparation of abstracts. The requirements of the title page of all theses are considerably stressed and emphasized.

A.B. Seniors

The office of A. W. Hobbs, dean of the liberal arts school requests that each senior see the head of the department in which the study of his major falls and have him "O.K." both the major and the minor. These "O.K.'s" should be brought to the office in 201 South building at once.

To Play Hamlet

RUSSELL THORNDIKE

Thorndike, who has the lead in the First Quarto production of Shakespeare's drama tonight, is one of the most noteworthy of modern Shakespearean actors.

ENGLISH COMPANY WILL APPEAR IN HAMLET TONIGHT

Ben Greet Company Will Present First Quarto Version in Memorial Hall.

Coming from Greensboro where they were enthusiastically received yesterday at N. C. C. W., the Ben Greet Players will appear in Memorial hall tonight at eight-thirty under the sponsorship of the Carolina Playmakers. Their performance will be the First Quarto version of Hamlet, which is rarely presented and which is different from the usual text-book version.

This group of players, led by Sir Phillip Ben Greet, veteran English actor and director of Shakespearean plays, are now on their second transcontinental tour within recent years. The first, having been made in 1929-1930, included as itinerary major cities and universities throughout the United States.

Ben Greet, as he is known on the stage, has been acting and directing for over fifty years, and it is claimed that he has trained more actors than any other living actor. In recognition of his life devoted to the cause of drama in education, particularly during and after the World War, King George V knighted him in June 1929.

Among the other notables in the cast of Hamlet will be Russel Thorndike who plays the part of the unfortunate young Dane. Greet himself will take the roles of Polonius and the second grave-digger; these roles are said by all critics to show the versatility of the veteran of many tours.

The Hamlet which will be presented tonight is somewhat different from the versions usually known as it is taken from the First Quarto edition. This is only about half as long and is twice as dramatic as the one usually found in text-books. Since 1929, Sir Phillip has introduced this form throughout America.

The English company always present their plays in the Eliza-

Restoration Of Battle Park Seen By Newly Formed Group

That Battle Park, a tract of natural forest lying close in under the eastern brow of Chapel Hill, may be transformed into the popular woodland retreat it was many years ago, is the belief of those who met here recently at the home of Colonel Joseph Hyde Pratt to organize the Battle Park Association.

Battle Park, owned by the University, is named for Kemp Plummer Battle, Reconstruction president of the University, who until his death in 1919 took delight in clearing paths and building rustic seats and bridges in this woodland. In his day the place was beloved rendezvous for those who liked to walk in the woods, but with the coming of the automobile, the movies, radio, and highly organized sports, the old paths have become dim and the seats and bridges have fallen to decay. It is for the restoration of these that the Battle Park Association was formed.

Colonel Pratt, who was elected President of the organization, said, "A great charm of Battle Park has always been that it is woodland in the natural state. Dr. Battle always wanted it to stay like that, but at the same time he wanted it to be easy of approach. He wanted folks to come into the woods and enjoy them. That is why he laid out the paths and built the bridges and took such tender care of them all his life.

"In talking around among my acquaintances I have found considerable interest in the idea of restoring Dr. Battle's paths and bridges. Maybe it's a minority who love to walk in the woods, but it's a sizeable minority; and I believe that as time goes on the park will be used more and more."

Mrs. John M. Booker, a granddaughter of President Battle, was elected chairman of the association's executive committee.

Other officers named were: Mrs. E. C. Branson, vice-president; Miss Guelda Elliot, secretary; Dean W. W. Hobbs, treasurer; and W. C. George, member of the executive committee.

Anyone interested in becoming a member of the association hould communicate with Colonel Pratt.

FAYETTEVILLE IS WINNER OF FIRST HONORS IN TESTS

The results of the High School French and Spanish contests were recently announced. Fayetteville high school won first place in both of the contests.

The winners in the French contest and the schools were as follows: Miss Effie Hewitt, Fayetteville; Miss Nell Gaither, Harmony; Richard W. Ryan, Fayetteville; and Miss Gladys Smith, Harmony. The schools which won the first four places in the competition were: Fayetteville, Harmony, Elizabeth City, and Mills (Louisburg). There were also seventeen other honorable mentions in the individual contestants.

In the Spanish contest, C. A. Thomas, Jr. of the Fayetteville high school won and thus gave the school honor to his place of learning.

Dr. Phillips Speaks On African Negroes

Professor Ulrich B. Phillips, of Yale university, spoke last night in Gerrard hall at 8:30 o'clock. His lecture was on the subject, "Tribal Negroes of Central Africa." Dr. Phillips was the holder of a fellowship under the Albert Kahn foundation for the foreign travel of American teachers, and it was during this time that he made his extensive researches in Central Africa. It is on these travels that he based his speech last night.

He will also be remembered as the recipient of the award by Little, Brown, and Company for the best unpublished historical manuscript, Life and Labor in the Old South. This manuscript was then bought and published by this company under the same title.

Infirmary List

The infirmary list increased several patients yesterday. The students confined yesterday were: E. C. Miller, Toy Jones, Elizabeth Hamrick, Charlie Gault, R. B. Freeman, L. R. Drane, M. L. Hall, B. S. Solomon, J. R. Wall, R. M. Byrd, J. M. Tobin, Jack Riley, and E. B. Grady.

SOCIETIES PLAN DISCUSSION OF FIVE NEW BILLS

The bills slated for discussion in the Di and Phi societies tonight are as follows:

Phi Assembly:

1. Resolved: That the Phi assembly go on record as favoring the resolution that companionate marriage, contracted under the present system proposed by Judge Ben Lindsay, be recognized as legal unions.

2. Resolved: That the prohibition act be modified so as to legalize the sale of light wines and beers.

3. Resolved: That the Phi assembly go on record as favoring the proposed consolidation of the counties in North Carolina.

Di Senate:

1. Resolved: That the House tax of ten percent on college football games is unjust and unfair.

2. Resolved: That the Federal government should institute a plan to limit tobacco production, similar to the Stevenson plan for limiting British rubber production.

Saunders Addresses Freshmen In Chapel

J. Maryon Saunders, alumni secretary of the University, spoke to the "Monday" group of freshmen in chapel yesterday morning at which time he gave the general outline of the University Alumni association.

The speaker told the freshmen that being a member of the Alumni association was somewhat like being a student, because the members shared the same pleasures and privileges as the students. He then gave a list of the graduates of the University who have attained national fame.

Glee Club Plans Trip

The University Glee Club is planning a four day trip through eastern Carolina for the week of May 6. The Eastern Carolina Teachers' college has been decided upon for one of the concerts, others may include Wilmington, Sanford, and Goldsboro.

"Y" SENDS SIX ON DEPUTATION TRIP

Under the auspices of the University Y. M. C. A. several University students made a deputation trip to Fayetteville last week-end, leaving here Thursday and returning Sunday.

F. M. "Pardner" James was in charge of the several programs, assisted by John Miller and Lee Grier, each of whom gave a talk at the various places visited; and Jack Connolly, Wofford Humphries, and John Miller, trio of musicians.

On Friday, April 10, the team visited and gave programs at the Fayetteville high school, several grammar schools, Fayetteville negro high school, and the state normal negro school. At one o'clock luncheon was had with the Fayetteville Kiwanis club.

The County Home, Old Ladies Home, and county jail were visited Saturday, and at these places devotional exercises were conducted, concluded with several selections by members of the trio. On Sunday morning the team had charge of Sunday school classes of the various churches in town.

NEWS STAFF TO BE INCREASED TO THIRTY-FIVE MEN

Meeting of Contestants for Positions Will Take Place This Afternoon.

A special meeting has been called this afternoon at 5:00 p. m. in room 104 of the alumni building for all men desiring to work on the reportorial staff of the Daily Tar Heel. It is the plan of the new editor and managing-editor to considerably increase the size of the present staff, thus making room for from thirty-five to forty new men. Those men interested in writing editorials are asked to meet at 1:30 p. m. in the same room.

During the next two weeks or more these men trying out for the editorial board will be required to turn in at least three or four editorials each week, and for this reason it is urgent that the applicants have passed at least two of the higher English composition courses. At the end of the two weeks' tryout the board will be chosen on the basis of the work, interest, and ability the men have shown in their writing.

So far this year it has been the plan to have a small reportorial staff, but having tried out this system the editors have decided to enlarge the present number of reporters two or three times. The main factor to be considered in the choice of the list of reporters is consistent work, as well as the ability of the writer. Men doing the most regular work will be the first choices.

To encourage good work on the paper, charms are given at the end of each year to those men who have done the best work during the entire time, and the Daily Tar Heel page in the Yackety Yack also carries a picture of the most competent writers. Aside from these facts, actual journalistic experience is to be gained by working regularly on the publication.

At the meeting Sunday evening Jack Dungan, newly elected editor, spoke to the candidates for positions on the paper and explained to them the importance of getting all the

GRAHAM SELECTS NEW COMMITTEE ON ORGANIZATION

Temporary Committee Will Further Purpose of Memorial to Late E. K. Graham.

President Frank Graham, in order to better accomplish the purposes for which the Graham Memorial building is being completed, has appointed a temporary Committee on Organization. This committee is divided into three parts, faculty, student, and alumni. It has purposely been made large in order to get as many different view points as possible.

Those who compose the committee are: faculty, L. R. Wilson, W. de B. MacNider, C. T. Woollen, W. M. Dey, R. B. House, H. F. Comer, A. M. Coates, Henry Johnston, Jr., J. C. Lyons, A. W. Hobbs, George Taylor, G. A. Harrer, E. L. Mackie, C. T. McCormick, R. A. Fetzer, D. D. Carroll, H. G. Baity, W. S. Jenkins, Mrs. M. H. Stacy, Mrs. Irene F. Lee.

Students on the committee are: Mayne Albright, R. C. Greene, Bryce Parker, W. W. Speight, E. R. Hamer, F. M. James, W. H. Yarborough, Jack Dungan, Theron Brown, K. C. Ramsay, Clyde Dunn, Hamilton Hobgood, J. A. Lang, Miss Reeme Moore, J. A. Williams, S. A. Lynch, and H. N. Patterson.

Alumni who are on the committee are: Leslie Weil, Maryon Saunders, Kemp Lewis, G. Watts Hill, E. E. Rives, Marion Fowler, A. T. Allen, George Stephens, Kemp Battle, Benjamin Cole, J. O. Harmon, Haywood Parker, W. A. Erwin, Lawrence Watt, W. M. York, A. H. Graham, and John W. Umstead.

New Officers Will Come In Tomorrow

Beginning at chapel period tomorrow morning and lasting through 11:15 o'clock, the inauguration of the newly elected campus officers will be in order in Memorial hall.

President Frank Graham will open the program with a short speech concerning the offices and officers. "Red" Greene, former president of the Student Union will preside, and will give a survey of student government after which the president-elect, Mayne Albright, will outline the policy for the coming year. The new president will introduce three other officers who in turn will outline their policies. The officers to speak will be Jack Dungan, editor of the Daily Tar Heel; "Pardner" James, president-elect of the Y; and Hamilton Hobgood, president of the rising senior class.

SCIENTIFIC SOCIETY TO HEAR LJUNG TONIGHT

The Elisha Mitchell Scientific society will meet tonight at seven-thirty in room 206 Phillips hall. H. A. Ljung will speak, using as his subject: "A System of Qualitative Analysis for the Anions." This will be followed by a talk by W. C. George. His subject will be, "Some Significant examples of Rhythm in Organisms." This will be the 328th meeting of the society.

Women's Association

A meeting of the American Association of University Women is called at eight o'clock tonight in the Episcopal parish house. Professor Ralph S. Boggs will address it.

The Daily Tar Heel

Political Die-Hards

We have scrupulously steered a course clear of the recent soenthralling campus political campaign which was hard fought and quite bitterly contested despite the effort on the part of most of the political leaders to avoid such a condition.

However, the political campaign of 1931 is actually history and it is only good sportsmanship to look to the future, forgetting the past. Absolutely nothing but permanent bitterness and the negation of the very things the University stands for can result from perpetually rekindling old fires long since dead in all but the imagination of the political die-hards.

Thwarted at one end, it is the simple strategy of these political die-hards to circulate what they conceive to be damnable rumors, the effect of which they hope will prove to the campus that they were misled and misguided in their choice of student government officials. Every act of the newly elected officers is judged to be "merely political" by these men.

The thirty-three men who are to be officially seated as student government officials Wednesday morning, with but one exception, received the most tremendous majorities that any have received here in a decade or more—more even than last year's "great landslide." They are pledged to good and impartial government and what is more they are going to deliver it. They were chosen on the issue of efficiency, and were recognized at the time of their election as the best available men. They are the servants of the student body. But on the other hand more or less skilled and trained for the various tasks which have fallen to them, they are much better able to conduct their various businesses without the dictation of the politicians. So long as good government or good publications are forthcoming whom the officers and editors choose to aid them remains purely a staff affair. Only those persons who can work compatibly and efficiently with the rest of their boards should be retained. No person, no matter what his political significance on the campus is, will be retained if he falls down on the job or gets out of step with the rest of his co-workers.

It is high time to forget political campaigns and to buckle down to making student activities here the most progressive, the most honestly managed, and the most representative. The Tar Heel pleads with members of all factions to smoke once and for all the pipe of peace and to get down to work.

Finally, this paper for one intends to serve the whole campus as such and to refuse to listen to militant minorities until such time as they too become campus-minded.

Picking Profs

Undergraduates sometimes are advised by more advanced fellow students and, less outspokenly, by instructors to "pick profs, not courses." To those who regard education as merely a storing up of "book learning" this precept is no doubt an absurdity. In the conventional view professors are but necessary appendages to every college, whose duty it is to spoon-feed passive students with the rudiments of knowledge. Indeed, one of them who deviates from the ordinary so far as to inject any of his own personality or ideas into class discussion, particularly if those views happen not to conform to the changeable state of contemporary opinion, is looked upon as being too biased and prejudiced to instruct formative and plastic minds. Outstanding examples of such intolerance may be found in not-so-ancient history.

But as one looks retrospectively over his undergraduate days the courses which stand in the forefront of memory are inevitably those associated with outstanding and individualistic professors. Long after a subject is practically erased from conscious knowledge, the influence and sublimal force exerted by the remembrance of past contacts with men of character lives on. Not soon dispelled is the effect of daily intercourse even for one or two quarters with the type of men to be found on nearly every college and university campus in America. No books, however valuable they be, can serve to spur the initiative as does personal relation with individuals mentally alert and equally alive to the problems of philosophy and everyday life.

Hence it is our honest belief that more of lasting value is to be derived from a liberal education by a process of well-selected associations than from a curriculum of academically balanced classes. One obviously learns more from the courses which are enjoyed, and the safest method of insuring enjoyment is to select worthwhile professors. This is not the same as selecting popular instructors, who more often than not are chosen by the majority due to laxity of requirements than for reasons of educational advantage. Pick profs, but choose those able to impart something of real and lasting value.—J. M. L.

An Ideal!

Democratic government is without doubt the best form of government yet established by man upon this earth. Almost every American will admit this. Why who could doubt this? Hasn't the United States developed into the most powerful nation in the world under a democratic form of government? Didn't the United States enter the World War to make the world safe for democracy? In short what other form of government has been the guiding spirit of so much advancement and progress?

Observe this model form of government in the working! There are two legislative houses each containing representatives of the people, and by the people is meant every person twenty-one years of age. This means that both houses will be composed of men of unquestioned ability elected by an enlightened and broadminded public. These representatives hold the destinies of the nation entirely in their hands. Thus the people are assured that their interests will be looked after in the most scientific manner.

When an economic crisis presents itself and the people seem to be in deplorable condition economically, these representatives being specialists in economics will speedily correct the difficulties by employing the scientific method. If it is tax reform that is needed, they will quickly ascertain what industries and classes of individuals are best able to pay the most taxes and by the use of such information they will completely revise the tax system. Briefly, democratic government shows itself capable of handling a pressing situation speedily and scientifically. Bravo Democracy! —J. C. S.

Always For The Best

With the coming inauguration of the campus officers should come the instigation of new ideas and systems into the plan of student government and student publication. Not that the present systems are not good enough to be continued, but any plan, no matter how perfect, always has points needing correction. Certainly the newly-elected officers have not gone through a whole college year without finding something which they did do that was wrong. If the incoming officers intend to follow out the plans of the outgoing officers to the smallest detail, there was no need in having all of the "hullabaloo" over electing new men to go into office. It would have been much better to have retained the same men.

It is not our contention that every new office-holder should go into his position with his eyes open only for defects, but that he go in with the main idea of doing what he thinks best for the current year. If the old system was wrong, abolish it; if it was mediocre, correct it; and if it was perfect—an impossibility in our mind—continue to use it. In any case do the right thing, not being swayed too much by public opinion. Too many prospective leaders are ruined because of their failing habit of saying "yes." They think that since the people have elected them, they must follow the temporary desires of the crowd. They must do things for the good of the crowd, of course, but not in the slightest manner ought they always followthe people's demands. Their requests should be weighed, true, but only the good points ought be taken out and put into use.

The new officers which are to go into office tomorrow morning should remember that they have been elected by the students to lead in their several fields, and not to be followers of uniformed groups.

If the class officers favor optional attendance, as the faculty members apparently do not, they should fearlessly fight for it, if it is for the best. Or if the Y officers are opposed to the Y. M. C. A. taking over the new Graham Memorial, that should be bravely said. Or if the new editors of the publications are confident that certain changes must be made, they should make them. In other words the students have put these new men into office signifying that it is the desire of the majority that these men lead. In view of this fact, these newly-elected officers should act in the way they see fit, always striving to accomplish the thing which is most right for the whole regardless of the private desires of the individual.—C. G. R.

With Contemporaries

A Great University

Twenty-five or more years ago, the most forward-looking official this state has known in many ways, advocated the joining of three institutions for higher education into one great University of North Carolina, with plants at Chapel Hill, Raleigh and Greensboro. That dream of the late Chief Justice Walter Clark was shared at that time by the News and Observer.

It was not, however, until 1931 that any Governor made a study of the plan and convincingly presented it to a General Assembly. Governor Gardner not only caught the vision of a great state university, the very head and front of the educational life of the Commonwealth, but he presented it in such a practical manner as to show its value for tomorrow and increasing usefulness in the long years to come.

At first some people in Chapel Hill, Greensboro and Raleigh feared that the union might work some injury to the separate institutions and that feeling was shared by some trustees, or rather they had some doubt of its wisdom. However, as the plans for the merger were fully discussed, the doubts expressed, and many minds were brought to bear upon the question, the sentiment for carrying out the unification increased until the measure passed the General Assembly with practically no opposition. — Raleigh News and Observer.

Heretical Education

Whether or not the speech delivered on Thursday by Robert H. Lucas, executive director of the Republican National Committee, is the first clear call of the standard-bearers and wheelhorses to rally around and hold fast for the whirlwind which they fear they may reap in 1932, we do not know. Obviously it is a genuine note of alarm at what they see as a drifting of the younger, educated voter away from "conservatism in thinking and acting" and the "traditional policies on the Republican party." The aspect of the situation which appeared most to shock Mr. Lucas was that colleges and universities actually expounded such heretical doctrines as "free trade, internationalism, public ownership of private industry, abolition of party government, etc." Because, in addition, Mr. Lucas deems it "hopeless" to swing the teachers in higher education away from their "radicalism and socialistic theories," he comes to the bitter and amazing conclusion that the Republican party must approach the budding voter independently of the educational system!

The most astounding feature of Mr. Lucas' remarks is that he was permitted to make them at all by the supposedly astute and experienced National Committee. Even from the viewpoint of a dyed-in-the-wool Republican leader, it would seem frenzied, ill-considered and naive to criticize the educational institutions of the country because they do not rear its youth to be good Republicans, and to stamp any doctrines taught contrary to G. O. P. dogma as "radical and socialistic."

It is true, of course, that the Republican party, since the early 'Twenties, when the "Ohio gang" was still in power, has sat in undisputed command at Washington. But Mr. Lucas perhaps misinterprets that 12-year regime, with all its downs and scattered ups, as proof of the infallibility of his party and the vital importance of its presence at the nation's controls. Other voices would rise to differ with him, to challenge, perhaps to raise quite a hue and cry. The Soviet Communist party he would doubtless classify among his radicals, but in one respect it must meet with his unqualified approval, for, as the party in control of the U. S. S. R., it has so arranged the educational system that there is no danger whatsoever of the growth of opinion or thought dissentient with party theories. Republicanism's Mr. Lucas might consider such a state of affairs Utopian.

If the helmsmen of the Grand Old Party really feel that it is not getting its share of the "2,000,000 young men and women" annually enrolled as new voters, it might very conceivably have chosen a less hysterical prophet to start its crusade to bring them back from the influence of "radical" professors and textbooks to conservatism and "the principles for which our party stands." These staunch "principles" will doubtless demonstrate their own invincibility against the insidious "radicalism" of the American system of higher education, which seems to us to be slowly but happily achieving a truly progressive and analytical attitude in its examination of old and accepted doctrines and precepts. Indeed, it is just possible, just barely conceivable, that the G. O. P. could profit by examining more closely some of those doctrines so vehemently abhorred by Mr. Lucas. It might be that the "traditional policies" may be creaking with rust, and may even be stubbornly and stupidly set against the tide of human progress.—Daily Princetonian.

SABINE ASKS FOR HIGH SCHOLARSHIP STANDARDS

Columbus, Ohio, April 10.—A plea for high standards of scholarship in state supported universities equal to those set by the best privately endowed universities was voiced at the winter convocation here by Professor George Sabine of the department of philosophy of Ohio State university.

"Both impart a specialized training to students who must always be a small proportion of the total population and who possess interests and capacities somewhat unusual compared with the total range of human interests and capacities. In both, the success of the training depends upon finding as soon as possible the group of somewhat unusual students who are qualified to take it.

"In both the success of the training will be limited if effort is distracted in the direction of teaching a considerable proportion of unsuitable students.

"In the end the state universities must follow the policy already adopted by the best private universities of selecting their students from among those applicants for admission who have the interest and the capacity for a relatively high type of intellectual effort. For in this way only can they conform to the ideal of a university education and justify the confidence which a really enlightened public opinion reposes in them.

bethan manner as much as possible. Their scenery is comparatively simple: back drapes are used instead of the ordinary stiff sets since it is an axiom of the group that the beauty of a Shakespearean play is marred by stiff and pseudo-artistic canvas. Likewise, the costumes of the production are devised for harmony as well as for splendor in soft, well directed lights.

Georgia Tech Bows To Tar Heel Track Team

Marland and Slusser Lead Carolina Scorers in 89-37 Victory; Meet Held in Rain.

Taking eleven first places and tying for another, the Carolina track squad turned in another easy victory in Atlanta Saturday, downing Georgia Tech 89-37. For the third time in as many weeks the Tar Heels were forced to perform on a wet track.

Ken Marland led the Blue and White scorers with ten points while Rip Slusser was second in this respect with eight. Marland took the 100 yard dash in 10.2 seconds and then finished ahead of the field in the quarter mile with a time of 52.8 seconds. Foxhall, Tech's high scorer, took second place in both the hurdle events for six points, while Graydon and Jones, with five counters each, followed him.

Georgia Tech was able to score only two first places and tie for a third. Doug Graydon copped the javelin with a throw of 172 feet 10 inches, and Jones of Tech heaved the shot 39 feet 8 1-2 inches to take the shot put while McCarthy tied Red Hamlet in the high jump.

Carolina took every first place in the running events and in two events took all three places. In the 100 yard dash Carolina placed Marland, Slusser, and Smith in one-two-three order, and in the half-mile Watkins, Garrett, and Case finished in the order named to sweep that event. Drane and Smith placed first and second in the 220 yard dash to give Carolina eight points in that event to one for the Atlantans.

Tech did its highest scoring in the shot put where Jones scored first place and Bailey second for eight points, and in the javelin where Graydon's first and Dunlap's third gave them six.

Ray Ruble copped first place in the pole vault with a height of twelve feet six inches and Arnold took second place. George Bagby placed first in the broad jump for the second consecutive Saturday with a leap of twenty feet one and one-quarter, and came third in the high jump. Rip Slusser and Archie Davis won their specialties, the hurdle events, in good style, and Slusser added three points to his day's total with a second place in the century dash.

The summary of events follows:

100 yard dash—First, Marland, (NC); second, Slusser, (NC); third, Smith, (NC). Time 10.2 seconds.

220 yard dash—First, Drane, (NC); second, Smith, (NC); third, LaForge, (GT). Time 22.8 seconds.

440 yard dash—First, Marland, (NC); second, Goldsmith, (GT); third, Weil, (NC). Time 52.8 seconds.

880 yard run—First, Watkins, (NC); second, Garrett, (NC); third, Case, (NC). Time 2:03.6.

One mile run—First, Jones, (NC); second, Gegenheimer, (GT); third, Cordle, (NC). Time 4:42.2.

Two mile run—First, Baucom, (NC); second, Hubbard, (NC); third, Reid, (GT). Time 10:11.8.

220 yard low hurdles—First, Slusser, (NC); second, Foxhall, (GT); third, Davis, (NC). Time 25.2 seconds.

120 yard high hurdles—First, Davis, (NC); second, Foxhall, (GT); third, Hamlet, (NC). Time 16.9 seconds.

Pole vault—First, Ruble, (NC); second, Arnold, (NC); third, DeJarnette, (GT). Height 12 feet 6 inches.

Freshman Game

The Freshman baseball team will play Danville Military Academy this afternoon at four o'clock on Emerson field.

SPORT SHORTS

By Thomas M. Broughton

Indoor baseball made its first appearance at the University of Southern California last week when eight teams representing the eight colleges of the university met to form the inter-college sports league. Diamonds have been marked off and a supply of fourteen inch baseballs obtained. This sport is rapidly gaining favor as it is much faster than the regular outdoor form.

Dick Odell, No. 7 on the 1930 University of Washington crew, was so anxious to see Washington beat California April 11 that he stowed away with the team members. The conductor had thirty-five tickets and had counted thirty-six men entering the train. Much to his amazement on entering the special car reserved for the Huskies he could find only thirty-five men, yet when the team disembarked at Oakland thirty-six men stepped to the ground. If he had peered into the hidden corners of the car doubtless he would have found the former Washington star.

Athletic insignia have been awarded to 132 men in winter and fall sports at Columbia, according to an announcement in the Columbia Spectator recently. The major "C" was awarded to seven members of Columbia's championship basketball team; four varsity wrestlers, two members of the varsity track squad, and two members of the swimming team. Nineteen managers received letters also.

Co-ed baseball made its first appearance of the year at the University of California recently. Class and house teams have been organized and an intramural league formed.

Lieutenant James Cumberpatch, of the University of California Military department, is the newest member of the Caterpillar Club. On April 4 he leaped from his blazing airplane and became member 351. The club was formed in 1919 and any aviator forced to leap from his plane automatically becomes a member of the club.

Again the worm has turned and after seven straight defeats at the hands of Southern California the Golden Bears of the University of California are favored to defeat the Trojan trackmen although the latter possess such stars as Frank Wykoff, holder of the world's record for the 100 yard dash, Cliff Halstead, star miler, and other nationally known stars.

"One Eyed" Connelly, America's leading gate crasher, has a rival in Nell Griffith, Northwestern University co-ed, who broke all precedent in the annals of Sigma Delta Chi history by crashing the gates at the annual Razz banquet last Thursday. Clad in the coat and boiled shirt sacred to men alone, this co-ed got a ticket, sauntered past the men at the door who thought her an instructor, and seated herself in an inconspicous corner. When asked to speak she was immediately betrayed by

DUKE-STATE TILT ENDS IN PROTEST

Chick Doak, State Coach, Protests Umpire's Interpretation Of Rule on Substitutes.

The Duke-State baseball game of Saturday at Durham, which ended with Duke leading 5-3, went into the records, "under protest."

With two out in the ninth inning Coach Chick Doak of State sent in a pinch-hitter. The youngster did not announce himself to the umpire. After one pitch, Umpire Kearney ruled the batter out and the game over.

Coach Doak objected, claiming there was no rule under which such action could be taken. Umpire Kearney contended the player was out as he had not been notified of the change and the game was over. Coach Doak appealed to Coach Jack Coombs of the Blue Devils, who took the umpire's view that the player was out for not announcing himself as a pinch-hitter.

Coach Doak's position was taken, he explained last night, under Rule 17 of the baseball code. This rule provides a fine on the manager or captain for not notifying the umpire of a substitution, and in the official explanation of the rue it is set forth "If the substitute takes the proper position assigned to him, any play which he makes is legal, in spite of the fact that the umpire may not have been notified and may not have made announcement of the substitution. Neglect by a captain is not allowed to affect actual field work." It is also added in the footnotes that "Penalties which are provided in fines apply solely to professional baseball.

The rule sets forth the duty of the manager or captain (and in college baseball, the coach) to announce substitutions to the umpire, whose duty it is then to announce the substitution. However, it is set forth in the rule itself that "if through oversight, such announcement is not make, the substitute player will be considered as in the game."

CAROLINA, W. & L. LEAD TRI-STATE

V. M. I. and V. P. I. Only Games Remaining on Tar Heels' Northern Trip.

Carolina won three games in the last two days of last week to climb out of the cellar in the Tri-State League and into a tie with Washington and Lee for leadership of the circuit.

On Friday, the Tar Heel nine captured a twin bill from Maryland at College Park by scores of 4-2, and 8-4. Saturday they won the first of the three game series with Virginia by the count of 6-1. Earlier in the week, the Generals defeated the Cavaliers by the same score to remain on top of the circuit.

This week the Tar Heels continue their swing through the Old Dominion, having played Washington and Lee yesterday, and games scheduled for today with V. M. I., and V. P. I. on Wednesday. This last game will be the season's opener for the Gobblers, but afterward the V. P. I. nine will play six games in the last ten days with league rivals.

Virginia's only league game of the week is with V. M. I. in Lexington tomorrow. The Cavaliers play Harvard today and then go north for a series of games, including a league game with Maryland next week.

During the next month each of the league teams will have at least one game in the circuit each week. The season closes May 20 when Carolina plays State at Raleigh.

Scholastic Track Meet To Draw Stellar Field

Tin Can Expected To Be Scene Of Record Breaking Performances Friday; Charlotte To Defend Title.

The flying trackmen of the North Carolina high schools will have a uniformly high set of records at which to shoot when they move on Chapel Hill Friday for the nineteenth annual state championships, but seven new marks were set last year, and officials in charge wouldn't be surprised to see history duplicate itself next Friday.

Finals in four of six field events will be run off Friday morning, beginning at ten-forty-five o'clock, along with preliminaries in the track events. The pole vault and javelin finals and the finals of the eight track events will be run off in the afternoon beginning at two-forty-five. Medals will go to the winners, trophy cups to the schools winning the meet and the relay.

Charlotte High, winner of Davidson's invitation tournament, will be defending champions and will enter a strong team against a fast field in which the big opposition is expected to come from Greensboro, High Point, and Wilmington Highs. Charlotte has won the meet the last two years, and seven of the last eight years, but the Queen City boys are expected to have tough going this season.

The records at which the high school stars will be shooting follow. One dates back to 1921,

INTRAMURAL RESULTS

Best House Wins 17-1

The Best House defeated the Question Marks 17-1 in their first game of the season yesterday afternoon.

Scarboro, Best House pitching ace, held the Question Marks to two hits and one unearned run while his mates pounded Mowery for twelve hits and seventeen runs. Only thirteen men faced Scarboro, four of these being retired via the strike out route.

Smith, first baseman, led the Best House hitters with three singles in four trips to the plate, scoring three runs also. Stuart Oliver, and Beck each made two hits, with the former countering three times and the latter two scoring twice.

Hodges, first sacker, and Mowery, pitcher, gathered the Question Marks' brace of hits.

Score by innings:

Aycock Shuts Out Old West

yesterday afternoon in the intramural baseball league by a score of 7-0. Aycock bunched four walks and one hit for five runs in the opening frame.

Jenrette, Aycock pitcher, held the Old West team to two hits both of which were made by Robinson, Old West shortstop. Jenrette also fanned three men and walked two in the three innings. The winners made only three hits but took advantage of the frequent erring of the Old West boys and the bases on balls which were very plentiful also. Cox, Weiner, and Thompson each collected a hit apiece to lead Aycock.

CHARLOTTE HIGHS PLAY TIE MATCH WITH FRESHMEN

Gwynn Harper and Ed Michaels Score All Tar Baby Points In 9-9 Match.

While most of the student body was having a glorious week end, the freshman golfers journeyed to Charlotte and engaged the Queen City high golfers and then went to Sedgefield and qualified for the annual Dogwood tournament. The match at Charlotte ended in a nine all tie. At Sedgefield, three of the men qualified in the first flight and the other was put in the second. These three men went up to Greensboro yesterday and will continue to commute until such a time as they are eliminated.

Gwynn Harper and Ed Michaels did all the scoring in Charlotte, defeating Hatcher and Hadley and gaining back the nine points that Pete Tyree and Archie Glenn lost to Laxton and Storm. Harper with a forty-one and a thirty-eight for a seventy-nine and Storm of the home team with a forty and a thirty-nine for another

ALL-CAMPUS FOILS TEAM IS SELECTED

Creuser Selected for No. 1 Position on Team Which Has Two Betas and Two Phi Gams.

The intramural fencing season was officially brought to a close yesterday with the announcement by Fencing Director Hinkey Hendlin of the selection of the All-Campus team. Three teams were chosen with honorable mention given five other men who have done good work throughout the past season.

Phi Gamma Delta, winner of the team championship this year, placed one man on the first team, one on the third, and one on the honorable mention list, while Beta Theta Pi, former campus champion, placed one man on the first team and two on the second. Everett placed one man on the first team and two on the second. Everett placed one man on the first team. Old West one on the third, and Aycock had men chosen for the second and third teams, with two others receiving honorable mention.

Kent Creuser of the Phi Gam's was given the number one position on the first team with Waugh of Beta and Fieldman of Everett as his teammates. Creuser was the outstanding performer of the season, winning sixteen out of eighteen matches and leading his team to the championship. Don Waugh won a place on the All-Campus team for the second consecutive year, while George Fieldman, of Everett, is a freshman.

Herb Browne, Beta, was selected to captain the second team, and but for losing two matches in the final meet of the season against Phi Gamma Delta would have been placed on the first team. Red Herman, Aycock, and Dick Fenker, Beta, are the other second string selections. Herman won his position through aggressiveness, while Fenker, although falling down in some of his more important engagements, turned in a good season's record and is given third place on the second team.

On the third team is Seon, Phi Gam, Lieberstein, Aycock, and Bernard Stein, Old West. These men were new to the game at the beginning of the season but developed rapidly and were chosen over several veterans from last year's league.

The teams as picked by Director Hendlin follow:

First Team

1. Creuser, Phi Gam's (captain)
2. Waugh, Beta's
3. Fieldman, Everett

Second Team

1. Browne, Beta's (captain)
2. Herman, Aycock
3. Fenker, Beta's

Third Team

1. Seon, Phi Gam's (captain)
2. Lieberstein, Aycock
3. Stein, Old West

Honorable mention: Urband and Wasserman, Aycock; Pitkin, Phi Gam's; and Cooper and Valk of Zeta Psi.

Bull Session Bet Results In Moonlight Track Challenges

By Otto S. Steinreich

The claim to being the campus nuts which was advanced by the gentlemen who recently scaled the height of the frame for the Patterson-Moorehead bell tower has been superseded by two even more crack-brained collegians.

In the course of a bull session in one of the rooms of a dormitory in the lower quadrangle Wednesday evening two gentlemen began to speak of their prowess in the way of track activities, and as a result challenged each other to a race right then and there—at ten-thirty.

The conditions of the race were that the first idiot would run two laps around the track in Emerson field for everyone the other sap ran. Accordingly each contestant procured his roommate as a second to see that the contest was carried off fairly.

One of the seconds attired in a green bathrobe over which he pulled a gray sweatshirt and the other decked out in a black and yellow sweater trotted out their proteges and set forth for the scene of combat.

The bathrobe-attired second being attacked with a virulent case of spring fever was more impressed with the beautiful night, the twinkling stars on a background of smooth black velvet, the sighing of the trees, and the primeval quiet, than with the event at hand so calmly lay on his back monotonously calling out to the perspiring runners the number of laps yet to be run. As the runners were becoming tired of just each others company, the other second ran around for a few laps keeping them from getting lonesome.

The challenger finally either weakened or took compassion on his fellow trackster and quit at the end of the eighth lap; the challenged ran doggedly on. Round and round he ran until even the seconds were dizzy.

When the seconds became tired of counting, they called out, "Last lap" and arose from their comfortable positions to carry the runner home, but lo and behold the seemingly exhausted runner drew strength from some hidden source and sprinted around the last lap to uphold his sterling reputation and leave his escutcheon unbesmirched. Hurrah for the Carolina fighting spirit!

Special Students To Go To Cornell

Mount Vernon, Iowa, April 11.—A small group of high school students of exceptional scholastic ability who have completed three years of high school work are to be entered in Cornell College September, 1931, as fully classified freshmen in a project being carried on by the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools. The project is an attempt to accelerate the progress of the gifted student by saving one year in the traditional eight years of secondary school and college work in order that the student may have more time for an extensive education in a profession. Announcement of the project was made recently by Dr. H. J. Burgstahler, president of Cornell College.

Interested students who rank in the upper one-fourth of their classes may make application for consideration. From this number as many as 20 or 25 students may be accepted finally as members of the group. The final selection will be based on: (1) a battery of tests, including tests over the content of high school courses, tests of special scholastic aptitude, a silent reading test, a psychological examination and a personality schedule; (2) rating on traits included in regular admission blanks sent out by the office of admissions to all students making application for admission to the College; (3) estimates of the student's social maturity by those who know him intimately.

Approval of the North Central Association means that Cornell credits earned by these gifted students who may not have presented the conventional high school certification of 15 units of work, will be fully accepted on the same basis as those presented by any Cornell student transferring to the undergraduate or graduate colleges of institutions accredited by this association.

Swain Hall Prepares For Accommodation of Visitors

Swain hall, through an arrangement with the University Extension division, has arranged to prepare two hundred extra seats in the hall in order to have ample accommodations for the many high school debaters and athletes, who will be here this week for the competitions in those fields.

The visitors will arrive on the Hill Thursday and will remain here until Saturday night. The competitors will pay for their meals by collection at the door. Twenty-five cents will be charged for each meal.

seventy-nine were the low scorers, and Harper's thirty-eight was low score for nine holes.

Glenn and Tyree, the first foursome, were off their game and gave Laxton and Storm no trouble at all. At their best, the Tar Heel boys would have had a hard job defeating this snappy pair.

The scores of the freshmen players in Charlottee were as follows:

Glenn:
	Out	554	554	554—42
	In	526	665	555—45
Tyree:
	Out	554	545	565—44
				—88
Michaels:
	Out	453	567	455—44
				—82
Harper:
	Out	543	544	655—41

Then this quartet went to Sedgefield and qualified for the Dogwood tournament which began Monday. Ed Michaels, with a seventy-nine was low qualifier of these four while Tyree, Harper, and Glenn followed with eighty, eighty-two, and eighty-five respectively. Glenn was put in the second flight. There were an even hundred qualifying cards turned in and seven flights were arranged. Monday the four Tar Babies motored to Greensboro after classes and played their matches. Harper drew R. P. Mayer; Michaels played J. Donnelly of New York; Glenn tackled W. R. Reese in the second flight; and Pete Tyree drew the second low qualifier, A. C. McManus, whose qualifying score was seventy-four.

Allan Smith, another star freshman golfer, was in Asheville over the week-end and did not take part in the match or the tournament, but he will return soon and get into regular competition with the yearlings in their future matches. These boys are working hard to rid themselves of slices and other hindrances of the game in an effort to make a good record and they deserve honorable mention for their efforts. They held the varsity golfers to a nine all tie, something that Boston College or Washington and Lee could not do.

Columbia University is expecting an undefeated tennis team this year provided they can beat the New York Violets, which reminds us that the Tar Heel netmen also meet the Violets on their Northern trip which begins May 2 and lasts through May 9. During this time the Carolina netmen will meet some of the leading tennis teams of the north, including Army, Georgetown, New York University, Princeton, Harvard, and Brown.

COMMUNITY CLUB PLANS SPANISH MUSIC PROGRAM

The program of the music department of the Chapel Hill Community club, which will meet in the auditorium of the music building Wednesday evening at eight-fifteen, will be based upon modern Spanish music. The program will be in charge of Mrs. T. S. McCorkle, who will be assisted by Mrs. F. H. Edmister and Mrs. F. B. McCall, pianists; Mr. McCorkle, violinist; and a small group from the University Symphony orchestra.

Old East Wins Close One

Old East won over Grimes yesterday in one of the closest games of the intramural season thus far, winning 8-6. Idol, shortstop, Dunn, 2b, and Quinn, 1b, scored two runs each to lead the victors.

Watson and Shufford led the losers with two runs each also. Watson pitched fairly steady ball for Grimes. Jackson, in the box for the winners, pitched good ball although allowing six runs.

Battery: Old East, Jackson and McCombs; Watson and Shepard.

Steele Swamps Ruffin 10-1

Ruffin lost its first start of the season to Steele yesterday afternoon in the intramural baseball league by a score of 10-1. Steele bunched hits in the opening frame for five runs and was never stopped, scoring three in the second inning and two in the final frame. Cox, c; McDade, 2b; and Caiola, rf; each scored two runs to lead the winners' attack.

McBryde pitched good ball for Steele holding Ruffin in check at all stages of the game and scoring a run to help the cause himself. Johnson, 3b, scored Ruffin's only run in the first frame.

Battery: Steele, McBryde and Cox; Ruffin, Irvin and Royster.

RIGGS WILL READ CHEROKEE NIGHT, HIS LATEST PLAY

Oklahoma Playwright Will Give First Reading of New Folk Drama Sunday Night.

Lynn Riggs, the Oklahoma playwright, author of the recent Theatre Guild success, Green Grow the Lilacs will read his new play, The Cherokee Night in The Playmakers Theatre on Sunday evening, April 19.

Mr. Riggs has been spending some time in Chapel Hill and has just completed the play. The author's reading in The Playmakers Theatre will be the first time he has read it anywhere. The play concerns the descendants in Oklahoma of the Cherokees who were transported from the Carolinas and Florida to Indian territory.

Concerning Lynn Riggs' new play, The Cherokee Night, Isaac Goldberg, distinguished critic, has written in the Boston Evening Transcript.

"Lynn Riggs is at work upon a new play which he is sure will be his best. It is to be called The Cherokee Night, and deals with the descendants of that famous tribe. It is, as one should not be too surprised to learn, founded upon a Cherokee poem:

The grass is withered,
Where the river was is red sand,
Fire eats the timber.
Night
Has come to our people.

"The central problem of the play is, as it should be, emotional—the problem for that matter, of the Cherokee descendant who, though not utterly daunted, requires for adjustment in the white man's world

CONFERENCE OF ALUMNI OFFICERS MEETS THIS WEEK

Saunders and Grisette Will Attend National Convention In Atlanta.

The eighteenth conference of the American Alumni Council will take place this week-end from the fifteenth through the eighteenth of April at Atlanta. Alumni secretaries, loan fund chairmen, and other alumni officials from universities and colleges all over the country will attend.

J. Maryon Saunders, alumni secretary and editor of the Alumni Review, as well as Felix A. Grisette, chairman of the Alumni Loyalty Fund, plan to be there.

President Frank Graham was planning on speaking at the final luncheon Saturday, but due to the press of affairs here at the University, he will be unable to attend the conference at all.

Secretary Saunders will preside over a group of State University representatives at ten o'clock Thursday morning.

Mr. Grisette, who has just returned from a northern trip where he found all the University alumni intensely interested in the welfare of the University, will remain in Atlanta for several days after the conference is completed in order to see some of the University alumni who live in and near there.

Music Program To Be Given Tonight

The public is invited to a meeting of the music department of the community club in the music auditorium tonight at eight-fifteen.

The program, under the supervision of Mrs. T. S. McCorkle, is based on modern Spanish music. In addition to a short lecture on the subject, numbers of prominent composers will be played, including piano works of De-Falla, Jonas, and Granados; violin numbers by Albeniz, Sarasate, and Valdez; and orchestrations by Valverde, Sarasate, Chapi, and Albeniz.

'Y' OFFICERS ARE INAUGURATED IN MONDAY MEETING

James Succeeds Hamer after Formal Program Conducted By "Parson" Moss.

The joint meeting of the "Y" cabinets Monday night in the Y. M. C. A. was the occasion of the inauguration of the new set of officers for the coming year. At this gathering the officers who have served during the past year made their final appearance in an official capacity.

The meeting was opened by retiring president Hamer, who conducted the routine part of the business to be transacted by the cabinet. Following this portion of the program Rev. W. D. Moss conducted the devotionals.

The statement of the objective was made by the retiring vice-president, Sam Gorham, who made a thorough exposition of the organization's aims. After this brief talk, H. F. Comer outlined the program of the Y.M.C.A. during the past year.

In closing the program "Parson" Moss made the charges to the retiring president and to the incoming president. Ed Hamer and F. M. James made the responses.

The set of officers making their last appearance as "Y" officials were: Ed Hamer, president; Sam Gorham, vice-president; Harry Finch, secretary; and F. M. James, treasurer. Those inaugurated as the new Y. M. C. A. leaders were: F. M. James, president; Lee Greer, vice-president; John Manning, secretary; and Frank Hawley, treasurer.

T. E. P. Frat To Hold House Party May 8

Tau Epsilon Phi fraternity will be hosts to a group of guests the week-end of May 8 beginning with a dance in the Carolina Inn Friday night.

This is an annual affair by the members of this fraternity. This year the evening dance will be the first of a series of three functions given by this group. The afternoon following the formal dance there will be a tea-dance held in honor of the guests in the fraternity's house. Saturday evening will also be the occasion of a private dance.

Sunday afternoon, which will be the close of the series of social functions, there will be a bridge-party for the guests.

Ty Sawyer and his Carolina Buccaneers have been engaged to furnish the music for the formal occasion Friday night.

DEBATE CONTEST STARTS THURSDAY

Fifty-Two High Schools to Send Representatives Here During Week-End.

Extensive plans are being made and carried out for High School Week, which begins this week-end. The events will include debating, track meet, and tennis competition.

Schools which have entered the debating contest number fifty-two and are as follows: Altamahaw-Ossipee, Aurelian Springs, Benson, Bessemer, Bessemer City, Bethel, Black Creek, Bragtown, Central, Copeland, Creedmore, Curry, Denton, Edward Best, Ellenboro, Emma, Fountain, Fruitland Institute, Gibson, Glen Alpine, Goldsboro, Henrietta-Caroleen, Hudson, Lumberton, Manteo, Moncure, Morven, Mountain Park, Mt. Pleasant, Newport, Old Town, Pantego, Reem's Creek, Roanoke Rapids, Rockingham, Roseboro, Rural Hall, Rutherfordton-Spindale, Salisbury, Sanford, Severn, Southport, Tarboro, Thomasville, Trenton, Wakelon, Washington, Washington Collegiate Institute, Wilton, Windsor, Winston-Salem, and Zeb Vance.

These fifty-two schools have won both sides of the question in the trial debates. The question to be debated is: Resolved: That the United States should grant immediate independence to the Philippine Island. Two hundred and eight students will represent the schools, ninety-eight girls and one hundred and ten boys making up this number.

The opening meeting of High School Week will be held in Memorial hall at two o'clock Wednesday afternoon. Dean N. W. Walker, of the school of educa-

GREET PLAYERS WELL RECEIVED

First Quarto Version of "Hamlet" Is First Play Presented In New Hall.

Last night playing before a large audience, Sir Philip Ben Greet and his company gave an excellent portrayal of the First Quarto Version of Shakespeare's immortal Hamlet. The play was staged with the simplicity of the Elizabethan period, except in the elaborateness and richness of the costumes.

Not distracted by the beautiful furnishings which are an integral part of the modern production, the audience was better able to concentrate on the acting and diction of the players. Many persons noted the dissimilarity between the lines as spoken by the Greet players and the lines in the Second Quarto of Shakespeare which are studied by classes.

Russell Thorndike's interpretation of Hamlet was enacted with such fervor and imagination as to make the melancholy Dane a vivid personality.

Ben Greet seems less pompous and more comic as Polonius than we were wont to think him, but the wise saws of his parts were delivered with new gusto and added meaning. His clowning as the grave digger was enough to show his versatility.

The supporting members of the cast were of better quality than most of the troupes which have come here. They did their parts with a surety and poise apparently born of love for the playwright and their leader. Enid Clark was beautifully tragic as Ophelia, and Donald Layne-Smith made a fiery Laertes. Reginald Jarman as the

Plans For Junior-Senior Ball Are Finally Complete

Reports from the committe in charge of the coming Junior-Senior Ball indicate prospects of an event that will bid fair to eclipse all such previous occasions.

Last year the junior and senior events were held separately, whereas it has now been decided that the two classes make their respective dances units in a series held together.

The junior class function last year took place in Bynum gymnasium with music furnished by Russ Bolin and his Ohio Cotton Pickers. The senior dance followed the junior class tea-dance immediately with a formal evening occasion.

The two classes decided this year to have the senior dance follow the junior dance, which is to be given Friday evening, April 24, and is to be known as the Junior Prom. The dance on Saturday night will be the Senior Ball.

Contrary to the precedent of last year, the admission to the dances in this series will be strictly limited. The rules last year allowed anyone bringing a date to be admitted free, whether a member of the particular class or not. The committee announces that this year absolutely no one will be allowed to attend the class social events except members of either the junior or senior classes.

Johnny Hamp and his Kentucky Serenaders have been engaged to furnish the music for the two occasions. Hamp's aggregation of musicians is considered one of the country's leading ten dance orchestras and is very popular in this section. He is now finishing an engagement at the Cocoanut Grove in Los Angeles, California.

The decorations for the occasions will consist of black and white streamers and hangings entirely. The colors are intended to emphasize the strict formality of the affairs. In the center of the floor there will be a crystal ball suspended from the ceiling. Four spotlights, focusing upon the crystal globe from the corners of the hall, will throw vari-colored lights on the surfaces. The whole room will be covered with innumerable particles of light reflected from this revolving center.

In the actual arrangement of the decorations the committee will pattern the Tin Can, where the occasion is to take place, somewhat on the order of last year's ball, only more elaborate.

The actual floor-space will comprise approximately 120 by sixty feet, not including the space occupied by booths for the chaperones and the orchestra. The entrance will be a very

Three Addresses Are Scheduled By Graham

President Frank Graham has several important speaking engagements during the next two weeks. First, he will make an address at Seaboard April 17 on county education day. April 23 he speaks before the American Association of University Women in Winston-Salem, and the following day he will return to the Hill to address the Publicity Association Conference, which will be meeting at that time.

STAFF TRYOUTS ARE TO CONTINUE ALL THIS WEEK

More Men Are Wanted for Work In Reportorial Department.

The new men trying out for positions as reporters on the Daily Tar Heel met yesterday afternoon with the managing editor and assignment editor at five o'clock in room 104 Alumni building.

After discussing their stories, which were written on the hypothetical questions assigned by the editor Sunday evening, the managing editor announced that the men who would be selected would find their names in the masthead this morning. Those men who have been selected should come to the Daily Tar Heel office at one-thirty this afternoon to get their beat assignments.

Those persons wishing to try out for either the editorial or reportorial staffs may do so during this week by reporting to the editor or managing editor. Charms are given to the persons who have done the best and most consistent work during the course of the year and in addition, the pictures of the best writers are placed in the Daily Tar Heel page of the Yackety Yack.

Men tentatively placed on the reportorial staff are: Saul Gordon, Vass Shepherd, D. J. Olive, Bob Reynolds, and Donald Kochendorfer.

MARY DIRNBERGER WILL SHOW ART EXHIBIT FRIDAY

Mary Dirnberger, former member of the Carolina Playmakers and the class of '29, is to open an exhibit of sketches in water color of stage designs and costumes, Friday afternoon, April 17, from four-thirty to six o'clock.

Besides having acted in several plays produced by the Playmakers, Miss Dirnberger wrote a play, The New Eve, which was produced by that organization two years ago. She has designed scenery for a number of shows here, and last year was in New York doing theatrical and commercial designing there. In the same city, she directed a group of semi-professional actors at the Christadora House throughout the summer of 1930.

The exhibit will be in the Playmaker scene shop, the former glee club rehearsing room, in Person hall.

PRESIDENT GRAHAM WILL BE PRESENT

Thirty-Seven Men To Take Part In First Inauguration of Student Officers.

The first use of the new Memorial hall for a student activity will occur this morning at 10:30 o'clock and continue through 11:15 when thirty-seven campus officers will be inaugurated into their respective offices. Today's occasion will be the first of its kind, as hitherto only the members of the student council have had an inauguration ceremony.

Preceding the ceremony the University Band will assemble on the steps of the building and render an opening number. President Frank Graham will open the program with a few words on student affairs, and R. C. Greene, retiring president of the Student Union will preside. He will give his retiring address after which he will turn over the duties of his office to the incoming president, Mayne Albright. The new president will accept his position with a short speech, following which he will introduce the other members who are to serve on his council, these being nine in number. Three men on the council are elected from the professional schools of law, medicine and pharmacy, and one man from the old council.

The three newly elected class presidents will then be introduced by the president of the student union and they in turn will introduce the offices to serve with them. Jack Dungan, editor of The Daily Tar Heel, who will be introduced with the class presidents, will outline his policy for the coming year. Hamilton Hobgood, president of the rising senior class, and "Pardner" James, president of the Y. M. C. A. will make short talks.

The complete list of the men to be inaugurated this morning, together with their offices is: Mayne Albright, president of the Student Union; W. C. Medford, vice-president of the Student Union; Jack Dungan, editor of The Daily Tar Heel; "Spec" McClure, editor of The Carolina Magazine; Pete Gilchrist, editor of The Carolina Buccaneer; Holmes Davis, editor of The Yackety-Yack; McBride Fleming-Jones, senior member of the Publication Union Board; Charles G. Rose, junior member of the Publication Union Board; Don Shoemaker, member-at-large on the Publication Union Board; Theron Brown, president of the Athletic Association; Harry Hodges, vice-president of the Athletic Association; J. Carlyle Rutledge and Cecil Carmichael, debate council members; Ed Hazelwood, chief cheer leader.

The newly elected officers of the Y. M. C. A., who will be inaugurated at the same time are: Pardner James, president; Lee Greer, vice-president; John Manning, secretary; and Frank Hawley, treasurer.

Hamilton Hobgood, president of the senior class; Haywood Weeks, student councilman of the senior class; Tom Rose, vice-president of the senior class;

A Demand For Their Rights

With the recent land-slide vote of the republicans in Spain, another country has been turned from its old king-rule to one of government "by the people." Several such incidents have taken place within the past few days which seem to show a tendency for the people to demand their rights in the government more than ever before. It will not be denied that it was upon this theory of "self-government" that this United States was founded, but the call today is apparently even stronger than it was in the Revolution days.

Practically all of the countries in Europe which at one time were forced to live according to the voice of the king, are today enjoying more democratic forms of government. The people, apparently, are demanding that they be their own boss rather than be subjected to the hard, or even semi-hard, rule one man.

To carry out this point even further only recently the voters in the great center of curruption and vice — Chicago — rose up in arms against the gang rule, which for three terms, held its sway over the city. In its place the people have placed a man who promises to do away with all of the former governing "rings," and in their place to put the "voice of the people."

Another example might even be sighted in the case of the recent controversy in the Democratic party. (It is true that this is not a case of abolishing a king or a "gang" rule, but it does carry out the idea that the people are coming more and more to demand their say in affairs and be compelled to sit back and listen to the opinion of one leader.) One of the chief reasons why there is so much ridicule and condemnation of Chairman Raskcob is that the drys—the Southern drys especially—are afraid that they will be forced to accept a platform which will have a tendency to lean towards the repeal of the Prohibition amendment. The drys don't want to give ground an inch, but instead are determined to have their way, regardless. They want the Democratic platform to avoid the question as much as possible, but they know that if Raskcob has his way, that they will have to go some giving-in. The factor which they fear, just as in the other two incidents cited, is "one man rule."

Education of the masses has probably had more to do with the bringing on this democratic demand than ever before. Formerly a man with a little over average intelligence could fool the crowds and trick them into making him their leader. But today it is another story. (This reasoning suits the first two cases, but in the political case, it falls down—in our minds there is no explanation of the foolish way the drys have acted.)—C. G. R.

Birth-Control And The Church

"The world is growing worse because it is losing the last remnant of Protestantism." "Protestantism is going into Atheism." "The world was startled in the last few weeks by the Federal Council of Churches announcing a conclusion which means that which the Bible, the word of God, called wrong is now to be considered morally right."

These are some of the statements which Bishop William J. Hafey made Sunday in his sermon at Sacred Heart Cathedral in Raleigh. All this outburst on the part of the eminent Catholic leader seems to have been elicited by the recent action of the Federal Council of Churches, representing 23,000,000 Protestants in America, in favor of the controlled dissemination of information on birth control to those who need it.

Birth control, scientific regulation of offspring, stands out in the world as the most practical solution of a problem of ever-growing magnitude. The population of the world today is increasing more rapidly than the desirable type. The lower classes, the criminals, the unintelligent plodders, the mentally and physically defective, the degenerate, are peopling the world today. Ignorant of sex hygiene and birth control, they continue to reproduce themselves in ever-increasing numbers. Their offspring constitute the basis of the necessity for poor houses, prisons, and asylums of all kinds. Children who have grown up in bad environments or who have been handicapped from birth with defective or diseased minds or bodies can be expected to be nothing else than menaces and burdens to society.

The joker in the whole situation is that the majority of the people who are filling the world with undesirable offspring don't want half the children they have. Each additional child in a poor family means just another mouth to feed, another body to clothe, another child to be brought up in a detrimental environment. With a proper knowledge of birth control, the huge families so common in the poverty-stricken areas could be prevented.

American Protestantism has made a great forward step, one of the most progressive and liberal it has made in the last three decades. It is a great pity that Catholicism, instead of assisting, must oppose it and accuse Protestantism of "going into Atheism."—H. B.

OPEN FORUM

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

With all the talk of beautifying the campus, with all the money that is invested in an ambitious building program, the sorest eye-sore on the campus has been permitted to remain—nay, to flourish. Day by day the campus freight depot grows uglier and uglier, as more and more trash is dumped around the lone, patient freight car standing next to the library walk. And a gawky derrick has been thrown in besides, to complete the picture. Well might the new library blush at the evil company thrust upon it.

Why should this bit of land which could be made the garden spot of that part of the campus be chosen as an unloading station for building supplies? If it were only so temporarily, we might be able to put our tongues in our cheeks and look the other way as we passed this blight. But with the present building program of the University, it will be years before this menace to a beautiful campus will be removed.

It would not be a great engineering feat nor would it require much money to set the unloading station back about fifty yards from the walk and then the trucks could transport their materials from the back door, as it were, rather than right from our front yard. It is a shame that the buildings department hasn't long ago remedied this situation. If we are to have a campus beautiful let there be no parts which we must hide from visitors or apologize for. We don't want a freight depot in the heart of our campus. To use the Chapel Hill movie vernacular: "Take it off."

Liberty And Double Standard

Is there a double standard in drinking?

The April 11 issue of Liberty, weekly magazine, asks that question of the University of Oregon and of its readers in an editorial labeled "Student Drinkers." The editorial says of the University:

"At the University of Oregon five students were 'suspended indefinitely' for having been at a drinking party. Three of them were men, and their names were announced, presumably to disgrace them. The names of two girls were not given. Why, we don't know. Is there a double standard in drinking? If so, do boys receive the heavier punishment? Does that mean it's worse for boys to drink than girls? If not, what does it mean?"

The editor of Liberty asked one question to which the answer is obvious. He meant it to be. Not only is it no worse for boys to drink than girls, but the majority believe it is worse for girls to drink than boys. And that is why, in most instances, girls' names are not printed. The effect on women's reputations is more lasting.

The modern movement has been to accord to women more and more of the freedom given men. In politics, love, business, drinking, women are priding themselves on equalling and surpassing men in extremes both good and bad. A single standard for both sexes to aim at is most probably a good thing. And the rules and handicaps for both sexes should be the same.

Yet it has been the complaint of many men that women are unwilling to relinquish the peculiar advantages which they held at the expense of their personal freedom. Women were both penalized and benefitted in the past. Now that the penalties are being slowly removed, they must either step down from the pedestal on which they were placed, must suffer the inconveniences of jury duty, must accept their names in the court news—to name a very few—or they must make some definite contribution to still deserve any especial respect paid them.

Women have more than earned the little courtesies shown them by holding themselves to a stricter code. They then made a definite contribution. If the new woman of the single standard can make no more definite contribution than drinking her companion under the table, she may as well expect, no matter the injury to the reputations of the first ones affected, a single standard of treatment in the courts and in the papers.

College women might well turn to demanding of men the acceptance of the better part of their share of the old double standard rather than to themselves adopting the men's share—bad as well as good.—Oregon Emerald.

The Spirit Of A University

In a recent editorial, it was said that the purpose of a university is to inspire its students with a love for intellectual effort and for truth, with a vision of problems to be solved, and with a determination to play one's part in life well. What should be the spirit of a university if this purpose is to be realized.

The subject of a university, that is, the material with which it is concerned, is knowledge. Knowledge, both in its understanding and in its discovery, is attained by thought. So the spirit of a university must be such as will permit and stimulate thought.

Milton in his Areopagitica, in which he pleads for freedom of the press, argued that force is not relative to thought, that thought is thought only as it is free. There is a great deal of practical truth in this declaration. It does not do to say to a man: "You will think, or take a beating." The soul of thought is a delicate thing and the mere threat of a blow may drive it away in fear, while an actual blow may injure it beyond recovery. Then the spirit of a university must be one in which force and compulsion are absent, in which thought is encouraged to a free and willing development. Said Milton: "Give me the liberty to know, to utter, and to argue freely according to conscience, above all liberties."

Not only must force be absent, but unnecessary restrictions must also be removed. Some restrictions and requirements undoubtedly are necessary, but only those should be allowed whose usefulness is able to justify them to reason. For numerous restrictions and regulations cast a deadening influence upon those who wish to follow their interests into the field of knowledge. Force and unnecessary restrictions are fatal. Only if they are removed can a university realize its purpose.

The spirit of a university is the spirit of freedom, and freedom is that which draws a man's creative facilities to their perfection.—Daily Minnesotan.

Victory Over Generals Pushes Tar Heel Team Into League Leadership

Four Straight League Victories Bring Carolina from Cellar to First Place with 8-7 Score Over Washington and Lee.

Carolina took advantage of Washington and Lee miscues and found Leigh Williams' offerings for five hits in the "lucky" seventh inning to pound out an 8-7 victory in a Tri-State League game Monday at Lexington, Virginia.

The victory over the Generals gave the Tar Heels a lead in the Tri-State League with four victories and one defeat.

Williams' hurling was not as effective as usual and he was in hot water from the very outset of the game. The Tar Heels counted first when a base on balls, Cross' error and Paul Dunlap's daily triple sent two markers across the plate. The Generals tied the count in the fourth frame on E. Richardson's double, Fitzgerald's single and Cross' Texas Leaguer over short.

In the fifth, Routon's double off Shields' glove, Mattox's pass, and successive hits by Fitzgerald, J. Richardson, and Thibodeau gave the Generals a four run lead.

A hit to right which J. Richardson allowed to roll through his legs for a run, a walk, and four successive hits sent Williams to the showers. With the score tied and two runners on base, Jarrett, relieving Williams, was nicked for a hit and two more runs.

The scoring ended in the seventh when the Generals turned three singles into a run.

J. D. Shields, starting the game, proved easy pickings for the Generals, and was relieved in the fifth frame by Cecil Longest, who held the home team to a lone run. Longest got credit for the victory, giving him three victories and no defeats, establishing him as the leading hurler on Coach Ashmore's mound corps.

Tar Babies Get Second Win of Week; Meet Mount Airy High Here Thursday.

Rallying in the seventh inning with a single that shoved across the tieing and winning runs, the Tar Baby nine came from behind to beat Danville Military Institute, 5 to 4 yesterday afternoon.

The yearlings started their half of the first with two singles, by Harry and John Phipps, and a circuit clout, by "Mabel" Matheson, that cleaned the bags, accounting for three runs.

The boys from the Institute came back in the second to tie the count on an error, walk, two singles, and a sacrifice. In the sixth they tallied one more on an error followed by Lindsay's double to left.

Cox of the Tar Babies singled to right field in the next frame bringing in McIver and DeRose who got on with a walk and an error.

Crouch allowed but five hits in the first six innings of the seven-inning game, but Yerton, who relieved him in the last inning gets credit for the victory.

Matheson's homer and Lindsay's double were the only extra base licks. Lindsay also got a single to take batting honors for the day.

A snappy double play in the first inning stopped a Danville threat. John Phipps took a hot one at shortshop and threw it home to Matheson who passed it back and forth to Nalle, third baseman, until they tied up the runner, and then whipped it to third, where Phipps caught the runner coming around from first.

The freshmen meet Mt. Airy High School here Thursday afternoon at four o'clock on Emerson field.

BROWN LEADING CINDERMEN WITH THIRTY MARKERS

Slusser and Marland Follow With 24 and 22 Points Respectively.

Rip Slusser, Carolina speed merchant, tallied eight points against Georgia Tech last Saturday to seven for Theron Brown, but the Blue and White weight heaver still remains six points ahead of the rest of the squad in points scored this year with a total of thirty to his credit. Slusser is in second place with twenty-four, two points ahead of Ken Marland, another dash man.

Marland led the Tar Heel scorers against Tech last Saturday with first places in the 100 yard dash and the quarter mile for ten points. This, added to the twelve points he had previously scored this spring, enabled him to jump from fifth to third place, two points ahead of George Bagby in fourth place.

Bagby scored five points in the broad jump against the Techmen and placed third in the high jump for a total of six points for the day. Red Hamlet came through when Bagby fell out, and tied McCarthy of Tech for first place in the high jump.

Following Bagby is Archie Davis, whose first place in the high hurdles and third in the lows netted him six points and gave him undisputed claim to fifth place in the scoring. He has eighteen points one more than Brodie Arnold who added three points to his total with second place in the pole vault.

Mark Jones and Cliff Baucom, miler and two miler respectively, continued their habit of placing first in their only events and ran their totals to fifteen each. Both have run in only three races this spring and both are yet to be defeated.

For the first time this season, the pole vault failed to end in a tie. Ray Ruble took first place over Brodie Arnold with a height of twelve feet six inches and placed third in the broad jump to give him six points for the day and run his season's total to fourteen.

Smith, with third place in the 100 yard dash and second in the 220, garnered four points to go into a tie with Ruble at fourteen. Other leading scorers are Dameron with 13, Hamlet with 12, and Bob Drane with eleven. Bob Hubbard, running with Baucom in the two mile, has placed second to the veteran in every race this spring for a total of nine points.

In three meets this season, two against Southern Conference competition and the other against last year's S. I. A. A. champions, the Tar Heels have piled up a total of 276 points while their opponents have been garnering 102.

Infirmary List

Students confined to the infirmary yesterday were: Jack Dungan, Albert Suskin, Toy Jones, Elizabeth Hamrick, L. A. Dalton, R. M. Byrd, J. M. Tobin, Charlie Gault, J. R. Riley, P. W. Garland, and E. B. Grady.

Yeomans-Shields Match Goes Three Sets Before Tar Heel Is Eliminated

Leads Davis Cup Star in Final Set Losing Out By Reckless Stroking; Grant, Hines, Abels, Hendlin Reach Third Round.

Ed Yeomans, Carolina net star, forced Frank X. Shields, seeded No. 1 player in the men's division of the North-South tournament at Pinehurst, to employ every stroke in his repertoire to stave off defeat at the hands of the former. Shields was kept hustling every minute of the match to defeat the former North Carolina tennis champion.

The match was the feature of the day's play. Yeomans began sensationally winning the first four games of the opening set. Shields was stepping into the ball too soon, and made many errors before he rallied to bring the count up to 5-5. Yeomans broke through Shields' service and took the last two games to win the set, 7-5.

In the second set Shields ran the count to 5-1 before Yeomans started his deadly backhand which constantly dropped just inside the line to catch his opponent unawares. Wildness on his drives, however, caused him to lose crucial points and the second set went to Shields, 6-4.

The third set was a series of fast and furious volleys with Shields accomplishing several clever kills, and Yeomans getting several difficult returns over that saved him on several occasions. From 1-4, Yeomans brought the score up to 5-5, and then went into the lead by taking the next game. A few reckless strokes to the baseline kept him from winning the next game

CHARLOTTE HIGH TO DEFEND TITLE

Charlotte High's defending champions will lead one of the strongest field of high school trackmen in North Carolina history to the 19th annual state championships here at Carolina next Friday, and from all appearances several of the existing records will be in danger.

Several of the fourteen official marks were only hung up in last year's feature meet, but then again several more are past due to be broken.

The oldest dates back to 1921 when Koenig, of Greensboro, set a 53.6 seconds record on the quarter-mile that still stands.

Wade Ison, now sports editor of the Charlotte News, holds a couple more, 10.2 seconds for the Goodes, Adams, Carter, and Mason Favored to Turn Back Blue Devils Today.

After having disposed of their two opening matches in masterful fashion, the varsity golfers journey to Hope Valley this afternoon to tackle the Duke team. On paper the Tar Heels are much stronger than the boys from Durham, by virtue of their decisive 17 to 1 victory over Washington and Lee while all the Blue Devils could do was to beat the Generals by a one point margin.

The varsity golfers have been playing a round robin tournament among themselves for the last week and Coach Kenfield plans to select his team from the four men that have the best average in the number of games won and lost. Ben Goodes, has Dave Neiman, former Carolina star, likewise holds a pair of marks in the pole vault and broad jump that go back to 1927. There are two each from 1928 and 1929, and seven from 1930's record meet.

Charlotte High showed unusual strength, especially in the field events, in capturing Davidson's invitation meet this spring, and with Wilmington, Greensboro, High Point, and other teams all boasting of many star performers, it looks as if there will be another fine meet.

The meet will get underway Friday morning at 10:45 o'clock, with finals in four field events—the high jump, shot, broad jump and pole vault. Finals in the track events will begin at three o'clock.

There will be competition in fourteen events. Medals will go to first, second and third place winners in each individual event, a permanent cup to the winning relay team, and a state championship cup to the high school winning the meet.

INTRAMURAL RESULTS

New Dorms Wins Second of Season

New Dorms won its second game of the intramural baseball season yesterday afternoon, defeating Mangum, 14-6.

Cox led the New Dorms hitters with a double, single, and home run in three trips to the plate, accounting for two runs.

Hampton, New Dorms pitcher, held Mangum to four hits, striking out four and walking three.

Score by innings:

		R	H
Mangum	141—	6	4
New Dorms	806—	14	5

Batteries: Fronberg and Blythe; Hampton and Martin.

Delta Tau Delta Forfeits

Delta Tau Delta forfeited to Phi Sigma Kappa in the intramural baseball league yesterday afternoon.

LeGore Pitches One Hit Game

LeGore, Graham pitching ace, held Everett to one hit and two runs to win 12-2. LeGore held the opposing batters in check at all times.

Johnson and Straus, with three walks each, Dabash, with a triple and two walks, LeGore, with a double, single, and walk, and Robbins, with a single and a walk, led the Graham hitters, each man having a perfect day at bat.

LeGore struck out four and walked none in his three innings on the mound. Errors were responsible for the runs scored against him.

Score by innings:

		R	H
Everett	200—	2	1
Graham	291—	12	7

Batteries: Cohen and Baumstone; LeGore and Johnson.

T. E. P.'s Win Close One

The T. E. P.'s defeated the K. A.'s yesterday afternoon to win their first game of the season.

Artie Marpet, basketball star, was the hitting star of the game, getting a single and a home run in two trips to the plate, to score two runs.

Lindsey, with two out of two, and Wiggs, with a three-bagger and a single in three trips to the plate, were best for the K. A.'s.

Cole pitched a good game for the losers, allowing four hits, striking out 5, and walking two.

a delicacy of comprehension that is beyond most of his people. Perhaps here, too, is a symbol that floats above the visible action. We are all—that it, those of us who achieve the status of self in an environment that demands submission to the general will—as Cherokees whose grass is withered, as people benighted in an alien world, compelled to make delicate adjustment or go down into the defeat of anonymity.

"There will be numerous scenes in The Cherokee Night; Mr. Riggs envisions his action against a succession of backgrounds rather than within sterotyped succession of acts. It will be recalled that two of the scenes in Green Grow the Lilacs, though chronological in production, are supposed to take place simultaneously. In The Cherokee Night he will strive to abolish the time sense altogether, not only by using a wide range of characters, some of whom never reappear, but also by going back and forth in time and space. It is a poetic conception at bottom, in which the poet himself, after writing of inchoate attempts to win deliverance from mediocrity and monotony, will himself beat his wings against the arbitrary restrictions of plot and proscenium."

Of his new play Mr. Riggs says:

"It is not a play about the Cherokee Indians, but a play about the foretold night that has befallen their descendants in Oklahoma. This culmination had its undeniable origins in the fact of Paleface avariciousness and cruelty; its fruition became mandatory when a whole race, the Cherokee, was conquered and assimilated by another, the White.

"If this absorption had been complete, there would have been no Cherokee night, except the bearable one of oblivion—and this play would not have been written.

"But in the present-day resultant inheritor of this mixed tradition is a residual Cherokee strain difficult for the part-Indian to forget and impossible for him to comprehend. He is born with less intellectual equipment than he needs. And he has to face an existence (the inner more baffling than the outer) which might appall the most gifted of men by its complexity and its inescapable wry conclusion."

King and Muriel Hutchinson as the Queen were no less competent in their roles.

The Ben Greet Players are probably the best of the theatrical companies which have played at the University in the last few years and it was gratifying to see that the students fully appreciated their opportunity in seeing such an excellent production put on by actors of the calibre of this group.

The production of Hamlet was the first play ever to be staged in the new Memorial Hall. Now that the facilities of the new hall are available it is hoped that more entertainments of the better quality will be able to be engaged by the University authorities.

tion, will preside. At that time drawing for the sections and pairs will be done for the first preliminaries. There will be fourteen sections in the first preliminaries. Each section contains three or four complete debates and a winning pair in both the affirmative and negative will be chosen from each section to advance into the second preliminaries, which will begin at eight o'clock Friday morning. The final debate will be held at eight o'clock the same night. The University Orchestra will entertain in Memorial hall from seven-thirty until eight.

Thirteen schools have signified their intention of entering their teams in the tennis matches. These matches will be under the supervision of Coach Kenfield. Among the schools which have filed their applications for entry are: Burlington, Aberdeen, Chapel Hill, Charlotte, Dunn, High Point, Mt. Airy, Raleigh, Spring Hill, Washington, Wilmington, Fayetteville, and more are expected to enter. Harvey W. Harris, of Raleigh, won the championship last year and is again among the entrants.

Schools which have entered track teams in High School Week are: Raleigh, Albemarle, Charlotte, High Point, Rockingham, Carey, Asheville, Fayetteville, Robertsonville, Wilmington, Edward-Best, Ashboro. This meet will be run off under the direction of Coaches R. A. Fetzer and Dale Ranson.

The Y. M. C. A. is cooperating with other University officials in finding lodging for the people who are to participate in the affair. The girls and women have had places reserved for them in the homes of Chapel Hill. In the "Y" lobby there is a directory of all the participants in High School Week. An information table will be maintained there from Tuesday through Friday in order that those who desire to have some of their personal friends stay with them may do so.

The Freshman Friendship council canvassed the dormitories last night to find places for contestants. The University has also agreed to put cots in some of the empty rooms if it is thought that this will be necessary. The fraternities are being appealed to and already good response has been obtained from them.

which would have given him the set and match. Shields' overhead strokes were also off. In the last two games Shields applied pressure, slamming over powerful services, and moving across the court at high speed to overpower his rival, by a score of 5-7, 6-4, 9-7.

Bryan Grant, Wilmer Hines, Luke Abels, and Hinkey Hendlin, University tennis stars, were among those advancing to the third round of play.

Lenoir Wright and Yeomans, Carolina stars were defeated in the second round of play, while Sonny Graham, Tar Heel captain, was eliminated in the first round.

John Van Ryn, Davis Cup star, and Cliff Sutter, former Tulane University star and now ranking No. 5 in the country also advanced to the third round. Sutter won from H. D. Vail by default while Van Ryn allowed Dr. Irwin Epstein, of Montreal, only one game in their match which lasted two sets.

Summaries (Carolina varsity only):

First Round

Grant, Atlanta, defeated Dockery, Rockingham, 6-0, 6-1; C. A. Major, New York, defeated E. K. Graham, Chapel Hill, 6-4, 9-7; Wilmer Hines, Columbia, defeated F. J. Haas, Washington, 6-1, 6-0; Ed Yeomans, Washington, defeated E. W. Travis, Youngstown, 6-1, 6-0; Luke Abels, High Point, defeated R. Lovell, Jr., Mt. Airy, 6-2, 6-2.

Second Round

H. H. Hendlin, New York, defeated Harvey Harris, Charlotte, 6-2, 6-2; Bryan Grant, Atlanta, defeated C. S. TAR HEELS MEET DUKE GOLF TEAM AT HOPE VALLEY

won all his matches played so far this week while Joe Adams, who has played so well in the matches so far this season, has won only two out of five matches he has played up until presstime yesterday. Joe had a 151 for thirty-six holes against the Generals with a seventy-four and a seventy-seven. Bev Mason has shown up well in the late practices and has a very good standing in the tournament as does Paul Carter who has been spending most of his time in Pinehurst. These four men will probably be the first four to play this afternoon with a possibility of Aubrey Brooks and Al Brown making it a six man team. This will be the third match of the year for the Tar Heel golfers and it is expected that they will continue to uphold their good record. They won from the Boston College team by the score of 25 1-2 to 1 1-2, and then they conquered the Generals 17 to 1. The Tar Babies are the only ones that have given them any real competition halving a match with them a few days ago.

Little is known of the Duke team other than the outcome of their match with the Generals which ended in a victory for Duke by the score 9 1-2 to 8 1-2. Caldwell, a New York star, is the Blue Devils' big gun. Whether or not he will be able to take the measure of his Tar Heel opponent will be hard to say. He plays number two and in all probability will have to face either Adams or Mason. Both these men are good and will give him a good fight.

The Tar Heel team will, in all probability, be comprised of the following men: Goodes, Adams, Mason, and Carter, and will probably play in that order. The lineup of the Duke team is unknown.

SMOKER CALLED FOR JUNIOR AND SENIOR CLASSES

Meeting in Swain Hall at 9:00 Tonight Will Discuss Business Relative to Dances.

All members of the junior and senior classes of the University have been called by their individual presidents to meet in Swain hall tonight at 9 o'clock, for the final disposition in regard to the Junior-Senior ball, and other details and urgent business of both classes.

Presidents Pat Patterson and Theron Brown decided late yesterday to call the meeting after conferring with members of the dance committee and other members of the two classes.

Yesterday invitations to attend the Junior-Senior ball were mailed to four hundred prominent statesmen, social leaders, business men, and their wives. President Frank Graham has agreed to head a large reception committee.

A discipline committee has engaged patrolmen from Durham to supervise the distribution of the large crowds that are expected to attend.

The contract for the decorating of the Tin Can has been let to R. C. Greene and Mayne Albright who will commence operations more than a week before the date of the first dance.

Following the modernistic design, the Tin Can will be converted into the most up to date of ball rooms.

REPRESENTATIVES OF HIGH SCHOOLS TO ARRIVE TODAY

Fifty-Three Schools Will Be Represented in Annual Debating, Track, and Tennis Contests.

Today the representatives from fifty-three North Carolina high schools will appear on the campus and begin operations leading up to the final contest of the North Carolina High School Debating Union.

The delegates were invited to the University under the auspices of the Dialectic and Philanthropic Literary Societies and the extension division of the University. The preliminary debates will lead up to the final contest in Memorial hall at 8:00 o'clock Friday evening, when the Aycock memorial cup will be awarded.

The first general meeting of all the debaters and teachers will be held in Memorial hall at 2:00 o'clock this afternoon, where Professor N. W. Walker of the education department of the University will preside. Here drawing lots for sections and pairs in the first preliminaries will be conducted.

The question under discussion has an added appeal because of the recent attention given to it in all the large newspapers. It is, "Resolved: That the United States should grant immediate independence to the Phillippines."

The committee sponsoring the debates is composed of both students and members of the faculty. Professor N. W. Walker is chairman, while Mr. E. R. Rankin is serving as secretary. The members of the committee are: (faculty) L. R. Wilson, D. D. Carroll, G. M. McKie, and C. E. McIntosh; (students) E. R.

RELATIONS CLUB IS ADDRESSED BY DUKE PROFESSOR

Authority on Carribean Question Is Heard by International Relations Group.

The International Relations Club had as its speaker last Tuesday evening in room 213 Saunders Hall, Dr. J. F. Rippy, of the Duke University history department, who is a specialist on Latin America. He was introduced by K. C. Frazier.

"Are we to be friendly to the people around the Carribean Sea?" was the question on which his address was delivered. Rippey discussed the type of people in Central America. He stated that our pan-American policy has acted as a shield to establish spheres of influence in the Carribeans. "There are five objections that the Carribean peoples have to the American attitude toward them."

These, the speaker listed as the following: first, our action concerning the Panama Canal Zone in which we seem to consider that zone our own property; second, our action towards building a canal in Niccagara without consulting El Salvador and Costa Rica; three, taking upon ourselves to protect our investments at the expense of the Carribeans; four, our new interpretation of the Monroe Doctrine, on which we establish American influence in the Carribeans, and five, they object to the fact that we object to them having a revolution, because they claim it to be their only means to secure order.

HISTORY OF MUSIC IN SPAIN IS TOLD BY T. S. McCORKLE

The regular monthly meeting of the music club took place last night at 8:15 o'clock in the music building. Mrs. T. S. McCorkle arranged the program which consisted of Mrs. Fred B. McCall and Mrs. F. H. Edmister, pianists; Mr. McCorkle, violinist, and a small orchestra of thirteen people, both students and faculty members. In addition to the music recitals given Mr. McCorkle delivered an address on the history of Spanish music up until today. The various compositions named by Mr. McCorkle in his address were illustrated by the orchestra.

In his talk, Mr. McCorkle spoke about the foremost Spanish composers of the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. A few of those mentioned were Frederico Chueca, author of many musical plays, and from whose opera, Cadiz, was taken the national hymn of Spain; Ruperto Chapi, known as the founder of the modern Spanish

ROSE APPOINTED TO HEAD STAFF OF '31 HANDBOOK

New Edition of Campus Guide Will Be Similar to Those of Former Years.

According to the plans announced yesterday by the newly-chosen editor of the Carolina Handbook, Charles G. Rose, Jr., there will be only a few minor changes in the make-up of the publication for next year. The main alteration will be made in the cover for the 1931 edition, which the editor plans to publish in a light blue instead of the usual white covering. Al Olmstead has been chosen business manager of the publication.

The plan of making the book in the order of a general campus information publication for the new men will be continued. Aside from the new covering, and a few small changes, the book will be practically the same as the 1930 issue.

It is the present plan to have the handbook off the press and in the hands of next year's freshmen by the middle of August, and in this way give the members of the class of '35 sufficient time to acquaint themselves with the organizations and activities at the University.

There will be about 1700 issues of the book published during the summer, over a thousand of which will be sent to the new applicants. The remainder of the number will be sent to numerous universities and colleges throughout the country and to the principals of the larger high schools in the state.

Those men who have been selected to work on the 1931 edition are: Billy McKee, associate editor, Winfield Blackwell, town editor; Bob Barnett, Y. M. C. A. editor; Tom Broughton, athletic editor; Bob Woerner, class editor; and Harry F. Comer, adviser.

The Carolina Handbook is published yearly under the auspices of the local Young Men's Christian Association and is sent out to all of the incoming new men.

FRESHMAN CLASS SECURE WADE TO ADDRESS SMOKER

Duke Coach Will Continue Theme of First Smoker in Meeting Friday Night.

Wallace Wade, head athletic coach at Duke University, will address the second freshman smoker Friday night at 9:00 o'clock in Swain hall. This speech will complete the theme started in the first smoker when Dr. Archibald Henderson talked on "The past relations between Carolina and Duke."

The first smoker was exceptionally successful since five hundred freshmen turned out for the occasion. Pat Patterson presided as the freshman class had not been organized at that time. Friday night, however, Ike Minor, president of the freshman class, will preside.

Beside Wallace Wade, the main speaker for the evening, President Graham and Coach Chuck Collins are to make short addresses.

All of the student leaders on the campus, faculty members, and the officers of the other three classes have been invited to the smoker, and are expected to attend.

The executive committee of the freshman class made frequent efforts last quarter to obtain a speaker for the occasion, but the event was postponed pending the acceptance of one of a number of men invited to address the group. Invitations were extended to Alfred E. Smith, ex-governor of New York and Democratic candidate for the presidency in 1928; Hon. Cameron Morrison, former governor of North Carolina and recently appointed United States Senator, and Wallace Wade, who came to Duke University recently from the University of Alabama.

An orchestra for the occasion has not yet been selected, but class officials expect to complete musical arrangements within a few days and secure a popular collegiate orchestra. All first year men will be expected to attend.

Ben Greet Says Talkies Will Never Replace Legitimate Stage

By Peter Hairston

For the third time in his life, Sir Philip Ben Greet has visited the University, this time to present, in his inimitable way, Shakespeare's Hamlet. He came as one of the leading exponents of Shakespearen drama on the modern stage. For over fifty years he has been connected with the theatre, both as actor and director.

In all of these years, he has learned, he says, at least one thing; that is that there is just one model for playwrites, actors, and producers; and he is William Shakespeare. Although this idea can hardly be classed as unusual among Englishmen as a whole, the firmness of his conviction is unique. He even carried it to the point of using costumes such as those worn by players in the time of Queen Elizabeth in order to conform as nearly as possible to the original productions.

His pet abomination are the vitaphones, which he calls "abominable machines." To quote him, "They have not," he said, "and never can take the place of the legitimate stage. They are after all, only glorified photography. A short time ago, when I was in Hollywood, I was struck by the number of people who had to sit around all day for two young girls to get correctly painted and posed. There is no art in this, for it has ceased to be acting and has become, instead, posing."

His praise for the Playmaker movement was reserved but nevertheless warm, and he thought that their equipment was excellent. He particularly stressed the importance of their producing plays by student authors, thereby encouraging them to write more.

Aside from the theatre, Sir Philip's remarks were very limited; and although he said that he thought the University's campus was the most beautiful he had yet seen, he also said that the average American student would be overcome by the beauty if he went to an English university. He declined to make comparisons between the students of the two countries on the grounds that it might be embarrassing.

BAILEY OBTAINED AS SPEAKER FOR N. C. S. F. CONGRESS

United States Senator Will Address Student Federation at Duke, May 16.

Senator Josiah W. Bailey of Raleigh has accepted an invitation to address the second annual congress of the North Carolina Federation of Students at Duke University, Saturday, May 16. In a letter to John Lang, president of the Federation, Senator Bailey yesterday announced his acceptance of the invitation and expressed his great interest in the work of the Student Federation. The Senator said that he was a very busy man, but that he could not well afford to miss the opportunity of addressing the future leaders of North Carolina.

The subject of Senator Bailey's address to the Federation will be "What the Nation expects of its Youth," and it is believed that the Senator will use this subject as an opportunity to express many of his liberal views on government and society which will govern his future work in the United States Senate.

The program for the meeting of the second annual congress of the Federation is as yet incomplete, but already there are a number of interesting events being arranged for this affair. Besides Senator Bailey's speech, President Ed R. Murrow, of the National Student Federation, President Few of Duke, and several college professors and experts will also address the congress on various phases of student life and activity.

LOCAL KIWANIANS HOSTS TO SEVEN CLUBS IN DIVISION

The Chapel Hill Kiwanis club was host to all seven of the other clubs in the fifth division of the Carolinas' Kiwanis district at a supper in the Baptist church, Tuesday evening at six o'clock.

There were 135 Kiwanians present, representing the clubs of Raleigh, Durham, Henderson, Mebane, Graham, Burlington, and Warrenton. The Mebane club won the attendance prize, having the largest percentage of its total membership present.

Mr. Thomas Pruitt, of Hickory, governor of the Carolinas' Kiwanis district, was the principle speaker of the evening. He was introduced by the lieutenant governor, Mr. Marion Fowler, of Durham. President Frank Graham, who was scheduled to deliver a welcoming speech to the members, was unable to attend, being unexpectedly called to Raleigh.

The entertainments of the evening assumed the form of stunts presented by the clubs of Raleigh, Durham, and Mebane.

GRAHAM TRACES DEVELOPMENT OF CAMPUS OPINION

Greene and Albright Urge More Frequent Student Meetings For Problem Discussion.

A new custom was begun in the University yesterday morning when, at chapel period, thirty-seven campus officers for the ensuing year were formally inaugurated. The band played on the steps of Memorial hall as the officers-elect assembled on the stage and the audience was being seated.

R. C. Greene, outgoing president of the student union, introduced Frank Graham, president of the University, who reminded the group of the responsibility conferred upon them, in being selected as the most fit representatives of the student body.

"Student government began in the Di and Phi societies," Mr. Graham began, "and later, control passed from the societies to the classes. For a while, the president of the senior class was always president of the student body, and the other class officers were members of the student council. The editors of the Tar Heel, Yackety Yack, and Carolina Magazine were chosen alternately from the Di and Phi, and from the fraternities. But the post-war period brought about the election of the student officers from the campus at large, and with few exceptions, this practice has continued to the present.

"The World War period found a spirit of militarism at the University, and this was followed by a cynicism, which gradually caused the disappearance of old traditions. Modern mail delivery brought an end to the habit of using the post office as a favorite gathering place for the student body, likewise the old well is no longer a favorite retreat. In the old days, daily meetings of the entire student body in chapel were the rule, but now only freshmen and sophomores attend chapel, irregularly.

"We have involved from militarism to the honor system which we employ today. I am confident that the present state of depression throughout the country will give way to the realization and rebirth of idealization of the campus. In Raleigh today, the State is stripping itself to its bare essentials in order that we may be able to maintain our high standing. So I hope that you students here will adopt a truer sense of responsibility and strip yourselves of all apparent wastefulness. I would like to see the revival of monthly student meetings to discuss questions of timely interest.

"I have watched the development of student government by student leaders and have noted a gradual decline in drinking, cheating, and gambling when taken under student control. In you new officers lies the responsibility to take your stand towards a greater University of North Carolina."

Greene then gave a summary of the activities of the student council for the past year, and stated that 110 cases were dealt with. There were sixty-four probations and twenty-eight

The Class Attendance Problem

It's rather a late time just now to say anything about the attendance problem. The faculty has already taken its stand; as far as they are concerned the incident is apparently closed. The students are still grumbling, but they appear resigned to their fate.

Cooperation is a word which is hopelessly overworked. Whenever a problem of any sort arises anywhere, someone inevitably offers cooperation as a solution. Cooperation has become a universal panacea, and the mere mention of the word is enough to disgust intelligent people.

Cooperation, however, is the one and only means by which a satisfactory solution to the attendance problem may be arrived at.

At the beginning of this quarter the psychology department adopted a set of regulations which the students considered extremely unfair and needlessly harsh. A good deal of heated discussion revealed the fact that the heads of the department could not be gentlemen and pass such rules. It was quite a surprise when Dr. Bagby, of his own volition, suggested to the students the course of action which would do most to change the rules. At the serious and reasonable request of a committee of students, the department modified the regulations so as to meet the requests of the students in every detail.

If the students could realize that the faculty is actually confronted with a problem in regard to class attendance, and if they could impress upon the faculty that students really are willing to be reasonable, a fair system might be worked out. The psychology department is no exception; other departments are equally as willing to be fair about the matter; it is up to the students to do their part.—H. B.

Unpreparedness

There is an evident interest in things which transcend the somewhat limited boundaries of this campus. However, far too often it is a mere passing interest which makes no effort to probe beneath the shell of superficiality. The Human Relations Institute is preparing for the campus a program of leaders in three broadly inclusive fields. These leaders will not agree; rather, will they present for our approval controversial theories and philosophies in their own fields. The fact that these men will be here, that the campus will feel the power of their personal magnetism, will share with them the interest of their subjects will be of immeasurable value.

However, the Institute like a hundred other attractions will pass like a spring breeze if there is not the cooperation of preparatory study on the part of those that will take advantage of its attractions. The leaders will be no more than trusted shepherds guiding ignorant sheep into confusion if there is not a spirit of thoroughgoing and intelligent criticism and cooperation on the part of the student body at large. But with proper study, familiarity with the various fields of interest and a deep sense of personal responsibility in the matter the Institute has limitless possibilities to offer.

Everyone is familiar with the topics with which the Institute will become absorbed. They are the broad fields of Industrial, Interracial, and International relationships. Study, reading and discussion, in these general topics with all of their countless ramifications will lead to a greater significance which will then lie implicit in the more profound meetings of the Institute proper. Thus the campus would avoid the danger of falling prey to the menance of transient superficiality in a matter which justly deserves more than shallow, half-hearted attention.—R. W. B.

College Life In Movies

An excellent presentation of a dramatic masterpiece awakens in one the sense of desiring better things in the every-day drama presented for our entertainment at the picture shows. We have spoken several times through our publications for better entertainment at the movies. Probably something worse is engaged for emission. There is one thing that we have been wanting to see for a long time, but which we are beginning to despair of seeing—a show depicting college life as it really is.

Why can't actors in one of the most human performances which takes place be depicted as they really are? There is enough comedy of a very genuine type going to waste on the campus every day to make an excellent sketch on that subject alone. Our producers could not, of course, fill the movie houses of the country by presenting something with parts or all of the production labeled for the intelligentsia. They are, as one of our professors phrased it, "throwing out slop for the hogs." The public devours rather eagerly and ask for more. So why should the producers change? Personally we would be willing to pay double the price and see a really good show a fair percentage of the times we attend. —O. W. D.

With Contemporaries

Evolution Of Universities

A widespread upheaval in the college and university system is to be expected in the future, if we are to judge from the wind that has been blowing from Eastern educational institutions.

Harvard helped begin the movement by installing an "honors" plan by which students may prepare, under the supervision of tutors, for a written final, a comprehensive examination in some special field. To allow time for intensive study for this test the honors student is excused from examinations in his last year's courses.

Other Eastern schools adopted the honors plan, which is really a modification of the English "tripos" system. Then the University of Chicago drew sudden attention by announcing that it would give students their degrees as soon as they had finished their work, without regard to the time they had spent in residence.

Next, Yale suddenly awoke to the need of innovation and broadcast the fact that it would abolish one-semester courses and compel students to learn more about fewer subjects. There has even been a reverberation of this newer educational theory in the Southwest, where "Alfalfa Bill" Murray has issued a statement declaring that he would like to see the University of Oklahoma limit itself to the last two years of college and leave the work of the first two years to the junior colleges.

All of these new curricular changes indicate that the universities are beginning to take their educational responsibilities more seriously. When collegians have to devote more time to their academic work, and when they feel that they are really becoming specialists in one subject, a decrease in campus extra-curricular activities may be expected to take place. When this happens and universities become more like the serious-minded European schools, the place of the present social-seeking college may be supplanted by the junior colleges, or even by an expansion of the last two years of high school. The same number of people may attend "college" in the future but it will be one of a different nature.—Daily Kansan.

suspensions. Greene remarked that, in arriving at a decision, the council went by no set rules of conduct, but by individual integrity. He also expressed a hope for more frequent student meetings than are held at present.

Mayne Albright, new president of the student union, was next introduced by Greene. Albright praised the student leaders of the past year, and said that he felt the new officers fully capable of carrying out the Carolina ideals and principles.

He, in turn, presented Bill Medford, vice-president of the student union, and the members of the student council. Next Albright introduced the editors of the campus publications, the members of the P. U. board, and the president of the Y, F. M. James, who introduced the other Y officers. The class presidents, Hobgood, Griffin, and Jones, presented their other class officers, and Albright introduced the remaining campus-wide officers.

The First Quarto Hamlet, presented by the Ben Greet Players

Memorial Hall, April 14, 1931

Sir Philip Ben Greet was knighted two years ago by King George V for services rendered the cause of English drama throughout a long career as actor in and producer of Elizabethan and earlier plays, particularly the works of Shakespeare. His company is noted for its attempts to instill the spirit of the age into its productions, to portray the drama of three centuries ago as contemporary audiences must have seen it. Theatre-going Chapel Hill had the opportunity on Tuesday night to witness one such attempt; few who took the occasion will regret it.

The play was the first quarto of Hamlet, presented faithfully according to the script. The choice itself was an interesting one, for this first quarto, corrupt and faulty though it is in some passages, represents in all probability the earlier stage version of the tragedy much more accurately than does the later revised copy as given in the folio. Scholars disagree—it is their outstanding characteristic—but the majority are in accord that the first quarto was a pirating of a successful stage play, probably by a man making stenographic notes in the theatre. The frequency of auditory errors, the visually descriptive stage directions, the scrambling and disarrangement of lines in a few of the longer speeches, all constitute evidence tending toward this theory. Here, then, we are in the closest possible touch with the Hamlet that Shakespeare first evolved, a much closer touch than we could get from a performance of the literary version he worked out by degrees, which was, in all likelihood, never performed just as we have it during his lifetime. Beside the folio, this first quarto version seems crude and incomplete; it is much shorter, many of the magnificent lines that have become common to our speech are omitted or distorted, and even some of the depth and subtlety of the character delineation is undeveloped; but for all that, the germ of the true play lies in it, the genius of Shakespeare permeates it, and, best of all, it makes excellent theatre.

In character with their general aim, the Ben Greet Players employed the simplest of scenery. The drapes that hung about the stage formed an impressive background that served inevitably to center the interest on the action taking place before it; the props of three small stools and a platform with three steps leading up to it were ample for any use the actors might make of them, and never distracted from the main focal points, the actors themselves. Some scenes were unfortunately quite spoiled by being enacted before the front curtain, crowding the characters on a narrow strip of stage which forced them to walk single file, and made is impossible to connect action with dialogue which would be audible in most parts of the house, since the speaker invariably found himself talking into a muffling, deadening curtain just at the high spot in his discourse. Unhappily, the very first scene of the play was so performed, with the added handicap of such darkness that made aught but a glimpse of crimson doublet invisible. When will Shakespearean producers learn that an illusion of darkness satisfactory to a stage ghost can be procured without leaving the spectators in total ignorance of what's going on?

A discussion of the acting must necessarily be subjective. Russell Thorndike's Hamlet was a delight, especially after his first two scenes had warmed him to the task. He had a difficult job before him, to wrest from the lines of the quarto enough to come out creditably in the unavoidable comparisons the audience would make with other Hamlets, Hamlets who had at their disposal some of the finest lines ever written. And yet he did his job with finesse; his rapid transitions from restraint to frenzy, his moments of utter emotional exhaustion, and his interpretation of the most sensitive and difficult role in English drama stamped him as a skilled artist. Even so, he had a rival who took the show away from him in the only scene in which she was given a chance. Muriel Hutchinson's Queene was at all times finely portrayed, and the great scene between Hamlet and his mother reached a high-water mark in acting which Chapel Hill is not apt to see again touched in some time.

For the rest, they were almost all adequate, but not exceptional. It seemed to me that Leartes was woefully miscast, for purely physical reasons. Sir Philip Ben Greet himself, doubling as Corambis (Polonius to you who are only familiar with the folio) and the first Gravedigger, threw himself so wholeheartedly into his parts that at times he became unintelligible to all except those in the best seats, because of his sacrificing enunciation to "business." This sacrifice was the more noticeable since the deliveries of Hamlet, the Queene, and the first Player were so pleasingly clear and distinct. Of the minor characters, Horatio, played by Rex Walters, stood out, especially after he escaped from the shrouding darkness of scene 1. The part of Osric is fortunately very minor; the performance of it was distressing.

One of the cleverest and most skillful touches in the performance was the dumb show enacted before the players presented the tragedy of Gonzago for the court. As it happened, some in the audience had not been forewarned, and laughed merrily at the very serious pantomime. Happily, it soon took hold, and was received with the attention it deserved.

If this production had not been well acted and staged, it would still have been of great value and interest to us as a literal rendering of a play of tremendous importance in literary history, a play now almost extinct because of the mighty proportions of its glorious younger brother. However, it was well acted and staged, and so, for a very enjoyable evening, to Sir Philip Ben Greet and his troupe we extend thanks.

SNYDER WILL SPEAK AT BAPTIST CHURCH SUNDAY

Dr. Joel S. Snyder, pastor of the First Baptist church of Fayetteville, will speak at the First Baptist church here next Sunday at the 11:00 o'clock service.

SOCIETIES VOTE ON THREE BILLS

"That the House tax of ten per cent on college football is unjust and unfair," was passed after considerable discussion Senators Ramsay and Silverstein favored the bill and Senator Gentry opposed it.

For the first time in the long history of the Phi assembly a woman served as speaker. Upon the absence of Speaker Haywood, Virginia Douglas, speaker pro-tem presided.

Ony one bill received consideration in the Phi due to a great amount of new business. The proposal, Resolved: "That the Phi assembly go on record as favoring the resolution that companionate marriages contracted under the present system proposed by Judge Ben Lindsay be recognized as legal unions," was passed after heated discussion. Representative Simmons introduced the resolution, and after considerable interruptions, finally succeeded in explaining Judge Lindsay's plan. Represenatives Hobgood and Kelly spoke in favor of the resolution, and Represenatives Jacobs and Kornegay opposed it.

Due to vacency in the present ways and means committee the assembly chose a member to fill the position. Representatives Kelly and Kornegay were nominated and Representative Kelly was chosen to fill the vacancy.

Representative Campen, representing the dance committee announced that the Phi assembly dance would be held on May 2.

AT THE CAROLINA

The attraction Friday at the Carolina is "It Pays to Advertise," starring Skeets Gallagher, Eugene Pallette, and Carole Lombard. The feature is a comedy woven around the theme of big business, and between the efforts of Gallagher and Pallette the high pace of the humor is sustained throughout.

The closing feature of the week is "Gun Smoke," a feature western in which Richard Arlen and Mary Brian are co-stars. This production affords an unusual treatment of the western, by bringing in conflict between gangsters and the ranch employees on the ranch to which the thugs have retired to hide from the police.

Cadets Tie Tar Heels In Extra Inning Tilt

Ferebee Hits Home Run and Single to Lead Carolina Hitters; Edwards and Griffiths Pitch.

The Carolina Tar Heels battled the Virginia Military Institute Cadets to a 5-5 tie on the Keydets home field to prolong their winning streak, which has extended throughout the Virginia trip. The game was called at the end of the eleventh inning to allow the Tar Heels to catch the train. The Carolina nine now has a record of four wins and one tie on the Virginia trip.

The score was tied twice and neither side was able to maintain an advantage for more than one inning after the fifth.

Williams, V. M. I. hurler was removed in favor of Noble in the seventh. Noble gave a brilliant display of mound work but errors by the Cadet infield allowed the Tar Heels to put across another run in the final frame. V. M. I. attempted a squeeze play in their half of the last inning when the runner on third was caught between third and home and the Keydets last chance for a victory was gone.

Carolina threatened in the ninth but a double play Crutchin to Edmunds stopped the prospective rally.

Ferebee, with a homer and a single, House, with two doubles and a single, and Croom, with a single and double, led the Tar Heels at bat.

Edmunds gathered a single and double to lead the V. M. I. attack. Noble, Keydet outfielder, had a perfect day at bat, gathering two singles in his two trips to the plate.

Edwards did the mound duty for the Heels, striking out three and walking two and hitting a long triple to score one of the Carolina runs. Williams, of V. M. I., fanned eight men during his stay on the mound but was hit hard and had to be removed in the seventh.

Big Bill Tilden, having turned to professional tennis after the most-brilliant career in the history of the amateur court game, and Bobby Jones, having retired from competitive amateur golf at the height of his fame after his astonishing achievement of winning the four major golf championships of the world in a single season, tennis and golf fans are wondering just who will win the crowns that these two brilliant performers have worn for the past few years.

Jones goes out of amateur golf in a blaze of glory. His general standard of play over a long span of years, and his final exhibition in winning the four major golf championships in one season of play, have won him general recognition as the greatest golfer of all time.

Naturally Jones has been beaten on various occasions—golf isn't a game at which any one can win all of the time—but no one ever thought that the men who beat Jones were in the class of the Atlanta lawyer. Last year it was a case of Jones first and the rest of the field trailing along in the distance. He was a sport king who had no crown prince trailing at his heels; a champion who had no logical contender to worry about.

Who will wear Jones' two American crowns—amateur and open—this year?

Both big tournaments should provide first-class dog fights for the fans. With Jones out, there are a dozen professionals quite capabale of playing golf good enough to win the profitable open title—and quite as many amateurs good enough to win the prized honor of the amateur championship.

In the open championship four players are standouts over the remainder of the field.

Macdonald Smith, who was runner-up to Jones in both the American and British Open championships last summer, looks like the best of the four. Of the other three Tommy Armour, professional champion last year and winner of the American Open in 1927, looks best, although Leo Diegel and Horton Smith are two other pros who will finish around the top.

The amateur championship is even more a case of "drawing straws," with Harrison Johnson and Jess Sweetster as the leading contenders, although Sweetster hasn't been playing much competitive golf of late. Others who might be considered are Eugene Homans, runner-up to Bobby last year, Roland Mackenzie, Doctor Willing, and George Voight.

In spite of his remarkable career on the courts, Big Bill Tilden didn't go out in a blaze of glory. He was beaten before he quit—beaten often and soundly sometimes.

The last man to beat him in an important amateur tournament was John Doeg, who turn-

THREE CAROLINA NET STARS WIN IN THIRD ROUND

Abels, Hines, and Grant Remain; Grant-Hines Win First Appearance in Doubles.

Bryan Grant, Carolina net ace defeated Dr. Jack Wright, Canadian Davis cup star, in the third round of the annual North-South tournament at Pinehurst. The Canadian was unable to cope with the continuous stream of long drives the Atlantan turned loose on him.

Wright put up a good match, giving the University star his hardest right of the tournament, thus far. Previously Grant had lost only two games in the first and second round of play. The Tar Heel star, who was seeded No. 1 in the tourney, won the opening set which went nine games. In the second set the Canadian came back strong to take the set by the same score. Wright won two games in the final set but was unable to cope with the Georgian, who won the set and match. The score of the match was 6-3, 3-6, 6-2.

Wilmer Hines and Luke Abels, Carolina sophomores, won their third round matches. Hines defeated Cedric Major, New York, 6-3, 6-4; while Abels defeated Ed King, Pinehurst, 6-3, 6-0.

Shields and Van Ryne, Davis cup stars, also won their third round matches, Shields winning over Rainville, another member of the Canadian Davis cup team, 8-6, 4-6, 6-2, while Van Ryne defeated Pat Winston, of Chapel Hill, 6-0, 6-1.

In the first round of the doubles play Harley Shuford and David Morgan, University freshmen, advanced by default, while Sonny Graham, Tar Heel tennis captain, paired with H. H. Hendlin to defeat Ed King and H. D. Sherreda, of Pinehurst. Seth Dockery and John Hilliard, members of the University freshmen tennis team, met defeat at the hands of 4-6, 6-1, 6-3.

In the second round of the doubles play Yeomans and Wright, of Carolina, were defeated by Wright and Rainville, of Montreal, 5-7, 6-2, 6-1. Graham and Hendlin defeated Shuford and Morgan in an all Carolina match, 6-2, 6-2. Grant and Hines paired to defeat Dr. Epstein, of Montreal, and O. S. Ridgeway, of Boston, 6-1, 6-1. This was the first tournament match that Grant and Hines have ever played together, although they have been practicing together for some time.

Legislators Tour Illinois Campus

Champaign, Ill.—The high cost of higher education as represented in the University of Illinois budget requesting a biennial appropriation of $11,780,000 was investigated personally recently by more than one hundred members of the state legislature.

Coming here by special train, the legislators were thrilled by the sight of 10,000 students crossing a campus at one time, were served buttermilk at the University farm and learned that Illinois, with 14,896 students registered, now is the third largest university in the country.

President Harry Woodburn Chase told the legislators that the budget request was $250,000 under that of two years ago "in view of the present economic conditions and the financial situation for the state."

One of the places visited was a group of engineering laboratories where, Chase said, scientific discoveries had been developed which increased the nation's wealth by $100,000,000.

Dodgers Have Best Chance To Capture National League Flag Asserts Sports Writer

Addition of O'Doul and Thompson Gives Brooklyn Aggregation Edge Over Rivals; Picks Chicago, St. Louis, and Pittsburgh to Finish Out First Division Clubs.

1. Brooklyn	5. New York
2. Chicago	6. Boston
3. St. Louis	7. Philadelphia
4. Pittsburgh	8. Cincinnati

Editor's note: This is the second and final article of a series written by members of the sports staff of the Daily Tar Heel on the major league pennant race. The first was written by Jack Bessen, sports editor, while the second was written by Bob Betts.

The general forecast for the National League this season is the closest, hardest race in years. There are at least five teams with splendid chance to cop the banner. The three remaining teams will by no means be the doormats for the other teams to ride through the season. What a race that ought to be!

1. Brooklyn

The question that bothered many fans and sports writers last year was, Will the Robins fly as high in September as they did in May? Well, the Robins flew high in September but the Cardinals flew even higher and won the pennant in the senior circuit. This same question is up before both houses of the Congress of Fans this spring. Since September Wilbert Robinson, rotund manager of the Brooklyn club, has added two high flying Robins to his flock in "Lefty" O'Doul and Fresco Thompson, who were obtained from Philadelphia for a song. Another newcomer to the flock is the patriarch of baseball, John Picus Quinn, who, like Tennyson's "Brook", goes on forever.

Brooklyn has one of the best all round infields in baseball. Bissionette at first, Thompson at second, Captain Wright at short, and Wally Gilbert at third composes the best infield in either league. Every one of these boys can bat .330 or better, and they can field even better. Micky Finn and Slade are the reserves on the infield, and both of these boys are above the average ball players.

There is about to be formed a new and most dangerous murders row in the new Robins outfield. Last season "Babe" Herman compiled a batting average of .393. Frederick, crack centerfielder, hit for .334. Over in Philly O'Doul hit hard and often for a sweet average of .383. According to Math 2, these boys have an average of .370. Hendricks, Boone, and Bressler, and Rosenfelt are the reserves. Undoubtedly this is out of the greatest outfields in baseball.

The catching staff is headed by the fiery Cuban, Lopez. His assistants will be Picinich, a veteran, and Lombardi, Pacific Coast League star. They are certainly not weak in this department. The veteran Dazzy Vance, one of baseball's present day immortals, heads a large and impressive mound corps. Walter Clark, Dolf, Luque, Jack Quinn, Phelps, Thurston, Heimach, and Shaute are Robby's hurlers. Certainly, on paper, this looks like the ace of the National League slab staffs.

2. Chicago

Rober Hornsby's high powered Bruins have batting punch plus good pitching. This combination alone would insure them of a place near the top of the pile next fall. In Grimm, Honrsby, Jurges and Bell the Cubs have a smooth wirking inner defense. This young Jurges, by the way, is a great little ball player. Any rookie that can beat Woody English out of a job must be good. English is too good a player to be kept on the bench and he will likely get the call later in the season. Hornsby and Bell have found their batting eyes early and should have a big season.

In the outfield the Cubs have a hefty hitting trio. Hack Wilson, Kiki Cuyler, and Riggs Stephenson form one of the best balanced outer gardens in the league. Behind the plate the Cubs are well fortified with Hartnett and Zack Taylor, both of whom are veterans. Hartnett is also a terrific slugger.

Chicago has been strengthened on the mound by acquiring Jakey May and Bob Smith. The other veteran pitchers are Root, Malone, Blake, and Bush. Some of these veterans, however, may not come through. The success of the Windy City club will depend on how the hurlers perform.

3. St. Louis

The National League champions will hardly repeat last last year's victory. With Bottomly on first, Frisch on second, Gelbert or short, and Adams on third, the Cards have their old infield of last year, and this infield is a good one; but it will hardly match the infield of Brooklyn or Chicago. Jim Collins will be Bottomly's understudy at first base. This boy is a slugging rookie up from Rochester. Delker, Hunt, and Anderson are the other promising infielders.

Chick Hafey, Taylor Douthit, Ernest Orsatti, George Watkins, Blades, and "Pepper" Martin give St. Louis a strong outfield. Hafey and Douthit are flashy ball hawks and wield dangerous war clubs.

The Cardinals appear to be well fixed as far as the batterymen go. Jimmie Wilson, Gus Mancuso, and Miguel Gonzales are about the best trio of maskmen to be found anywhere. In the box Street has Grimes, Haines, Hallahan, Rhein, Johnson, Lindsey, and Garbowski left over from last year's staff. In addition to this formidable array of veterans he has added Dizzy Dean, Paul Derringer, and Tony Kaufman. Derringer is one of the most promising youngsters to come to the Cards this Spring. In this department they are certainly well fortified.

4. Pittsburgh

The Pirates will make many opposing pichers walk the plank this summer. Manager Ens, with the exception of his pitching staff, is all set for a rough cruise this season and believes he will put in port around the head of the fleet. The Buccaneer's inner works looked exceptionally good in spring practice. Gus Suhr, George Grantham, Tommy Thevenow, and "Pie" Traynor are all clicking in unison. Thevenow, obtained in a trade with the Phils for Bartell, has speeded up the play of the infield.

In the outfield there is still to be found his old veterans with

DUKE HOLDS TAR HEEL GOLF TEAM UNEXPECTED TIE

Individual Play Gives Duke Two Point Lead But Carolina Evens Score in Foursomes.

The Carolina golf team's perfect record was marred yesterday afternoon when they eked out a 9-9 tie with the Duke Blue Devils. The match was a complete upset. All the odds were given the Tar Heels by the dopesters who once again were wrong.

The Dukemen held a two point advantage in individual play but Carolina came back to even the score with a two point advantage in the foursomes.

Brown, with a perfect score, showed up best for the Heels in individual play. Mason was a close second with two points in individual play. Goodes, No. 1, and Adams, No. 2, failed to score in the individual matches.

In the foursomes, Goodes and Adams tied the Blue Devils, while Mason and Brown allowed their opponents only one-half a point out of the possible three.

In the foursomes, Goodes, with a 152, and Mason, with a 151, were best for Carolina, while for Duke, Caldwell turned in a 147, and Randle was close behind with 155.

Chapel Hill High Loses

Chapel Hill High school was defeated by Pittsboro High yesterday afternoon, 10-7. Miscues were responsible for Chapel Hill's loss. Wright did the mound duty for the local high school and was hit hard.

Chapel Hill will play Mebane High next Friday afternoon in their final game before entering the Class B championship race. Chapel Hill will journey to Pittsboro Monday for their first game of the Class B league.

INTERSCHOLASTIC ATHLETIC MEETS HELD THIS WEEK

The annual track and tennis championships for North Carolina high schools will be held this week end in connection with High School Week activities at the University, E. R. Rankin, Secretary of the State High School Athletic Association announced today.

Harvey Harris, a Raleigh star, will defend his singles title, but last year's doubles winners will not defend in the sixteenth annual tournament, which will be played on the University's varsity courts Thursday and Friday, under the supervision of Mr. Rankin, assisted by Coach John Kenfield and members of the Carolina tennis team.

Appropriate trophy cups will be awarded in both championships. Permanent cups will be awarded the school winning the singles and the school winning the doubles in the tennis tourney. In the track championship, the school winning the relay gets a cup as a permanent possession, the school winning the meet gets the possession of the state championship cup for one year, and permanent possession for winning three years. Gold, silver, and bronze medals will also be awarded the men finishing first, second and third in each event.

The fourteen events on the track program will be the 100 and 220 yard dashes; the quarter, half and mile runs; the 120 yard high and the 220 yard low hurdles; the high and broad jumps; the pole vault; the shot, discus and javelin throws, and the one-mile relay.

Mrs. Simons Is Suing Coca Cola Company

Mrs. Herbert H. Simons, of Durham, instituted suit against the Durham Bottling company Tuesday for $50,000 as compensation for a seven inch gash on her head caused by the explosion of a bottle of Coca Cola purchased at Harry's Grill, January 19, when she was visiting her son at the University.

In her suit, she claims that the explosion was caused by the Coca Cola being subjected to unusually high pressure when bottled. Mr. Simons is also suing the bottling company for $5,000 as part compensation for his feelings in being deprived of his wife's companionship and on witnessing her agonies.

Harry Stern, upon being asked about the accident yesterday, said that, although the drink was bought from him, it did not explode in his lunch room, and that he was not to blame for the accident.

Electric Device Tests Quality Of Liquor

A method, important in these post-Volsteadian days, to determine good liquor from bad will be shown spectators at the tenth annual electrical show which will be presented in the Electrical Engineering building at the University of Minnesota, April 17 and 18.

The student electricians have arranged an apparatus which, by means of light waves, will set up sound vibrations in an amplifier when liquids of any sort are placed in the light beams. According to those in charge of the exhibit, carefully conducted experiments with colored liquids of alcoholic content have proved that the apparatus will unfailingly show the quality of the beverage.

A skull that talks, a coin machine that will identify silver money, and a cannon which explodes by means of magnetism are also planned for attractions at the exhibition.

INTRAMURAL RESULTS

A. T. O.'s Win First

Getting off to a two-run lead in the first inning the A. T. O.'s defeated the S. A. E.'s 2-1 yesterday afternoon in the intramural baseball league.

Holbrook, S. A. E. pitcher, allowed only three hits, striking out eight men.

Score by innings:					R	H
A. T. O.'s	2	0	0	0—2	3
S. A. E.'s	0	0	1	0—1	3

Batteries: McLaughlin and Brooker; Holbrook and Conner.

Sigma Zeta Wins 7-5

In a listless and loosely played game, the Sigma Zeta's defeated the Phi Delt's, 7-5, to get their first win of the season. Both teams erred frequently.

Brooks and Edwards were the big guns of the Sigma Zeta's, hitting home runs in succession in the fourth inning.

Park, hurling for the winners, pitched good ball, striking out seven men and keeping the Phi Delt hits well scattered.

Score by innings:					R	H
Sigma Zeta	1	1	4	1—7	9
Phi Delt's	2	0	3	0—5	7

Batteries: Park and Feit; Tucker and Griffin.

Kappa Sigma Blanks Phi Alpha

The Kappa Sigma's blanked the Phi Alpha's, 9-0, yesterday afternoon. Satterfield, Kappa Sig twirler, allowed but one hit, Bessen singling in the third, and striking out eight men. White's homer, with two on base, was the high spot of the game.

Kappa Sigma	5	1	3	x—8	7

Batteries: Cohen and Abramson; Satterfield and White.

Lambda Chi Alpha's Win

The Lambda Chi Alpha's won their first game of the season yesterday afternoon, defeating the Phi Kap's, 5-3.

Caray, pitching for the winners, limited the Phi Kap's to two singles, while striking out twelve. The tight fielding of both teams featured the game.

Score by innings:						R	H
Phi Kap's	1	0	2	0	0—3	2
L. C. A.	1	1	2	0	1—5	5

Batteries: Reid and Markham; Carey and Reavis.

CAIN SOCIETY ELECTS ANDREWS PRESIDENT

History Of Music In Spain Told by McCorkle

opera; Manuel de Falla, considered the foremost figure in the modern Spanish school; Felipe Pedrell, one of the world's greatest musicologists; and Lopez Alonso, composer of many dramatic works, and whose Las Corsarias has been performed in Spain and South America over one hundred thousand times. Mr. McCorkle told of the decided lack of interest shown regarding Spanish music until comparatively recent years.

"There has been an awakening of the beauty of the Spanish song, however, and at present, Spain is beginning to occupy its rightful place in the world of music. Probably the best known on Spanish subject matter is Carmen. Rimsky Korsakoff's Spanish Caprice, too, occupies one of the foremost places in Spanish musical literature. Other than Spanish composers themselves, French writers have achieved better effects with Spanish atmosphere than any other foreign nation." Mr. McCorkle also dealt with the "zarzuela" which has the distinction of being second to bull fighting as the most poular Spanish diversion. These are one-act music pieces, freely interpreted by spoken dialogue, which in turn gives way to national dance. The orchestra's interpretations of many of these songs succeeded in a beautiful way to make clearer some of the details of the speech.

ed the trick in the semi-final round of last year's National Singles Championship, and then went on to win the title by defeating Frank X. Shields in the finals.

Tilden has been beaten but he was never beaten by a man who possessed as good a game as was Tilden's was at the height of his glorious career. Father Time, the only one who could have, beat Tilden.

There is no player in American tennis today who promises to become a worthy successor to the one and only Tilden.

Certainly Johnny Doeg, the champion doesn't, although Doeg is a good player. National tennis championships aren't won by dubs. But Doeg hasn't the real all-court game that Tilden possesses. His services are terrific, his volleying and smashing are first class, but his ground strokes aren't good, for he chops badly.

Shields, although beaten by Doeg for the championship last year, looks like the best bet for the championship. He is a player who has everything. He has a fast service, and exceptional smashing and volleying ability. Shields will bear watching.

Last year Vincent Richards said that he considered Shields the most promising youngster in tennis today—if he would consider tennis more seriously.

Now apparently from his showing this year Shields is taking tennis seriously and should win the National Singles Championship. Watch him in the tournament at Pinehurst this week.

Dodgers Doped To Take National Flag

a few newcomers. The Waner brothers and Comorsky give them about the fastest outfield in the league. Jim Mosolf is a likely looking youngster who will be retained as utility man.

Pittsburgh looks weak in the catching department. Hemsley and Phillips will bear the brunt of the receiving. Willoughly was secured from Philadelphia and should be a winner from the start. Ray Kremer, Brame, Spencer, French, and Meine are the holdovers from last season. Kremer appears set for another big season. The Pirates have secured one of the best looking rookie pitchers in the minors in "Spades" Wood. Experts agree that the boy is a find.

5. New York

The McGraw clan is of an uncertain quality this spring. The Giants appear to have a fine infield and a slugging outfield, but they are short on good boxmen. However, it is safe to predict that Manager John J. McGraw will get everything that can be gotten out of the available material. New York has the best first baseman in baseball in Bill Terry. Terry, a consistent .350 mauler, is a splendid fielder and baserunner. With the possible exception of the Bishop-Boley combination, the Giants have the best fielding keystone pair in either league. Hugh Critz and Captain Travis Jackson are flashes in the field, sure on pop flys, and function fast on double plays. Johnny Vergez, the sensational recruit from San Fransisco, appears to have won the hot corner assignment. This enabled McGraw to switch Freddie Lindstrom to the outfield and give his team more batting punch.

New York has Lindstrom, Fred Leach, and Mell Ott for the outter positions. Lindstrom seems to have benefitted by the change, as he is hitting hard and often. Ethan Allen and "Chuck" Fullis are reserve fly chasers.

Bob O'Farrell and Frank Hogan give the Giants a good pair of receivers. The pitching staff is wobbly and shaky. Hubbel, Mitchell, Walker, Fitzsimmons, and Donohue are the veterans left over from last year. Some of these fellows are old and may crack completely. The Giants have a brilliant mound prospect in Jim Berly, the recruit from Rochester. Morrell is another new hurler who may solve part of the Little Napoleon's problems.

6. Boston

The theme song of the Boson Braves might well be "Happy Days Are Here Again." After years of wandering around in the forest of defeat, the Braves are preparing to take the war path once more and fight their way up into the pennant scramble. Manager McKechnie has a veteran infield composed of Earl Sheely at first, Maguire at second, "Rabbit" Maranville on short, and Wilson, another Rochester product, at third. "Buster" Chatham is ready to step into Wilson's shoes should the youngster falter.

The Braves have a clubbing bunch of young warriors in the outfield. "Red" Worthington from Rochester, and Schulmerich, from the Coast League, are two heavy swatters who should make good. Walter Berger, the rookie who swatted out over 25 home runs last year in the National League (his first year) completes the outfield. Randy Moore, Earl Clark, and Lance Richburgh are the reserve fly hawks.

Al Spohrer, Al Bool, and Jimmie Cronin are the catchers. This is the weakest division on the team, as these players are only fair receivers. "Wee Willie" Sherdel, "Socks" Seibold, "Old Tom" Zachary, Ed Brandt, Frank Frankhouse, Ben Cantwell, Bruce Cunningham, and Bill McAfee are the men who will do the hurling for the Boston entry. It is a well balanced staff.

7. Philadelphia

The Quakers will have better pitching this year than they had a year ago, but the outlook for the team is dark. The Phils will have Benney Friberg at second, in place of Frisco Thompson, and Bartell replacing Thevenow. Bartell was secured in a trade with Pittsburgh. Don Hurst will be back on first, and Whitney will perform at third.

In the outer pasture manager Shotton will have Klein, "Buzz" Arlett, Hal Lee, and Koster. These fellows compare with the outfield of Chicago and Brooklyn as far as hitting goes.

Behind the bat Philadelphia is well equipped with hard hitting catchers. Virgil Davis, Harry McCurdy, and Tony Renso will do the receiving for this club. Phil Collins, Ace Elliott, Lil Stoner, Dudley, Benge, and Shields should form a nice young hurling staff for the Quaker city.

8. Cincinnati

The outlook is dark for the Reds this year. With a rookie infield, a tottering veteran outfield, fair catching, and uncertain pitchers, it looks like the Reds will wallow around in the cellar all season. Mickey Heath will be on first base, Tony Cuccinella at second base, Leo Durocher at short and Joe Stripp at third. On the whole, this is a shabby infield.

In the outfield there is Harry Heilman, Eddie Roush, Nick Cullop, and Cliff Heatcote. These veterans can still hit, but they are very slow in the field.

Sukeforth and Styles will do the catching. Benton and Lucus are the cream of the slabmen. They will be aided by the veteran Eppa Rixey, Carroll, Frey, Johnson, Larry Kolp, and Eckert. Rixey and Kolp are about through, and Eckert and Johnson are still youngsters.

There are still several cases of German measles in the infirmary. The entire infirmary list yesterday included: Jack Dungan, Elizabeth Hamrick, M. S. Benton, E. V. Deans, P. W. Garland, W. B. Figgat, L. A. Dalton, Albert Suskin, C. A. Renn, Charlie Gault, and E. B. Grady.

TWELVE CLASSES WILL REUNITE AT COMMENCEMENT

Bowers and Poteat Are Secured as Speakers for Address and Sermon.

President Graham recently announced that Claude Bowers, prominent author and editor of the former New York World, and Rev. E. McNeill Poteat, Jr., pastor of the Pullen Memorial Baptist Church of Raleigh will be the speakers at the University's 136th commencement. Mr. Bowers will address the graduating class at the final exercises, June 9, while Dr. Poteat will deliver the Baccalaureate sermon Sunday, June 7.

Twelve classes are scheduled to have reunions this year during commencement week. The feature of the alumni program will be alumni day, June 8, when the members of the preceding classes will gather for their formal dinners. The class of 1881 will celebrate its golden anniversary, while the class of 1906 will convene for its twenty-fifth reunion. The class of 1930 will observe its first alumni gathering at this time.

Commencement exercises this year will extend from June 6 until June 9. Saturday has been set aside as senior class day. The program for Sunday includes the Baccalaureate sermon in the morning and a concert by the University Glee Club in the afternoon.

Alumni day will be on Monday, and although the alumni reunion committee has not met, the program is expected to follow the order of the past several years. This program includes a meeting in Gerrard hall in the morning, with Judge Francis D. Winston presiding over the reuniting classes, the alumni dinner at noon, and the President's reception and alumni ball in the evening. Individual class dinners usually take place at about six o'clock Monday evening.

It was hoped that three new buildings would be available for use at Commencement, but it has just been learned that it will be impossible to have Graham Memorial completed at that

McCorkle Program Scheduled Sunday

A violin and piano program will be offered by Mr. and Mrs. T. Smith McCorkle, Sunday afternoon at 4:45 o'clock. This is their second joint program this year, the other one having been given in January.

This program is dedicated solely to the classic forms, though it represents one composer of the Romatic school and another who is a connecting link between the Classists and Romanticists.

The first number on the program is by Pugnani, as transcribed by Kreisler. Pugnani is of the early Classic school, composing in the latter part of the eighteenth century. The second number is a Beethoven sonata, which was written at a time in this composer's career when he was beginning to express some of the lack of restraint that was so prevalent in his latter years. The third number is the Mendelssohn E minor violin concerto, one of the most popular numbers in violin literature, even though it is in the heaviest type in so far as form is concerned.

Speight Talks Over Radio This Afternoon

Mayne Albright, president of the student union, announces that the radio talks broadcasted each week by students will be resumed this quarter.

Beginning today a talk on a special phase of student activities will be given each week. This afternoon Bill Speight, president of the debate council, will speak over station WPTF from 3:45 to 4:00 o'clock on "High School Week at the University," which is now in order.

DEBATE CONTEST CLOSES TONIGHT IN MEMORIAL HALL

The representatives of fifty-three North Carolina high schools came to Chapel Hill yesterday to take part in the North Carolina high school debating union contest. These delegates were invited to the University under the auspices of the extension division, and the Dialectic and Philanthropic societies.

The first general meeting of the debaters and teachers took place yesterday afternoon in Memorial hall at 2:00 o'clock with Dean Nathan W. Walker of the school of education presiding. Lots were drawn for sections and pairs in the first preliminaries, which lead up to the final contest in Memorial hall at eight o'clock to-night. The question under discussion, which has recently been given much attention in the newspapers, is "Resolved: That the United States should grant immediate independence to the Phillipines."

Both students and faculty members compose the committee sponsoring the debates. The chairman is Professor N. W. Walker, and Mr. E. R. Rankin is serving as secretary. The committee members from the faculty are: L. R. Wilson, G. M. McKie, C. E. McIntosh, and D. D. Carroll; while the student members are: E. R. Hamer, Jack Dungan, R. M. Albright, J. C. Williams, Hamilton H. Hobgood, H. B. Parker, and W. W. McKee.

BOGGS LECTURES ON FOLKLORE OF SOUTHERN NEGRO

At the April meeting of the American association of University women, Dr. R. S. Boggs, of the Spanish department, gave the final lecture of the year's program on "Southern Folklore." His discussion was a summary of the close resemblance between local folk stories and those of various other nations. He compared southern tales to a chameleon, showing how each loses its local characteristics when transported to new environs, yet at the same time maintains its individuality.

Mrs. E. R. Mosher, state president of the association, who has just returned from the national meeting in Boston, gave a brief account of the various happenings of the conference.

Plans were made for a May morning breakfast, which will take place, Saturday morning, May 2, in the Episcopal church yard; committees were appointed to supervise the entertainment and to make further plans. The proceeds from the breakfast will go to the association's loan fund, which is intended to help some woman graduate pursue her studies each year.

WILL PLAY FOR JUNIOR-SENIOR BALL

Hamp's orchestra, which is completing an engagement at the Cocoanut Grove in Los Angeles, will arrive in Chapel Hill, April 24, to furnish the music for the Junior Prom and the Senior Ball, outstanding events on the spring social calendar. The decorating committee already has begun work towards converting the Tin Can into an immense ballroom. Several hundred young ladies from this and surrounding states have accepted invitations to attend these class dances.

HISTORIC PIECE OF ALUMINUM ON DISPLAY IN VENABLE HALL

Metal Used by Dr. Mallet of Virginia Over Sixty Years Ago in Determining Atomic Weight Still in Existence

The University chemistry department has a historic piece of aluminum in its offices, which was used by Dr. J. William Mallet, professor of chemistry before the Civil War at the University of Virginia, in determining the atomis weight of aluminum. Another portion of the original piece is in the chemistry museum of the University of Virginia, while a third piece, larger than either of the two pieces now in existence, was lost by fire.

Dr. Mallet, who was a famous scientist and a fellow of the Royal Academy of Arts and Sciences, came to America sometime about the 1850's and was professor at several American universities before he finally came to Virginia in 1868, to take the chair of professor of analytical, industrial, and argicultural chemistry. While there he made the acquaintance of Dr. Francis P. Venable, who founded the chemistry department here. At that time, Dr. Mallet was working with a piece of aluminum, to determine the atomic weight of the element. He arrived at a value which is very nearly what has since been determined. Aluminum then was a rare metal, owing to poor methods of separation from its compounds. After his experiments, Dr. Mallet gave half of the bar which he used to Dr. Venable, who in turn later gave it to the University.

Some years after the war, the chemistry building at the University of Virginia burned down, and their part of the bar of aluminum was destroyed in the fire. The University then offered Virginia half of the bar given to Dr. Venable. Now, the piece of aluminum at the chemistry offices is about five inches long, two inches wide, and one-fourth of an inch thick. It weighs less than two ounces, has no intrinsic value, but is invaluable for its historical associations.

THREE HUNDRED TO GET DEGREES AT N. C. C. W.

Approximately 300 members of the class of 1931 will receive degrees in June at the close of commencement exerices at North Carolina college, when Frank S. Hickman, of Duke university, and E. Deets Pickett, of Washington, D. C., will address graduates and others interested in the activities of the state institution for women.

Mr. Hickman is to speak to collegians at the baccalaureate exercises Sunday, June 7; Mr. Pickett will make the final address Monday, June 8.

Other activities of commencement, which will start June 6, include exercises by the senior class and a program set aside in observance of Alumnae day, Saturday, June 6.

PLAYMAKERS ARRANGE PLANS FOR MAY CAPERS

The Carolina Playmakers have started making preparations for their annual Caper, the variety show that is to be given late in May for members of the theatrical group.

Tom Loy has been appointed chairman of the caper committee, which consists of Ann Braddy, Mary Dirnberger, Margaret Vale, Marion Tatum, Closs Peace, Kent Creuser, Pendleton T. Harrison, Ralph Westerman, Joseph Philip Fox, and Theodore Herman.

People who have ideas or contributions for the Caper are asked to leave them with Mr. Westerman at his office in the theatre or to turn them over to any member of the committee.

Y. M. C. A. Deputation Trip Is Postponed

The trip which the Y. M. C. A. deputation team had planned to make to Greenville, N. C. this weekend was postponed until the first of May, so as to make it coincide with the annual meeting of Y. M. and Y. W. C. A. officers training conference and the spring quarter meeting of state cabinets of student Y. M. C. A's.

The local delegates to the conference and cabinet meetings will present a series of programs among the schools of Greenville. Ed Hamer and "Pardner" James will be in charge of the deputation team and delegates.

PLESSOW BEGINS LECTURE SERIES

Visiting Professor Is Presenting Discussions on German Life And Universities.

Dr. Gustav Plessow, visiting professor from Germany, is presenting a series of lectures at the University this quarter under the auspices of the English department. Dr. Plessow is making a tour of the United States for the purpose of collecting material to use in his course in Americana to be given at the University of Tubingen next year.

His lectures to graduate students in Middle English began yesterday and will continue on April 23, and 30, and May 7, 14, and 21. A lecture to graduate students "German University Life" will be given, Tuesday evening, April 21, at 8:00 o'clock in Smith building. The Philological Club will have Dr. Plessow as a guest speaker, Tuesday evening, May 5, at 7:30 in the graduate club. The subject for discussion will be "A New Theory Concerning Middle English Dialects." A talk of interest to all members of the University and the townspeople, "Aspects of German Life of Today," is scheduled for Tuesday evening, May 12, at 8:30 in Gerrard hall.

MARY DIRNBERGER WILL EXHIBIT SKETCHES TODAY

Mary Dirnberger, former member of the Carolina Playmakers, will present an exhibit of sketches in water color of stage designs and costumes this afternoon from 4:30 to 6:30 in the Playmakers scene shop, the former glee club rehearsing room in Person hall.

The following will be exhibited: designs and costume plates for the set of The Queen Has Her Face Lifted, which was written by Al Kohn in 1929; sets of Ibsen's The Enemy of People, O Promise Me, and Tread on the Green Grass; a curtain setting of A Midsummer Night's Dream done both in modern and Shakerperian manner; costume designs for Machine God, Helena, and Hermia, characters in A Midsummer Night's Dream; Tread On the Green Grass, Corn Likker, Highways, and Isolde. Costumes of a fifteenth century French lady and a Florentine lady will complete the exhibit.

Infirmary List

Only nine persons were confined to the infirmary yesterday. They were: M. S. Benton, Elizabeth Hamrick, R. H. Morgan, W. W. Walker, E. B. Gray, Charlie Gault, C. A. Renn, W. B. Figgat, and B. S. Solomon.

GRAHAM, COLLINS AND WADE WILL ATTEND SMOKER

Faculty, And Class Officers Are Invited to Freshman Class Meeting.

The second freshman smoker of the year, which is to take place this evening at nine o'clock in Swain hall, will be the last official gathering of the class for this year.

The first smoker was enthusiastically greeted by the first year men with five hundred in attendance. As the class officials had not been elected at that time, "Pat" Patterson presided. At this event, however, the president, Ike Minor, will be in charge of the program.

The main speaker of the occasion is Wallace Wade, head coach of athletics at Duke University. In his speech he will complete the theme started by Dr. Archibald Henderson, speaker for the first smoker. Dr. Henderson spoke on "Relations in the Past Between Carolina and Duke."

In addition to Mr. Wade, President Graham and Coach Collins are to speak briefly.

The executive committee has invited the entire faculty to be present at this gathering, and it is hoped that many will find it possible to attend. The intention of the committee is to promote a better spirit of cooperation and understanding between the faculty and the students.

Many of the prominent student leaders of the campus, together with the officers of the other classes, have been invited.

As an additional item on the program of entertainment, the committee has secured Jimmy Stephenson and his State College Collegians to furnish the music for the evening.

Slack Rope Artist Entertains Students

Students from the Battle-Vance-Pettigrew dormitories saw a strange sight yesterday afternoon when an acrobatically inclined student gave an exhibition of slack rope walking back of the Methodist church.

The student had procured about a hundred feet of stout wire from somewhere and strung it up between two large trees at a height of about eight feet from the ground. After he had gotten the wire strung up, he climbed up and began to do some fancy walking, going from one end of the wire to the other, both backwards and forwards and even pivoting on the wire. Every now and then he would stop his walking for a minute right at the middle of the wire and pivot around as some other student stopped to ask him what was going on. The performance was perfect, both from the acrobatic and the esthetic point of view. In fact, it seemed to be the most graceful way yet invented of committing suicide.

Greensboro To Hear Glade And Baggiore

Coe Glade, American contralto, of the Chicago Civic opera, and Attilio Baggiore, tenor, of the Royal opera in Italy, will close the season of the Greensboro Civic Music association with a joint concert Monday, May 11. The singers will be heard inidivdually and will sing several numbers together.

"The Finer Things In Life"

Culture is more than an overworked work. Once mentioned in polite circles it is the occasion for a raised eyebrow and possibly a smile. The word in its new connotation is either something to cause amusement or disdain.

The intelligentsia crusade for culture; the ignorant strive for it; and the diletantes stimulate it. It is not now or never has been a condition which would be arrived at by artificial striving. No believer in Intuitionalism, we do have the opinion that all this bustle here and there over Europe on the part of nouveau riche in a sort of Holy Grail search for "culture," is quite in vain, and that genuine culture in the older and almost forgotten sense of the word, unlike an artificial coating of veneer, is ingrown over a long period of time and more an attitude than a glib misuse of place names, famous phrases, and the so-called intellectual patter.

Long have we heard much of "the finer things of life." Of each have we asked, What are the finer things of life? The inevitable and hesitating reply has been "Oh, you know—the finer things of life." So far as we have been able to divine, these said finer things of life consist of whatever the person considered to be elegant, or smart, or a little beyond his intellectual grasp.

That withered old Croesus, John D. Rockefeller, Jr., has been inveigeled out of his inate conservatism into a gigantic philanthropy which staggers the imagination by its futility. This man is financing a $100,000,000 radio city in New York which has as its purpose the perpetuation of a new renaissance, this time in the heretofore barbarious Americas, which will make this nation of ours "a nation of homes where Kant and Hegel are read in the original at the home of every fireside; where Beethoven will be almost as popular as Martin Downey; and where Cezanne's works will adorn walls that heretofore have supported nothing more artistic than picture-calendars."

The guiding genius of this new crusade for "the finer things in life" who will bring these good things down from the thirty-eighth floor of his Olympus is to be Dr. Levering Tyson who, according to Mr. Scripp's United Press is "still somewhat vague concerning the exact method by which the $100,000,000 will be expended, but his plan of attack has already reached the stage where he felt safe in numerating points 1, 2, and 3, to-wit:

"1. Develop a series of cultural programs, including lectures, recitals, and orations.

"2. Broadcast them.

"3. Find out how the customers like them and make any revisions necessary."

All of which is very practical and euridite.

Further, this scintillating mind of Dr. Tyson's believes that culture covers a multitude of subjects, even extending to domestic science, so it is likely that many a housewife will pause in the midst of scrambling eggs while Mr. Rockfeller's radio tells her how to put the ultimate artistic touch on them.

For the past decade those unappreciative and unsympathetic materialists among us have "deplored" machine-made movies, machine-made art, and machine-made life, and now to cap the climax comes this wonderful Rockefeller philanthropy of machine made culture.

Glorious College Days

For the first time in several years high school week is with us again without the customary rain. Heretofore it has become a custom to associate high school week with annual spring deluges. For some reason however, we are this year privileged to enjoy fine, sunny weather.

During this week-end approximately 500 high school students will be visiting here on the campus who are just at the stage in life where college students are their ideals. What University men do always make a vivid impression on the minds of young students. The ideas which they form of college life now will be the ones which will remain until they enter college themselves and find out what "it's all about." For this reason it is advisable to keep their vision of college as they will get it in the sun light of realism, and not a false impression which they might secure through colored glasses. The painting of this picture of college will be in the hands of the members of this student body. Theirs will be the task to see that this portrait is such that it will be true.

The idea of college life that the big majority of the visitors have is the one which they have gotten from misleading moving pictures, and they will be shocked to find that it is actually not as they had expected.

College life is not one grand week-end of brilliant banquets, exciting athletic events, bridge-playing fraternity houses, or moon-lit parties, but a very real and sometimes quite boring routine which it is necessary to undergo in order to obtain a degree. With five-hundred visiting, wide-eyed high-school students here today, the occasion has arrived to debunk the "glorious-collegian idea" in preparation for the anticipated disillusionment of countless freshmen of the class of 1935.—C. G. R.

CHIPS OFF THE OLD BLOCK

MOORE BRYSON

"Buck" Lyon and "Chili" Taylor took a little trip to Wilson to see a certain young lady of their acquaintance. During the evening "Chili" borrowed "Buck's" car to run down town for a few minutes. Two o'clock came and "Chili" hadn't returned. The girl friend said that she just couldn't stay up any longer and wouldn't "Buck" just sit there and wait for the car to return. "Buck" woke up to see the morning sun striking the tops of the trees, and immediately hastened to a phone and called the Phi Gam house to get some one to come and get him. "Chili" answered the phone; he had forgotten whose car he had.

Not content with some perfectly good dances on the Hill
students drove to Virginia
last week-end to attend the dances there. The reports are that they all had a wonderful time.

During the concert which Vincent Lopez gave at Virginia he played Love for Sale. One of our local representatives nearly broke up the meeting by raising up in the middle of the number and saying, "How much am I offered?" And I thought he was such a sweet boy too.

One of our outstanding boxers (do you blame me for withholding his name?) is said to have wandered down to the Pi Phi house at about one-thirty at night, dressed in pajamas and a dressing robe, looking for a date. Let it be said to the girls' credit that he went back to the S. A. E. house dateless, or maybe I'm wrong.

A recent concert on the campus inspired a local poet to write the following lines:—

"He gestures like a little boy pretending
He's a conductor."
"God, but that was lousy!"
"They ought to warn the audience at each ending."
"Why do all music lovers look so frowsy?"
"You feel you'd like to brush them all together
And make them play in unison."
"That 'cello
Is all that makes it bearable, I gather."
"What's next? Look at the program. Oh, but hello!
A symphony of Hayden!"
"Lord, let's go
They can't play that!"
"I guess we'd better stay
It's only thirty minutes more, you know
We can't get up and leave in such a way."
"Well, anyway I've several strong suspicions
That all these here are unemployed musicians."

Since the production of Playthings a new dramatic cult has developed on the campus. One may observe the master and his followers almost nightly at the Waffle Shop. You may easily distinguish them by their un-cut hair which is brushed toward the front. Perhaps we shall soon be privileged to see a play in which a piece of furniture plays the role of a table in the first act and changes to a chair or a radio in the second act.

It begins to seem very likely that any resignation in connection with the mayor's office in New York will have to be on the public's part.—Detroit News.

With Contemporaries

Why Not Change Some Of The Exams?

Exams such as true-false, completion and analogy tests lay too great emphasis on pure memory, faculty representatives of nine universities agreed recently at a conference on college examinations held at the University of Chicago. Ohio State was represented at the meeting.

The importance of facts was not minimized, but the group of educators believe that more important is the ability to use and apply these facts in an analytical, inferential manner.

A conviction grew out of the conference that all types of examinations "must be improved to make them better measures of what the faculty thinks should be the outcome of its teaching." Adaptation of the examination to whatever purpose the instructor has desired his material to serve should be the goal of the examiner.

The essay type of examination was scored because of its lack of objectivity, as demonstrated by instances of several markers giving various grades to the same examinations. Examinations that will be at once objectively and accurately graded, but which will enable the student to utilize and evaluate the facts given him, were agreed upon as being the most desirable.

Now that it is decided that examinations of the nature described are the best, why not put the idea into effect? A few instructors do conduct tests in that manner, but even in many courses of the so-called practical subjects the "memory exam" still prevails.

A student with an excellent memory may get an "A" out of a course without really knowing as much about it as a "C" student. The "C" student may be able to apply what he has learned while the "A" man simply learns the textbook or lecture notes by heart and gives little thought to their application.

Most instructors realize this fact and many say at the beginning of a course that they would rather give an "A" to the student who can put into practice what he is supposed to have learned than give one to the textbook memorizer. But he often misses up on it when he hands in the final grades at the end of the quarter. It seems that an examination of the correct nature would supply the information needed in these cases. Certainly a true-false test does no good.

The essay type of examination causes more trouble to some instructors than it is worth and leads many students to think that the instructor is practicing favoritism. Cases are known where three students have presented the same facts in an exam and each received a different grade. And they sat several seats apart during the test so that copying was impossible.

Let's hope that the faculty takes a few tips from the results of the Chicago conference and perhaps in the future exams may be a fairer estimate of the student's ability and knowledge in a subject.—The Ohio State Lantern.

Three Southern Colleges May Be Consolidated

The various boards of the Disciples of Christ met in Indiannapolis, Indiana this week and appointed a committee to investigate and report as to the feasibility of combining Lynchburg College, Lynchburg, Va., Milligan College, Milligan, Tenn., and Atlantic Christian College, Wilson, N. C.

The program of completing the church's pension fund of $8,000,000 was also considered. $7,500,000 of this amount has already been raised.

Honorary Degree Is Given To Galsworthy

John Galsworthy, eminent British essayist and novelist, received the honorary degree of Doctor of Letters at a meeting of the faculty and trustees of Princeton University last Monday. The degree was bestowed by President Hibben in the name of the university. Soon after the conferring of the degree Galsworthy was heard in a lecture on "Literature and Life."

As one of the prominent modern literati Galsworthy is well-known on both sides of the Atlantic in literary circles and is most famous, perhaps, as the creator of the Forsyte family. At a recent address in New York he made an eloquent and stirring appeal for world peace, urging that an international holiday in commemoration of the Kellog-Briand pact outlawing war should be established.

Heels Mar Virginia Trip With Loss To Gobblers

Techmen Overcome Four Run Lead to Win 10-9; Ferebee and Barnard Hit Homers.

V. P. I.'s baseball team overcame a four fun lead in the final innings to take a free hitting contest from the Tar Heels Wednesday by the score of 10-9. It was the Carolina nine's first loss on the northern trip.

Extra base wallops, including four home runs, three triples and one double, screamed to the far corners of Miles Stadium as a total of five pitchers sought to stem the tide of hits by both teams.

The Gobblers jumped into a five run lead in the first three innings.

After Ferebee hit safely, V. P. I. went to pieces afield in the fourth, letting in three runs. Carolina added three more in the fifth on hits by Powell, Peacock. Ferebee and House, another in the sixth on safeties by Wyrick and Potter, and ended their scoring with two in the seventh on House's three bagger and Ferebee's home run clout.

Hardwick's circuit blow and another one by Barnard featured the Gobblers' three run rally in the seventh. Hardwick scored Bibb with a triple in the eighth and brought in the winning run with a beautiful squeeze play.

Playing his first varsity game, Ray Barnard played errorless ball afield and crashed out two homers in three times at bat.

The game, which inaugurated the Gobblers' season, was the final on the Tar Heels' northern trip. The two teams play again tomorrow at Emerson Stadium.

Columbia University Expands Daily Paper

The Barnard Bulletin, semi-weekly paper of Barnard college, was taken in by the Columbia Spectator, official daily of Columbia university, in the latter's program of expansion and amalgamation. The intention of the Spectator is to form a consolidated university paper, which brings with it the benefits of increased circulation and lessening of operating expense.

The matter of financial difficulties was the prime factor motivating this move, which was consumated last Tuesday. The staff of the Bulletin was transferred to that of the Spectator and continued work on the other paper. The news departments covered by both publications will henceforth be included under one head.

Sidelights

By Phil Alston

Carolina offered another star to the ranks of professional boxing up in Charlotte last Monday night when John Warren made his first appearance as a professional, meeting Russ Rowsey. John took the count of ten in the third round, which is not a very auspicious way to start out, of course, but made a big hit with the ringworms and that means a lot. He put up a great fight all the way, and the crowd gave him a big hand after it was all over just as they had when he entered the ring.

In fighting Rowsey, who is a veteran battler with a good record, John was evidently overmatched, but at that, he gave a sufficiently good account of himself to keep the crowd behind him even in defeat. He went out to fight and while he was in there he did fight, which, after all is what the fans pay their money for. They want to see action, and action is just what Warren gave them, so even though he was defeated, he is not so bad off, after all. There are lots of people in Charlotte right now that would be glad to pay their nickels and dimes to see John Warren perform again, because they have good proof that he won't stall on them or do any of the other little tricks that have helped put the leather slinging game in bad condition lately.

John may or may not go on with the boxing game, but if he decides to take it up for a while he has a good start to go on. His loss to Rowsey should not do him any great amount of harm, because Rowsey is admittedly a tough nut for anyone to tackle, and John's showing against him was good.

In the feature event of the same card, Add Warren, John's older brother and former heavyweight champion of the Carolinas, made the first step in his comeback campaign, and, according to The Charlotte Observer, it was some start. Add scored a technical knockout over Big Jack Parker when the West Virginian was unable to come out for the eighth round. It was the best fight of the night, and Add gave his opponent a terrible beating, cutting him to pieces with just about every blow in the catalogue. Add was showing that old "killer" instinct again, and the result was inevitable.

Apparently Add is out to get back his title and means business. Those who saw him working out in the Tin Can last week will remember that Add was anything but playful with his sparring partners, and the result of his battle with Parker indicates that his chances to retake the crown from Dewey Kimery (when, where, and if he can meet him) are pretty good. If Add continues to perform as he did last Monday night, and he has given every indication that he will, there are going to be very few men around this part of the country who can stop him.

Not so very long ago the wise boys were beginning to say that Add Warren was through, but now that he has showed them that he is still the "same old Add," they're wondering how they can best hedge on their former statement. If nothing more, Add's latest victory has certainly shoved him into the limelight of things pugalistic in North Carolina, and what he does from now on will be of even more interest to the other battlers in the section.

TRACKMEN WILL MEET GOBBLERS HERE SATURDAY

V. P. I. Expected to Give Tar Heels Plenty of Trouble; Techmen Strong in Distances.

Carolina's track squad, winner in three dual meets this season, will encounter its stiffest opposition to date on Emerson field Saturday when the Gobblers from V. P. I. will be met in the third straight Southern Conference meet this season. Carolina has won three easy victories in early season meets, but V. P. I. has a strong, well balanced team and should give the Tar Heels plenty of trouble. Carolina defeated the Virginia Techmen last spring by a score of 88-38.

V. P. I. placed second to V. M. I. in the Southern Conference cross country run last fall and will present a strong array in the distance runs. Johnny Miles, one of the South's leading runners, will team with Carter and White against Baucom, Hubbard, and Jones in the mile and two mile races.

Carolina's greatest strength will be in the pole vault where Brodie Arnold and Ray Ruble hold forth. Between them they have tallied twenty-four points in this event alone during the three meets held so far this year.

The Tar Heels will offer four good men in the 100 and 220 yard dashes in Marland, Slusser, Smith, and Drane. These boys took all three places in the 100 and first and second in the 220 against Georgia Tech last Saturday, while Marland, running in the quarter mile, placed first. Lionel Weil, holder of the conference indoor record for this event, placed third.

George Bagby and Red Hamlet will be in the high jump again with Stafford, Newland, and Owens. Hamlet tied for first place in this event against Tech with Bagby taking third place. Bagby will also be in the broad jump which he has won in both his attempts so far.

Carolina's other entrants will probably be Watkins, Garrett, and Case in the half-mile; Hodges and Brown in the shot; Brown and Dameron in the discus; Brown, Chandler, and Strauss in the javelin; Baucom and Hubbard in the two mile; and Jones in the one mile.

The Tar Babies, who have also turned in three easy victories this spring, will not have a meet this Saturday. So far, they have won over Raleigh and Charlotte high schools in a triangle meet, and have defeated the Duke freshman in dual meets, all by onesided scores.

Sutter Defeats Grant In Semi-Final Round Of North-South Tourney

INTRAMURAL RESULTS

McNeill Hurls Perfect Game

McNeill, Kappa Alpha pitcher, entered baseball's hall of fame yesterday afternoon by setting the Phi Sigma Kappa's down without a hit or run while his team-mates found the offerings of Teachey, Phi Sig hurler, for ten safeties and seven runs. McNeill struck out seven and walked none, while his rival, Teachey, breezed the third strike by nine K. A.'s but received ragged support from his mates.

Bethune was the big gun of the K. A.'s with a single and two doubles in three trips to the plate.

K. A.'s	2	2	3	x—7	10

Batteries: Teachey and Bennett; McNeill and Wiggs.

S. P. E.'s Defeat Pi Kap's

In a game marked by loose fielding, the S. P. E.'s defeated the Pi Kappa Phi's 9-6. The S. P. E.'s jumped into the lead with a three run barrage in the second but the Pi Kap's came back in their half to score a like number of runs. In the last half of the fourth the Pi Kap's went into the lead, scoring three runs. Coming to bat in the final frame the S. P. E.'s scored six runs to win the game, Lasley singling with the tieing and winning runs on base.

Score by innings:						R	H
S. P. E.'s	0	3	0	0	6—9	10
Pi Kap's	0	3	0	3	0—6	7

Batteries: Seawell and Merrill; Felts and McCloud.

T. E. P.'s Get Forfeit

The T. E. P.'s received a forfeit in the intramural baseball league yesterday afternoon when the Delta Tau Delta's failed to put in an appearance.

Graham Blanks Aycock

The Graham baseball nine defeated Aycock, 4-0, in a very interesting and well played game. LeGore, Graham pitcher, turned in a creditable game to win his second game of the season. Hornaday, Graham, made the only extra base hit of the game, getting a two bagger to deep center in the third.

Aycock	0	0	0	0—0	3
Graham	1	1	2	x—4	4

Batteries: Jenrette and Efland; LeGore and Straus.

SEEDED PLAYERS ADVANCE IN HIGH SCHOOL TOURNEY

Through an uneventful opening day's play, marked by a lone upset, favorite on favorite marched through to the semi-finals of the sixteenth state high school tennis tourney, to be concluded here at the University today.

Of the four stars seeded in singles only Bryan Abels, of High Point, fell by the wayside. L. Jones of Charlotte downed Abels in the second round, 6-2, 6-4, and took his place with the other three seeded stars.

Harvey Harris, defending champ, from Raleigh, had little trouble, losing but five games in two matches, but Lovill, of Mount Airy, and Hanson, of Wilmington, were more extended to fight their way into the elect semi-finals.

Harris and Jones meet this morning in one match, Lovill and Hanson in another, with the winners to meet this afternoon for the title.

The doubles produced more good tennis than the singles but they were likewise uneventful. Of three teams seeded, Harris

Atlanta Star Off Form in Match With Tulane Ace; Co-eds Reach Semi-Finals.

Despite a valiant showing, the Carolina netmen met with defeat in both the double and single matches at Pinehurst yesterday afternoon. Bryan Grant, who had defeated his fellow team-mate, Wilmer Hines, in the single matches the day before, was defeated in the finals by Sutter, of New Orleans, La., and in the semi-final double matches, Hines and Grant lost to the last year's Davis cup players, Shields and Van Ryn.

Sutter's victory over Grant came as a surprise to the majority of spectators, although Grant was not expected to score as complete a walk-away as he had in the past. Out of the three times that these two southern stars have met on the courts, this was the first time that Sutter had emerged a winner. Last year at the same Davis Cup tryouts at Pinehurst, he was defeated by Grant, though not as easily as before.

This time, the table seemed to be reversed. Sutter won the first three sets, 6-1, 6-0, 6-1. Grant did not seem to be up to his usual form in this match, but made up for it by his excellent showing in the double matches.

Although Shields and Van Ryn won the first three sets, the games were hot and furious, giving the gallery a demonstration of the best tennis that is being played in the South. The score of the sets were 6-4, 6-4, 6-2. The smashing spectacular playing of the powerful Shields was the sensation of the afternoon. Both Hines and Grant put up a gallant showing, but they were no match for their more experienced opponents.

Two coeds from the University were scheduled to appear in the semi-finals of the ladies' tournament, having won their match in the quarter-finals Wednesday. However, as the paper went to press, no news had been received concerning the outcome. The two feminine competitors are Miss Margaret Delaney, of Charlotte, N. C., and Miss Ida Currie, of Clarkton.

FORMER BOXING STARS FEATURE WEEKLY REVIEW

Add Warren and Archie Allen Appear in Review Conducted By Carolina Mentor.

Through the B-C Sports Review, broadcasted from station WPTF of Raleigh, Wednesday, Coach Chuck Collins, as master of ceremonies, presented two of Carolina's best known pugilists, Add Warren and Archie Allen, both of whom answered questions and expressed their opinions on collegiate boxing. Allen is at present assistant boxing coach at Carolina, while Warren has been fighting professionally since 1928.

Coach Collins opened the program by giving a brief summary of the development of the fight game from the time of the ancient Greeks and Romans to the present. Coach Collins said that boxing first got its start when, for the amusement of the Greek rulers, two warriors, armed with the cestus, were seated face to face and battled to death. The cestus was the name given to the method of bandaging the hands with leather thongs which extended up the forearm for reinforcement. In the majority of cases the padding consisted of strips of metal.

Gradually, the Roman and Grecian rulers became tired of seeing their best warriors killed off for the amusement of bloodthirsty spectators, so the sport was abandoned for many years.

James Figg, one of England's all-round athletes, brought the sport back late in the seventeenth century with a new set of rules, that permitted wrestling and other forms of fighting now prohibited. The sport developed, a ring was set up, and wrestling prohibited under the London Prize Ring rules. The practice of dividing the fighting into rounds was inaugurated, and the game continued with

STATE CHAMPS

An Endurance Record for Barber Shops

The personnel endurance record for the state wool-gathering establishments lies unchallenged in the hands of the operators of the Carolina Barber Shop. This shop has employed one staff without change for six years, longer than any other in the state which employs as many as six men. The service at the Carolina has been so consistent and its policies have been so thoroughly gratifying to its customers that no change has been either necessary or advisable.

The advantage of this consistency lies in the fact that the customer has his own barber and can get just exactly the sort of haircut or shave he wishes every time he enters the shop. In this way achieving that clean, smart appearance ceases to be a hit or miss affair—one can always get his own personal style of service.

The Carolina Barber Shop attributes its enviable record to the unfailing patronage of its customers—they who have realized the advantage of a personal barber.—Adv.

CAROLINA FROSH DEFEAT MT. AIRY

Tar Babies Get 6-2 Win Over High Lads; Meet Duke Frosh In Durham Monday.

The Carolina frosh defeated the Mt. Airy High School nine, 6-2 yesterday afternoon on Emerson field. The game was the snappiest yet played by the Tar Babies this season.

Mt. Airy scored both of their runs before the yearlings began their tallying, getting one in the second inning on errors and another in the third when Satterfield singled and scored on Kirkman's triple to deep right.

The freshmen came back in the fourth to score a run on Weathers' double followed by "Fanny" Fisher's single. In the next frame Harry Phipps singled, Matheson received a pass, and "Fanny" again singled to count two more. John Phipps and Whitley walked in the sixth, coming home on McIver's single. John Phipps singled in the eighth and scored on Matheson's slashing triple to deep center. "Mabel" tried to stretch it into a homer, but the ball beat him to the plate.

Perry pitched a nice game for the visitors but his support was ragged in the pinches. He whiffed eleven men in the first seven stanzas.

Weathers pulled a snappy double play unassisted in the eighth, catching Kirkman's hot liner and getting the man on first. Fisher, for the frosh, and McKinney and Schumaker, for Mt. Airy, each collected a pair of singles. Kirkman's and Matheson's triple, and Weathers' double were the only extra base wallops.

The Tar Babies play their first engagement away from home on Monday, when they invade Durham to cross bats with the Blue Imps.

N. C. C. W. May Day Plans Are Completed

Plans have been practically completed for the annual May-day celebration at North Carolina college, to take place in front of Administration building at 5 o'clock in the afternoon the first of the month.

Principals named for the celebration include Miss Esther Shreve, of Moorestown, N. J., May-queen; and Misses Eliza Moseley Hatcher, of Dunn, and Mary Jane Wharton, of this city, maids of honor.

Attendants of the queen are Misses Margaret Hanna, of Asheville; Helen Hight, of Henderson; Jane Johnson, of Buffalo, N. Y.; Lucile Knight, of Chase City, Va.; Elizabeth McLaughlin, of Cleveland; Elizabeth Monty, of Charlotte; Mary Delia Rankin, of Mount Holly; Janie Secrest, of Monroe; Edith Vail, of Spring Hill, Ala.; and Virginia Motte, of Charlotte.

Activities of the day will include ceremonies attendant upon the crowning of the queen and dances by special groups of collegians. The event has hitherto been centered at Peabody park.

GALSWORTHY TELLS HOW HE WROTE "FORSYTE SAGA"

"I have composed 'Forsyte Saga' as I would a collection of short stories," said John Galsworthy in an interview granted the Princetonian last night.

"I first started the story in the fall of 1903 with the tale of 'The Man of Property'. When I had finished this I had little intention of continuing my history of the Forsyte family. Therefore I had published this story alone in 1906. Six years later I had a feeling that I wanted to write about the death of Jolyan and I continued my series with 'The Indian Summer of Forsyte,' which I completed a little before the end of the war. In 1921 I started to monkey around without any set plan in mind and I finally started 'The Silver Spoon.' During the following year I gathered my various threads of what were intended firstly as separate short stories, to compile them, with the exception of 'The Silver Spoon,' into one volume, Forsyte Saga.'

"While on the subject of the novel I might say that I believe that the classics, namely such authors as Eliot and the Bronte Sisters, are losing their popularity with the young people. This is due to the fact that the youth of today rather enjoys the familiarity of his age in the novels of his own time, an era that he can understand without going into long research about it. Jane Austin, Dickens, and Thackeray, however, seem to have a larger appeal to him. Of course all these authors still have their place on the scholar's book-shelves, because he has had time to study the situations incidental to the stories."

Upon being asked what he thought of the merit of the talking pictures, Mr. Galsworthy replied: "I appear to have a conservative type of mind where new forms of art are concerned. I hope that the talkies will never kill the silent film and hardly think this will happen, because certain quite definite effects which you can create on the silent film seem only to be blurred when dialogue is introduced. Last year I had my play Escape' filmed because I thought that it was a type of play to which the talking ought to be valuable.

"In form this play lends itself very well to a film version. The dialogue is all in a number of 'close' scenes between two or three people and is almost completely cut off from the action. All that will happen is that the play, as written for the stage, will be supplemented by a number of silent 'shots,' notably of the more active part of the escape, and of Dartmoor scenery —which should add to the interest."

The reporter then asked Mr. Galsworthy what he thought would be the effect of the talking and singing film on the regular theatre. The famous author replied: "I may make a shot at this and say it may readily reduce the audiences for the coarser types of plays, and consolidate the more fastidious playgoer. But this is only a shot in the dark."

Mr. Galsworthy concluded by giving his views on talkie adoptions of plays and novels. He believes that there is a strong need for authors to insist the dialogue be rewritten entirely by themselves.—Princetonian.

MUSICAL CAREER MEANS HARD WORK SAYS LOMBARDO

"If an orchestra leader expects to succeed at the present time he must introduce into his musical selections an original idea of some kind." This was the opinion of Guy Lombardo, popular radio and recording artist, in an interview granted a Pennsylvanian reporter recently. He then continued, "The public constantly demands something new, something out of the ordinary, to satisfy its ever-changing whims, and it is only the musician who has an original method of presentation to offer who ultimately reaches the top of his profession.

"It is not merely by such a method, however, that a man can become popular as an orchestra leader, for as in all other lines of earning a livelihood, it is necessary to work hard. No one is made famous overnight, although it may appear in some cases as though this might be true. In back of what might seem to be, at a casual glance, sudden popularity is always found years of hard work and preparation. If an orchestra should spring into prominence overnight without a thorough background of practical experience it would not be able to live up to the public's ever-increasing expectations, and it would soon topple from its pedestal.

"My advice to orchestras striving for popularity is for them to introduce an original style, work hard, and please every class of people, for an orchestra cannot survive for long by meeting with the approval of only one type of persons. Perhaps the most difficult phase of the struggle, however, comes after the orchestra gains a reputation for itself. At that time other orchestras, wishing to appear in the spotlight also, become imitators and try to copy the style of more famous bands. It is only by hard work and constant rehearsing that the prominent orchestra can keep one jump ahead of its competitors and retain public favor."—Pennsylvanian.

Finally late in the nineteenth century the Marquis of Queensberry decided that the sport was still too brutal, and offered the idea of fighting with gloves instead of bare fists, as the custom up to this time. The method of fighting slowly developed until the present boxing code was formulated, and science replaced mere brute strength.

Coach Collins then introduced Archie Allen who stated that he considered boxing one of the best possible forms of sport for high school and college men to participate in. Allen described the method of instruction for beginners used at Carolina. This, he said, consisted mainly of instructions on the use of the left hand, and exercises. Allen is a former Southern Conference lightweight champion and has been fighting for the past four years. He said that, as yet, he had no intentions of going into the professional game.

Add Warren was next introduced, and, after giving a short summary of his boxing career, stated that boxing develops speed, courage, skill, determination, and stamina, and that the type of action found in intercollegiate boxing is highly helpful in the development of character and sportsmanship.

Warren is a former Southern Conference heavyweight champion and, until recently, held the heavyweight championship of the Carolinas. He started his professional boxing career in January, 1928, and has seventy-five knockouts to his credit, including both amateur and professional bouts.

Freshman Orientation Started at California

How to dress in college, how to spend money, how to use time, and how to attain poise that is becoming to college people—these and additional 'hows' are included in a non-compulsory course offered to freshmen at the University of California at Los Angeles.

Several hundred students who are beginning university careers have enrolled in the course, which offers no academic credit but is believed to pay other dividends of greater importance and significance.

Five purposes of the special study are listed in an official circular distributed to freshmen. They are: to bring the new students together in small informal groups to show the student that the university is interested in him as an individual; to help the student find his place in academic and social activities; to aid him in the choice of a career; and to acquaint him with some aspects of the major world problems.

The movement began more than a year ago when members of the faculty and of the Pryanean Society, junior and senior honorary sorority, began to experiment with a type of work known as freshman discussions, the purpose of which was to introduce the student to campus life. Since the results of this work proved the system to be of great value to the institution, an enlarged program has been adopted for this study term. In this course the value of making social adjustments incidental to receiving a college education is particularly stressed and explained.—Daily Orange.

Goldsboro High School Wins Aycock Cup In Debate Contest

Same Team Gains Honors for Second Consecutive Year.

OTHER PRIZES AWARDED

Connor, House, Wilson, Carroll, And Coffman Act as Judges.

At the nineteenth annual final debate of the North Carolina debating union for the Aycock memorial cup, which took place in Memorial hall last night, the Goldsboro high school's negative team was awarded the judges' decision over the Winston-Salem high school's affirmative.

The Goldsboro team was composed of Miss Marion Weil and Ezra Griffin. Opposing them were Miss Helen Davis and L. C. Bruce of Winston-Salem. Individual medals were awarded to each of the four debaters by the University. This is the second consecutive year that the Goldsboro team has upheld the negative side of the query and won. Ezra Griffin, member of the winning team last night, was also a member of the victorious team last year.

A large number of high school and University students were in attendance at the final forensic contest, which brought to a close another successful high school week. Dean N. W. Walker, of the school of education, presided over last night's affair and E. B. Rankin, director of the University extension division, served as secretary. The judges, all prominent members of the University faculty, were R. D. W. Connor, head of the history department; R. B. House, Executive Secretary; L. R. Wilson, librarian; D. D. Carroll, dean of commerce school; and G. R. Coffman, head of the English department.

At the conclusion of the speeches, Horace H. Williams, University professor, made the presentation of the Aycock cup to the winning team, Goldsboro high school. The academic contest cups were presented to the winning schools by Dean Walker, while R. B. House awarded the cups and medals to the winners in the interscholastic track meet and interscholastic tennis tournament.

Preceding the debate, the University symphony orchestra, under the conductorship of T. Smith McCorkle, gave a recital of four numbers, taken from the works of four of the greatest composers of music.

Following the debate, all visitors for high school week, those who entertained debaters in their homes, and the officers and judges of the debates attended a reception in Bynum gymnasium.

FRESHMAN FRIENDSHIP COUNCIL ACTS AS HOST TO VISITING STUDENTS

Under the leadership of Ed Lanier, advisor, and Graham McLeod, president, the Freshman Friendship council took charge of the entertainment and were official hosts to the 500 high school boys and girls assembled on the campus this week-end.

A survey was made of all the dormitories and fraternity houses and in this way lodging was obtained for the boys and principals of the schools. Members of the council acted as guides directing the delegates to and from their quarters.

They are: Resolved: That prohibition be modified so as to legalize the sale of light wines and beers, and Resolved: That the Phi Assembly go on record as favoring the proposed consolidation of the counties of North Carolina.

Resolved: That the Phi Assembly go on record as opposing the plan adopted by Cornell College (Iowa), admitting unconditionally to the freshman class a small group of unusually capable students who have completed only three years of secondary school work is a new bill set for discussion.

NORMAN THOMAS TO TALK BEFORE RELATIONS GROUP

1928 Socialist Candidate for Presidency Listed as Human Relations Speaker.

Norman Thomas, Socialist candidate for the national presidency in 1924, will be one of the principal speakers at the second quadrennial Institute of Human Relations, which will be presented under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A., May 3 through 9. Telegrams have been sent to Senator Robert LaFollette, Jr., of Wisconsin, and to Governor Gifford Pinchot, of Pennsylvania, but as yet their acceptances have not been received.

Besides Mr. Thomas, the list of notables includes: General Charles Summerall, recently retired chief of staff, United States army; Shailer Mathews, dean of the divinity school at the University of Chicago; James Myers, secretary industrial research, Federal Council of Churches; Fletcher Brockman, executive secretary, commission on friendly relations between America and the Far East; Harold J. Laski, of the London school of economics, and the 1930-31 Weil lecturer, who will speak the last three nights of the program; Dr. Mordecai Johnson, president of Howard University, said by many to be the most outstanding negro orator in America; and Benjamin E. Greer of Greenville, South Carolina, head of the Judson Mills and one of the most prominent textile manufacturers in the South.

The program will begin Sunday morning, May 3, when the four church pulpits of Chapel Hill will be turned over to Institute speakers, and that night the congregations of the churches will meet jointly in Memorial hall to hear Shailer Mathews.

An exhibit of books, maps, and literature relevant to the Institute topics will be shown in Memorial hall during the week of the sessions.

Photographs of Dance Guests

Jack Dungan, of the committee arranging for the junior-senior dances next week-end, requests that all students who are having young ladies to Chapel Hill for the affair bring photographs of their girls to the office of the Daily Tar Heel not later than noon today. A number of the pictures will be selected by a committee to be run in state papers Sunday.

Dungan also requests that each fraternity make out a list of young ladies the members are having here and turn it in at the Daily Tar Heel office. All members of the two classes are urged to hand in names in a like manner.

Mary Dirnberger Exhibits Unique Costumes And Sets For Theatre

By Vass Shepherd.

The Playmakers' scene shop in Person hall served as the exhibition room Friday afternoon, for a number of original stage-designs and costumes done in water color by Mary Dirnberger, now taking post-graduate work at the University.

Some of the most popular of the sketches were fantastic costumes for modernistic bacchanals. Of these, one of the most striking and perhaps the most native to the campus was entitled Corn Likker. This costume designated a fiery young female arrayed in scanty corn-shucks, with a hammer in one hand—representing the hangover, no doubt. On her head is an Indian head dress, while the fruit-jar motif was effectively carried out around the waist.

In Miss Dirnberger's interpretation of Shakespeare's Midsummer Night's Dream, the designer showed her wit by carrying the anachronisms in the manuscript in to the costumes. Thus one views the characters arrayed in a mixture between classical Greek and seventeenth century English clothes. The effect is both unique and striking.

A novel stage design for Shakespearean plays was a model seventeenth century theatre which was to be placed on the stage. This would permit the enactment of scenes in front of the model stage, while the scenery and drops were being arranged behind.

The arrangements for lighting effects, and the ingenuity which the artist uses in producing her distances were one of the outstanding parts of the exhibition. One setting in the Midsummer Night's Dream permits three scenes to be played with the same stage arrangement, but the change in lighting produces three entirely different effects.

Miss Dirnberger graduated from the liberal arts school of the University with the class of '29. Until recently she has been in New York City, where her talent has won considerable recognition.

IOWA STUDENT UNION IS CENTER FOR VARIED CAMPUS ACTIVITIES

First Unit of Million Dollar Building Has Furnished a Place for Social Diversions of Thousands of University Students.

(The following is the tenth of a series of articles in the PRINCETONIAN describing the purpose, financing and success of university centers throughout the country. It is reprinted through the courtesy of the Daily Nebraskan.)

The Iowa Memorial Union has been called the "Hearthstone of Old Gold," a name denoting the fact that it is the center of campus life and the cradle of college spirit at the University of Iowa. Since the completion of the first unit, started in 1924, the number who have used the building as their common meeting place has grown tremendously.

Vesper services, concerts and recitals have developed a cultural atmosphere, and in 1928 drew a total of more than 15,000 persons to the building. Dad's day convocations and similar occasions brought together about 17,800 persons during that year, while special luncheons, dinners and banquets attracted more than 29,000. Other functions for which the Union is used, such as balls and University organizations have brought tens of thousands more to its portals each year.

Lounge Has Varied Uses

The building itself is a structure of white stone, overlooking the Iowa river. It is surrounded by well-kept lawns. An enclosed porch, running around the structure, serves as a lounge when parties are in prograss in the main hall. A soda grill, cafeteria and cafe service and a reading room are provided for the students' comfort.

Although only two units of the building have been completed, unnumbered facilities are offered. The lounge, which is 90 by 136 feet, is used for the making of contacts among the students, for the entertainment of students' parents and for concerts, dramatic readings, vespers, banquets, large parties and receptions. It also serves as headquarters for returning alumni.

Has Special Dining Service

Two private dining rooms are available for group meetings at meal time. A grill is operated, in addition to a cafeteria, where meals are served every day in the week. Special grill service is offered for parties. Table d'hote dinners are served on Sundays.

Plans for the Iowa Memorial Union were first discussed in 1919, and a campaign to raise $1,000,000 for a building was started that fall among alumni, students and other friends of the school. The drive was continued both on and off the campus among alumni and friends. By 1924, nearly $600,000 had been pledged, and the board of trustees let the contract for unit one in September. The unit was dedicated in 1926. Each year, students added to the sum pledged until April, 1926, the contract for the second unit was let. It was finished in March, 1927. The next unit will be designed for a university theatre.

Staff Meetings

All persons connected with the reportorial and editorial staffs of the Daily Tar Heel will attend meetings of their respective staffs tomorrow. Attendance will be required, and those who fail to be present at the meetings will be subject to suspension from the staff unless a legitimate excuse is presented before the time of the meeting.

The editorial board will meet at 5:00 tomorrow afternoon in 104 Alumni building and the reportorial staff will meet at 7:00 p. m. in the same room.

JUNIORS, SENIORS HEAR PLANS FOR WEEK-END PROM

Dance Committee Makes Formal Report for Affairs to Take Place April 24 and 25.

Meeting for the first time for such an occasion, the members of the junior and senior classes of the University assembled for a joint smoker Thursday night. The main events on the program were a talk by Coach Chuck Collins, football mentor, and a report of the dance committee made by Jack Dungan.

In spite of the fact that the smoker was called on rather short notice, over five hundred members of the classes participated in the meeting. Pat Patterson, president of the senior class, presided.

Coach Collins was introduced by Theron Brown, president of the junior class. His talk was on the subject of "Concentrated Athletic Activity."

In the business session of the smoker, Jack Dungan made the report for the committee on the junior-senior dances. According to the report, nearly four hundred prominent political and social leaders throughout the state have been invited to the affair. In spite of this, the balls are primarily student dances.

Johny Hamp and his Kentucky Serenaders have been engaged to play for the dances which will take place in the Tin Can, April 24 and 25. The junior prom will begin at 9:00 Friday night and will continue to 1:00 while the senior ball will take place between the hours of 9:00 to 12:00 the following night.

Dungan reported that the decorations will be furnished by Sam Breen, Mayne Albright, and R. C. Greene. Girls' names and their partners will be registered at the office of the Daily Tar Heel and will be printed in the paper. Clyde Dunn will select pictures of the young ladies who are expected to attend the affair. These pictures will be run in the state papers this week-end.

As a further report, it was announced that the concessions for the sale of cigarettes and drinks, have been given the Association of University Women, who will use the profits to aid women students in college.

State Senate Favors $800,000 As University's Appropriation

Upper Branch of Legislature Votes for Increase Over House's Figure.

COMPROMISE IS EXPECTED

Tentative Grants to Other State Institutions Are Also Appreciably Increased.

The State Senate voted Thursday, by a count of twenty-seven to eighteen to increase the University's 1931-1932 appropriations to $800,000, or $76,000 more than the amount set by the House. This appropriation is only tentative, however, as it is expected that the House will not agree to the proposed increase. Yet a satisfactory compromise may be effected by the two bodies.

The vote for the increase in appropriations was preceded by a heated debate which Senator Pritchett opened, making a plea for a $76,000 increase over the amount decided upon by the House. He was immediately plied with numerous hostile questions from those who believed that the amount voted by the House was sufficient.

"Is not the State University trying to compete with Duke University?" asked Senator Gower.

"I am sure that nothing like that is in the minds of the state university officials," answered Senator Pritchett.

After Senator Pritchett concluded his address, Senator Umstead rose to second his request for the greater appropriation, saying that he believed many of

RADIO TALK MADE BY BILL SPEIGHT

Debate Council President Discusses High School Week over Raleigh Station

Speaking over radio station WPTF in Raleigh yesterday afternoon, W. W. Speight, president of the University debate council, made the first of this quarter's series of radio talks. His subject was "High School Week at the University."

Speight stated that the idea of high school week for debaters and athletic contests was first conceived by Dr. C. E. McIntosh, of the school of education, in 1913. Originally the annual events were sponsored by the Di and Phi societies, and are now sponsored by the societies and the extension division of the University. They are under the immediate direction of E. R. Rankin, head of the bureau of high school debating and athletics.

"This week marks the nineteenth and most successful year of high school contests," Speight continued. "Participants from all parts of the state are gathered here at the University to take part in debating, track, and tennis contests."

The speaker expressed the idea that the University looks forward with pleasure to high school week and welcomes at this time the hundreds of contestants of the many state high schools.

Speight concluded his remarks with the statement that not only in the encouragement of clearer thinking and harder playing in the annual contests but also through this opportunity of gathering at a centrally located spot do the schools of the whole state meet each other beneficially.

Ideals For Youthful Admiration

Next year, the famous experimental college of the University of Wisconsin is to be abandoned. Dr. Alexander Meiklejohn, former president of Amherst college, and director of the experimental college, was credited with saying, in connection with the suspension of the Wisconsin experiment, that "there is nothing fundamental in American life of to-day for young Americans to admire."

We hasten to defend America, as well as to point out some things to admire in American life. There is nothing, for example, that makes life easier than snug complacency and intolerence of ideas; it makes everyone either right or wrong, and the line between is so apparent and fixed, that the "right" people are recognized instantly, and the "wrongs" are condemned heartily from the start. Again, in American life there is an overwhelming devotion to the ordinary, the usual, the average, the "normal"—to be average and "normal" makes life pleasant, and there is nothing irksome in it, as there is when you have "queer ideas" or different viewpoints. Thus these fundamentals are to be admired, especially by us young Americans who are seeking the happy life. They certainly are American . . . thus we would accuse Dr. Meiklejohn of being in error.

And if one seeks for more fundamentally Americanisms that ought to be admired by those still young, we would suggest that there is nothing more delightful than the complete apathy towards novelty either in thought or action; there is nothing, in our minds, more admirable than the heartening imperviousness that prevails against anything which smacks of thought, or of intellectual curiosity. These happy basic traits of dullness and disinterest are to be sought after if we want Young America to grow up to be healthy, wealthy and wise. Being intelligent and cultivated, not to mention educated, will make you "queer." It will make Young Americans think the Dr. Meiklejohn does, which is decidedly un-American, and we hope that American youth won't go to admiring things he stands for, but rather stick to the good, old American ideals enumerated above.—F. M.

Shines And Shiners

The Junior-Senior dances have already caused a lot of controversy, in fact, it was found necessary to call a special combined smoker to settle the matter of admittance. The classes, after much discussion, decided in favor of bids rather than checking off names at the door.

All that is settled, however; what we must now guard against is unfavorable comment during and following the affair. There will be a large number of grown-ups attending the dances by special invitation, as well as students—we ought to behave ourselves anyway, but we should be even more careful of our actions because of the large number of dowagers who will be present. Dowagers will talk, you know, and it depends entirely on us whether their talk will be favorable or adverse. Since misbehavior seems to be in direct ratio to the amount of "corn" present, the solution of the problem is simple — no corn, no rowdyism. If this were a strictly "stag" affair we could all get plastered and have a good free-for-all, but since women will be present, and since we live in a society which demands consideration for the weaker sex, then let consideration be the order of the day. Every "shine" that is pulled on the floor will give Carolina another "shiner" in more than one sense. This is not W.C.T.U. broadcasting, but a forecast of public sentiment.—A. J. S.

Mr. Morgan Underwrites Kingdom

The recent abdication of the Spanish throne, while interesting as news to many, will probably have a vital effect on heretofore friendly Spanish-American relations. Only a short few weeks ago, Mr. J. P. Morgan, as the head of an international syndicate of bankers underwrote a rather munificent loan for the Spanish kingdom. Behind this loan were the strongest banks of this country and Europe. (Chase National, Bankers Trust and other associated Morgan banks.) Mr. Morgan and the foreign financiers had about sixty million dollars worth of over-confidence in Alfonso's power to quell those silly republican uprisings and keep his crown intact.

And now the questions troubling American business men, financiers and politicians are: First, what is the Republic going to do about its debts? Will it assume a Soviet attitude toward payment of the kingdom obligations? And, will America recognize the new Republic? If, American recognition is not forthcoming, will Spanish payments be forthcoming? The whole thing is quite a mess.

That, President Zamorra will probably find, is the main trouble with most revolutions. He has taken on himself not only his own Spanish, internal troubles, but he has the problem of foreign relations staring him in the face. If his republic is to be successful, first his relations with the foreign powers must be successful.—S. B.

Our Literary Voice

A prominent author-alumnus of Carolina recently lamented the pathetic condition into which the Carolina Magazine has fallen, indicating that "apparently the Carolina Magazine is reduced to begging at the back doors of profesors' houses for copy, when supposedly it is the literary voice of the students and devoted to publishing their creations." During this man's editorship of the Magazine some twenty-five years ago it was numbered among the twelve best college publications in the country—its position now would be calculated from the bottom up.

From a substantial, worthwhile, independent publication it is now reduced to a literary supplement, which in itself is not as bad as the material it contains. This former editor further pointed out that in the past the Magazine had no established fund to insure the payment of its expenses, but thrived without knowing where its next dollar was coming from. Its precarious financial status may have proved a stimulus to better writing.

The deterioration may be attributed to several causes: political appointment of editors, lack of student interest and contributions, lack of training or effort on the part of contributors, or the increasing competition offered by commercial publications. The quality of the Magazine would be improved if staff officers were determined by merit and not politics. That is, editors should be selected by the members of the staff, who would be better qualified to determine the best man for the position.

The problem of proficiency solved, it would remain to induce students to contribute a great deal more copy; so the editor would not be obliged to print just anything that comes in. A discriminating editor with a lot of copy to choose from can do much to make the Magazine more readable—or at all readable.—A. S.

With Contemporaries

Viewing With Alarm

The fears of Robert H. ("Dirty Cartoon") Lucas, executive director of the Republican National Committee, that something is wrong with the youth of the nation, and especially the college-trained youth, because it does not leap into the folds of the G. O. P. immediately upon attaining voting age will probably gain only a hollow laugh as a response in the universities of the country, among both undergraduates and faculty members. Placing the blame for the fact that the Republican Party does not get the proportion of the 2,000,000 new voters each year "that it deserves" upon the politically heretical teachings of universities and colleges, "literally saturated with radicalism," he advocates a system of political education at the feet of old-time county and state political leaders which will teach the new voter the folly of his and his professor's ways.

Mr. Lucas sounds the tocsin of despair when he admits that "it seems to be hopeless to expect a reform in the text-books which teach free trade, internationalism, public ownership of private industry, abolition of party government, etc." He would have kept more rigidly to character, has he submitted for, etc., "and other Russian, pernicious traditorious and un-American doctrines."

We can perceive how the old-time politics of a Robert H. Lucas, who worked against a "liberal" member of his own party in the 1930 senatorial elections, would stand in fear of the effects of impartial education upon the traditional tenets of the incumbent, and therefore, conservative, political party. But when he denounces internationalism as one of the radical and socialistic theories which professors are wont to deliver to their classes, we imagine that he is going a little farther backward than the leading exponents of his political creed would dare to venture.

The commonly applied term of derision for professors of "theorists" is wearing a little bit thin, for more and more is the public refusing to accept as a theory what will not work out in practice. "It is a good theory, but it won't work" no longer obtains in this day and age where the practical application counts for all.

Mr. Lucas' appeal from the heart will feebly spend itself in the open air, we predict, unless the Republican party makes advances and endeavors to meet young collegians on their own ground. A program of unteaching what they have learned at the universities will avail the Elephant nothing.—C. P. K.—Pennsylvanian.

The Ph.D. Degree

A recent editorial in the New York Herald-Tribune adds its voice to the growing hue and cry against the Ph.D. degree. "The graduate student in an American university," the editorial states, "is like the apprentice in a printing shop serving a prescribed term before he will be allowed to earn the full union scale. He may know as much as a full-fledged Ph.D., he may be a better teacher, but until he gets his degree he cannot have his full title or salary." That a Ph.D. degree may require merely knowledge of some minute particulars which has virtually nothing to do with a man's teaching ability is fairly obvious. Yet college authorities continue to favor those teachers who possess what Dr. (Ph.D.) Duggan calls "a professional trade-union label," many of them having a graduated scale of academic requirements for promotions.

There are of course certain advantages which attach to the Ph.D. degree. The mental discipline gained in its acquirement, and the consequent satisfaction of having sifted some problem in scholarship are invaluable assets for future research. But in these very advantages lies the principal drawback. Three years spent in concentrated study of abstruse and technical matters tend to throw the emphasis on the research side of an academic career, to the possible detriment of the teaching side. The result is, in only too many cases, that teaching comes to be considered as an avocation or, still worse, as a sort of necessary evil coming to interrupt the serious business of scholarship.

At Princeton it is gratifying to note that an effort is being made to lessen the emphasis of the Ph.D. degree which prevails in many institutions. Neither the possession of such a degree nor the publication of scholarly books and articles is a guarantee of, or a requisite to Faculty appointment or promotion. Teaching capacity is still considered of paramount importance, but even here academic degrees and distinctions are considered important criteria for judging that capacity. In spite of the difficulty of accurately determining actual ability at teaching, it is to be hoped that here at Princeton increasing consideration will be given to teaching in itself and less to that latest emblem of standardization, the Ph.D. degree.—Princetonian.

Following the report, the presidents of the two classes urged the members to co-operate in making this first joint social affair of the two classes a success. The classes voted to have the invitations distributed at the Y. M. C. A. building Monday. These bids cannot be used by sophomores and freshmen and the class officers plan to enforce this ruling rigidly.

State Senate Favors Appropriation Bill

the economical advances of the state were made through suggestions from the University. Senator Umstead concluded by saying: "No other institution under God's sun will ever hold the place in the hearts and affections of the people of this state like the University of North Carolina."

Senator Baggett followed Senator Umstead in championing the cause of the University, stating that as much as he has favored the taxpayer, he did not consider that pauperizing the University was a good way to save the state's money.

Senator Dunlap opposed the increase on the grounds that all the state institutions should be fed from the same spoon, and that the figure recommended by the House seemed to him to be most nearly the fairest one both to the University and to the entire state.

Senator Gravely also opposed the bill, stating that the state had already appropriated over a million dollars more than its expected revenue, and suggesting a compromise figure for the University's appropriation of $759,000.

Increases were also voted by the Senate for N. C. C. W. and N. C. State College, the body recommending that State College's appropriation be raised from $357,800 to $438,400, and that N. C. C. W. be allowed $438,980 instead of $357,600 proposed by the House. The Greensboro college came very near failing to get this increase as the vote was tied and Chairman Grier, who was presiding over the Ways and Means Committee had already ruled the increase lost. Senator McKee who was out at the time the vote was taken, reentered and moved for a reconsideration. His motion was successful and the amendment providing for the increase was carried.

Memorial Tree Is Planted By U. D. C.

At a district meeting of the United Daughters of the Confederacy yesterday morning, it was decided to plant an elm tree on the front lawn of Spencer Hall as a George Washington Memorial tree. At first it was planned to plant a Chinese Gink tree, but after consultation with Dr. W. C. Coker, the Daughters decided in favor of an elm.

This tree was presented to the University by Mrs. John Anderson of Raleigh, and was accepted by Mr. R. B. House. It is the first tree in Chapel Hill planted in a national plan for the beautifying of the Jefferson Davis highway, and was presented at the district meeting of the organization.

The tree was planted yesterday afternoon at 2:30. It was expected that President Graham would be present at the planting, but as he was out of town, Mr. House delivered the address of acceptance.

Carolina Meets V. P. I. In Baseball And Track

Baseball Team Out to Avenge 10-9 Defeat; Track Stars Defend Perfect Record.

Back home after a week's campaign through Maryland and Virginia, the Carolina nine meets V. P. I. on Emerson Field here this afternoon at 4 o'clock.

It will be "Bargain Day" for the fans, for Carolina-V. P. I. track meet at 2 o'clock will serve as the first half of this interesting Tar Heel-Gobbler doubleheader.

The track meet will offer V. P. I.'s strongest team in years against Carolina's Southern Champions, weakened as they are by loss of Farmer and Jensen, plus Bagby, University high jump record holder, who sprained an ankle yesterday.

Coach Bob Fetzer has as good as told the Tar Heels they will have to turn in their topmost performances to beat such stars as Rule, Rhinehart, Miles, Turner and Swart, and the tough competition excepted should make a fine meet.

The baseball game will show the Ashmore-coached Tar Heels out for revenge in the worst way, for it is remembered that V. P. I. was the only team that beat the Tar Heels on their fine Northern tour, just ended.

Longest and Edwards had hurled a pair of wins over Maryland on Friday. Hinton had turned back Virginia Saturday. Monday the Tar Heels had beaten their old jinx, Pitcher Williams, and downed Washington and Lee 8-7 to take the lead in the Tri-State loop.

V. M. I. had tied the Tar Heels Tuesday 5-5 for 11 innings, but a win from V. P. I. Wednesday would have made it a perfect trip anyway. With Little Smoky Ferebee banging out a homer with his big bat, and the whole team slugging away, Carolina jumped off to a four-run lead, but V. P. I. slugged its way through the last innings to a 10-9 victory.

The Tar Heels with their newly found hitting power in the infield, will be out to even up the series tomorrow, and there's expected to be quite a scrap. Big Paul Edwards, who hurled the 11-inning tie game with V. M. I. Tuesday, has had the most rest and is likely to pitch for Carolina, although Shields may get the call.

PHI ALPHA FRATERNITY PLANS SOCIAL EVENTS

The local chapter of Phi Alpha fraternity will give their third anniversary banquet and house party May 1, 2, and 3.

The affair will open with a dance at the house on Friday night, May 1. Saturday afternoon the chapter will be host to the southern regional conference of the fraternity, having as guests of honor the president and administrative secretary of the national organization. A bridge party will follow later in the afternoon.

Saturday evening at 7 o'clock a banquet will be given at the Carolina Inn. Following this a formal dance will be staged in the ballroom of the Inn.

Decorations will be in red and blue, the fraternity colors, with a background of pine trees and lanterns.

LAMAR STRINGFIELD TO APPEAR IN CONCERT

Lamar Stringfield will give a concert at the Playmakers theatre Saturday, April 25. He will be assisted at this performance by Adeline McCall, pianist; D. A. McPherson, and Hugo Giduz, violinists; Wilbur Royster, 'cellist; and by the Faculty Chamber Orchestra. Tickets may be obtained from the Student's Supply Store.

INTRAMURAL RESULTS

Best House Defeats Law School

The Best House walloped the Barristers 10-1 in a listless game of baseball played yesterday afternoon in the intramural baseball league.

Stuart and Smith led the Best House attack both collecting a home run and a triple out of three trips to the plate.

Score by innings:

			R	H
Best House	000	55—10	15
Law School	010	00— 1	5

Batteries: Scarboro and Smith; Merritt and Gray.

Old West Loses to Grimes

Watson, Grimes pitcher, pitched a two hit game against Old West, while his team mates scored three runs off Syre, Old West pitcher. Rankin and Woodly collected the hits for the Old West nine, while Brown and Butler were the big guns for Grimes.

Score by innings:

			R	H
Old West	000	—0	2
Grimes	201	—3	3

Batteries: Syre and Woodly; Watson and Butler.

Steele Wallops Manly, 7-2

In a game full of errors, Steele defeated Manly 7 to 2 in an intramural baseball game yesterday. Amon, Manly pitcher, knocked a home run in the second inning, while Ashe, Steele second sacker, hit for the circuit in the third inning.

Score by innings:

			R	H
Steele	241	—7	10
Manly	020	—2	4

Batteries: McBryde and Cox; Amon and George.

Old East Wins

In a very interesting and tightly played game, Old East won over the Question Marks 3-1. Jackson, Old East pitcher, struck out eight Question Marks, while Allen, Question Marks pitcher, put the third strike by seven of the Old East team.

Score by innings:

			R	H
Question Marks	001	00—1	2
Old East	020	1x—3	3

Batteries: Allen and Costi; Jackson and McCombs.

GLEE CLUB PLANS RECITAL AT DUKE

The University Glee Club will give a concert at Duke April 28, according to C. B. Overman, manager of the organization.

C. S. Hooper, Jr., director of recitals at Duke, says that the recitals committee has been congratulated on all sides for securing the Glee Club, and that students and townspeople alike are looking forward to the concert as the climax to the year's work of the recitals committee.

Fraternities Plan House Parties For Week-End of Dances

Sigma Zeta and Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternities are planning house parties during the coming week-end in honor of guests at the Junior-Senior dances.

The fraternities are both giving banquets Saturday evening, April 25, while Sigma Zeta is giving a tea dance and bridge Saturday afternoon in addition. The Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity is having Carlton Pittman of Sanford, the alumni secretary and treasurer of their fraternity, as guest of honor at their functions.

To close their entertainments the Sigma Zeta fraternity is giving a breakfast party Sunday morning.

SCHOOLBOY TITLE RECAPTURED BY CHARLOTTE HIGH

Queen City Lads Easily Win Meet; High Point Second and Greensboro Third.

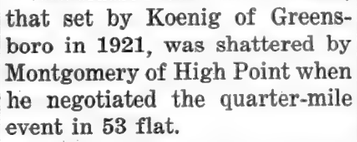
Seven state high school records were broken and another tied yesterday on Emerson field as Charlotte High took the state championship with 53 1-3 points. High Point took second with 29 while Greensboro was third with 22, Asheville fourth with 13, and Rockingham fifth with 7.

Hawthorne of Charlotte bettered the record in the low hurdles with a mark of 25.8 seconds, but he knocked down one of his hurdles and the mark was disallowed. However, he turned in a time of twenty-six seconds flat in the preliminaries to tie the old record held by Smith of Wilmington. Hawthorne set a new record in the high hurdles by covering the distance in 16.2 seconds. The old record of 17.2 was made last year by Wood of Charlotte.

High Point broke the relay record, running the mile in 3:40.4 to beat the mark established by Charlotte last year by eight tenths of a second. Sizemore of High Point set another mark in the 220 with a time of 22.4. The old record was set by Ison of Charlotte with a time of 22.6 in 1926.

Hudson, Raleigh, took first in the mile with a time of 4:36.4 to break the record of 4:41 held by Williamson of High Point. Williamson placed third. Two records held by Neiman, Carolina star last year, were broken when Guy Soule of Charlotte went 22 feet one inch in the broad jump, and Norman of Greensboro took the pole vault with a height of 11 feet 1 3-4 inches.

The oldest record on the books, that set by Koenig of Greensboro in 1921, was shattered by Montgomery of High Point when he negotiated the quarter-mile event in 53 flat.



High Point and Charlotte were even in the number of first places scored with four each, but the Queen City boys piled up too many seconds, thirds, and fourths for High Point to ever have a chance. Charlotte jumped into the lead from the first event and was never headed.

Andrews of Asheville scored eleven of his teams thirteen points to be high scorer for the meet. Hawthorne led the scoring for Charlotte with ten points earned in the hurdle events, while Sizemore was the leading scorer for High Point with seven.

High Point, in taking second place, nosed out Greensboro in the last two events of the day.

Injuries Handicap Tar Heels For V. P. I. Meet

Tennis Sidelights

By Billy Arthur

Wilmer Hines and Bryan Grant were progressing rapidly through the first set of the doubles semi-finals of the North-South tennis tournament Thursday until—Frank X. Shields took off his sweater. Then came those terrible volleys from which Wilmer was forced to duck several times. Once "Bittsey" had the presence of mind enough to fall on the ground to keep from being hit.

Colloquially speaking, this man Frank Shields surely puts plenty of power behind those serves. When he would serve, the first ball had plenty speed. If he missed, heaven help the one who was in the way of the next. He would not let up on his power, but instead increase it. Those were well worth cutting classes to see. How that man can hit 'em!

At times the Carolina doubles team would lob balls high in the air, and then we were lucky enough to catch a glimpse of the ball going over the fence after it had been perfectly placed within the court. Shields did it.

At other times the spectators would have believed him to be cross-eyed. He would look in one direction and hit the ball in the other—just out of reach of either Hines or Grant.

As for Van Ryn—the same can be said of him. He was great. No wonder they are rated high!

Wilmer Hines performed best for Carolina. He was all over the court, returning some few of the vollays sent over by the Shields-Van Ryn combo. His serves were also well worth noticing. Grant played his usual fast game, always trying to get to all balls; but his speed was somewhat marred by his previous match with Sutter, who almost literally ran him to death.

The scores 6-4, 6-4, 6-2, means nothing to those who were unfortunate enough to miss the matches. The winners were pushed to win almost every game. None were walkaways. One team would run the score up, the other would come from Bagby Added to Names of Farmer and Jensen Who Will Be Out Today.

With three easy victories already behind them, Carolina's Southern Conference track champions meet the V. P. I. Gobblers on Emerson field this afternoon at two o'clock in their first real test of the season. As yet the Tar Heels have not been forced to extend themselves to turn in their wins, but the Gobblers are expected to present a different problem.

Already without the services of Charley Farmer and Clarence Jensen, Carolina will be further handicapped today by an injury suffered by George Bagby during the past week. Bagby sprained his ankle in practice a few days ago and may be unable to perform against the Gobblers. Bagby's loss will be a severe blow, for he has been a consistent performer in both the high jump and broad jump this spring.

If Bagby does not enter the high jump, Carolina's chief

TAR HEEL, TECH MEET TODAY ON VALLEY COURSE

Davidson and State Meet at Greensboro Complete Golf Schedule for Week.

After being held to a 9-9 tie with Duke team Wednesday, the Tar Heel golfers are ready to take on the team from Georgia Tech at Hope Valley this afternoon.

The Tech team played the Blue Devils yesterday and at the time of publication no word had been received as to the outcome of the match. Whether or not this business of playing two matches on successive days will handicap or help the Techmen will be shown this afternoon. Since Watts Gunn graduated from collegiate ranks, Georgia Tech has lost a lot of the golf publicity that it incurred through Gunn's brilliant playing, but just the same the Atlantans usually turn out good teams and the Tar Heels will have a lot of trouble with them this afternoon.

Joe Adams, one of the mainstays of the team, will not be

MR. FOUST ASKS PARENT OPINION ABOUT SMOKING

N. C. C. W. Head is Puzzled By Students Petition Favoring Use of Tobacco.

A letter has been sent out by Julius I. Foust, president of N. C. C. W., to parents of students at that college, in regard to smoking among the students. This follows a petition which has been signed by a considerable number of the young women asking that the regulation against smoking be abandoned. Mr. Foust admits he is puzzled as to what should be done about the matter.

He is sending this letter to the parents in an effort to find out their opinion on the subject. In the questionnaire accompanying the letter, Mr. Foust asks: 1. Does your daughter smoke? 2. If she does, does it meet with your approval? 3. If she does not smoke, would you have any objection to her forming the habit? 4. Do you endorse our permitting the young women of this college to smoke? 5. Do you think that the citizens of North Carolina would give their approval and support to this college if we should permit smoking by the students?

Mr. Foust leaves the question of changing the regulation open to argument, but as long as the regulation is on the books, he holds that it ought to be obeyed. He is going to present the matter to the board of trustees, but he says, "as we now have a regulation against smoking, if your daughter is not willing to abide by the regulation until changed —the only reasonable thing she can do it to remain at home."

"I understand," says Mr. Foust in his letter to the parents, "that a petition has been signed by a large number asking us to abolish the regulation." Later on in the letter he says: "Very few are guilty of violating the regulation against smoking; on the other hand, many students who do not smoke are in favor of changing the regulation because it is at times violated by some students in the college."

There is a difference of opinion as to how great a proportion of the whole number of students smoke. According to some students who have been asked about the matter, Mr. Foust's statement that "very few" disregard the anti-smoking rule shows that he misinformed, and it is reported that more than 1000 out of a total student body of around 1,800 signed the petition for the abolishment of the rule.

The father of one student says his daughter told him: "If all the girls who have smoked and are going to keep on smoking should stay at home, the way Dr. Foust suggests, there certainly will be a big falling off in attendance."

Beautification of Campus Under Way

Grass and shrubbery have been planted around Memorial hall, and planting of grass and shrubbery around Everett dormitory has been practically completed, according to a statement yesterday by Dr. W. C. Coker, chairman of the committee in charge of the University lawns. Dr. Coker also said that shrubbery had been placed around the music building, and that bare spots around the campus are being furrowed and sown with grass.

Speaking further about plans which were under way for the beautification of the campus, Dr. Coker said that gravel would be placed on the bare spots of the Swain Hall lawn.

Virginia Composer Will Visit Campus

Mr. John Powell of Richmond, Va., composer and pianist, will be in Chapel Hill next week as the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Lamar Stringfield. He will attend the Stringfield concert at the Playmakers Theatre Saturday evening, April 25th.

A graduate of the University of Virginia in 1901, Mr. Powell studied with Leshchetizky and Nawratil in Vienna. He made his debut in Berlin in 1907, and afterwards appeared at many European capitals in concerts. In recent years he has made several concert tours through Europe and the United States.

Mr. Powell numbers among his compositions "In the South," "Variations and Double Fugue," "At the Fair," "Sonata Virginianesque," "Rhapsodie Negre," "In Old Virginia," "Sonata Psychologique," "Violin Concerto, E. Major," and "Sonata Teutonica."

MINNESOTA PROFESSOR MAKES COLLEGE SURVEY

"Yes," was the answer Dr. J. G. Umstattd, University of Minnesota, made after a thorough study of the question: "It is possible for a student to clerk, wait on tables, mind babies or in any way to work his way through college and still get as much out of it as the one whose bills are paid by his father."

Dr. Umstattd states that from the results of his survey he finds that the question of what a boy will get out of his schooling is entirely up to the boy and whether he pays his own way or not has nothing to do with the material results that he will derive.

In his study, Dr. Umstattd found that students of a given intelligence make approximately the same marks regardless of whether engaged in outside work or not. Going into the question of extra-curricular activities it was found that the more a freshman earned the more he participated in outside activites such as the Y. M. C. A., literary societies, student government and religious work. Senior earners were found to hold as many campus offices as non-earners and it was found that most of these students worked so that they would be able to participate in other activities.

More students were found to be engaged as clerks in stores than any other occupation, while restaurant work, nursing, general office work, household and salesman positions followed in order. When asked what the workers would do with their extra time if they did not have to pay their own way, the largest number replied that they would go in for athletics. The next largest group declared that they would study more, while extra-curricular activities, reading, social life and recreation would claim the time of others.

When asked what the disadvantages of working while in college were most of the workers replied "none". Rather than a disadvantage, they maintained that they counted it an advantage. Very few admitted that it was a curtailment of their social activities, but the majority said it was the only means by which they would be able to enter any social life at all.

hopes will rest in Red Hamlet, sophomore, who tied for first place against Georgia Tech last Saturday. Stafford, Newland, and Owens are the other Tar Heels likely to be entered in this event. In the broad jump Brodie Arnold, Houston, and Howard are probable entries.

Marland, Slusser, Smith, and Drane are scheduled to carry on in the dashes. The entries for the 440 will probably be selected from Lionel Weil, Ken Marland, Bob Drane, Wallace Case, Smith and Brock. Marland took first place in this event against Tech, while Weil broke the tape against N. C. State the week before.

The Tar Heels will have good strength in the hurdle events with Davis, Hamlet, and Waugh in the highs, and Slusser, Davis, and Geiger in the lows. Slusser is yet to be defeated in the low hurdles while Davis has scored two firsts and a second in the highs.

V. P. I. will present its greatest strength in the distance runs where Johnny Miles will lead a brilliant group of runners from last fall's cross country squad. Carolina will have Jones, Baucom, Cordle, Pratt, Gabriel, Hubbard, and Donnell in these events with Jones leading the milers and Baucom the two milers.

The other Carolina entries will probably be: Watkins, Garrett, Case, and Brock in the half-mile! Arnold and Ruble in the pole vault, Brown, Hodges, Harper, Gilbreath, Ruble, and Thompson in the discus; and Brown, Chandler, Strauss, Gilbreath, Houston, and Parsley in the javelin.

The Tar Babies, who have no meet scheduled for today, will go through time trials following the varsity events.

The schedule of events follows:

Running events:

2:00—100 yard dash.
2:10—One mile run.
2:25—220 yard dash.
2:35—120 yard high hurdles.
2:45—440 yard run.
2:55—Two mile run.
3:15—220 yard low hurdles.
3:25—880 yard run.

Field events:

1:45—Discus, pole vault, high jump.
2:15—Shot put.
3:00—Javelin.
3:30—Broad jump.

here for the match and his absence will leave a gap that will be hard to fill. Ben Goodes, who shot such a good round against Duke, will probably play number one this afternoon. Bev Mason will take Joe's position of number two, Al Brown will play three. The fourth man will be determined by the winner of the match between Aubrey Brooks and Paul Carter. The foursome will be made up of Mason and Goodes and Carter or Brooks and Brown.

After the match today the Tar Heels will practice early next week in preparation for the match with Davidson and the State Intercollegiate Meet at Sedgefield. The whole squad will take part in this tournament and then there will be some freshman entries also. The squad will go to Sedgefield on Thursday and commute back and forth until the meet is over. The meet with Davidson comes while the team is at Sedgefield and is to be played on Friday.

behind to deuce it. Then it would be Grant-Hines "ad," deuce again, Grant-Hines "ad," deuce again, Shields-Van Ryn "ad." Then Shields would knock the ball over into the next court. Thereby hangs the tale!

As for the singles semi-finals in which Bryan Grant was defeated by Clifford Sutter, 6-1, 6-0, 6-1, the defeat of Grant is told by the improvement of Sutter since this writer saw him perform last year. The winner had the Carolina star on the run all the time. Yet Grant displayed a game fight, drawing much applause from the stands for his gameness and attempts to reach every ball in time to return it. But Sutter was almost perfect in his placing. No wonder he beat Tilden, if he played like the writer saw him yesterday, for he was invincible. The Tulane star missed only three aces during the match.

His footwork was the best seen during the afternoon. Well worth journeying to Pinehurst today, to see!

Sutter was exceptionally good on shots that he could "come in" on, but it could be easily seen that he disliked the idea of "going back" for balls. His play from the back of the court was good; but when he had to run back to get one, he didn't like the idea one bit.

The writer knows that Grant was away off his game but he shouldn't have been beaten that bad. Bryan, you'll get another chance at him. Good luck!

Dick Covington, Carolina tennis star in 1928, refereed the matches between Sutter and Grant.

In the women's tennis doubles Miss Martha DeLaney, Charlotte, and Miss Ida Currie, Clarkton, were defeated by Ann Page, Philadelphia, and Miss Virginia Rice of Boston. The scores were 6-1, 6-1. Miss Delaney and Miss Currie are co-eds here at the University. Poor things!

Charlotte Wins High School Track Title

Greensboro was leading 22-19 when Armfield of High Point threw the javelin 168 feet 10 1-2 inches to take the event, and High Point took a close race for first in the relay. High Point and Charlotte raced neck and neck up the straight-away, but Williams of High Point stretched out in the last few yards to gain the victory.

Hawthorne of Charlotte turned in the most exceptional work of the day in breaking one record and tying another. Hudson of Raleigh also turned in a fine performance in winning the mile.

Nineteen teams competed in the meet, and all but four of them scored. Albemarle, Cary, Efland and Fayetteville were the only schools that failed to tally at least a fraction of a point. The team scores were: Charlotte, 53 1-3; High Point, 29; Greensboro, 22; Asheville, 13; Rockingham, 7; Sanford, 6 1-2; Raleigh, 6; Durham, 5; Wilmington, 4 1-2; North Wilkesboro, 3; Reidsville, 2; Salisbury, 1; Robersonville, 1; Mt. Olive 1-3; and Edward Best 1-3.

Summary of events follows:

100 yard dash: First, Gunter, Greensboro; second, Spain, Durham; third, Sizemore, High Point; fourth, Abshar, North Wilkesboro. Time 10.2

220 yard dash: First, Sizemore, High Point; second, Gunter, Greensboro; third, Spain, Durham; fourth, Mock, Charlotte. Time 22.4. (New record).

880 yard run: First, Turpie, Charlotte; second Yandell, Charlotte; third, Knight, Greensboro; fourth, Ferrell, Raleigh. Time 2:05.8.

One mile run: First, Hudson, Raleigh; second, Williamson, High Point; third, Howell, Asheville; fourth, Lloyd, Charlotte. Time 4:36.4. (New record).

High hurdles: First, Hawthorne, Charlotte; second, Sockwell, Greensboro; third, Abernathy, Greensboro; fourth, Stothart, Charlotte. Time 16.2 seconds. (New record).

Low hurdles: First, Hawthorne, Charlotte; second, Allison, Charlotte; third, Abshar, North Wilkesboro; fourth, Kennerly, Greensboro. Time 25.8. (Record disallowed for knocking down one hurdle. Tied the old record of 26 seconds in the preliminaries.)

Pole vault: First, Norman, Greensboro; second, Auman, High Point and Roberson, Wilmington, tied; fourth, Hopson, Charlotte; Cone, Edward Best; and Jones, Mt. Olive tied. Height 11 feet 1 3-4 inches. (New record.)

High jump: First, Childers, Rockingham, and Wilkie, Sanford, tied; third, Sams, High Point, and Hubbard, Sanford, tied. Height 5 feet 7 3-4 inches.

Shot put: First, Andrews, Asheville; second, Hasty, Charlotte; third, Sutton, Charlotte; fourth, Saleeby, Salisbury. Distance 45 feet 8 3-4 inches.

Discus: First, Andrews, Asheville; second, Sutton, Charlotte; third, Hasty, Charlotte; fourth, Norman, Greensboro. Distance 117 feet 3 inches.

Broad jump: First, Soule, Charlotte; second, Childers, Rockingham; third, Pickard, Charlotte; fourth, Suggs, Sanford. Distance 22 feet 1 inch. (New record.)

Javelin: First, Armfield, High Point; second, Howard Sutton, Charlotte; third, Harold Sutton, Charlotte; fourth, Andrews, Asheville. Distance 168 feet 10 1-2 inches.

One mile relay: First, High Point (Montgomery, Shipman, Sizemore, and Williams); second, Charlotte; third, Reidsville; fourth, Robersonville. Time 3:40.4. (New record.)

JUNIORS, SENIORS COMBINE TO GIVE ELABORATE BALL

Transformation of Tin Can Into Huge Ballroom Is Now Taking Place.

For the first time in the history of this institution, the juniors and seniors, traditional enemies, have joined together and will act as joint hosts at an elaborate Junior-Senior Ball the nights of April 24 and 25.

Four hundred prominent social, political, and business leaders in the State, together with their wives, have been invited to attend the function, which will take place in the Tin Can. Among these are: Governor and Mrs. O. Max Gardner, of Shelby and Raleigh; Senator and Mrs. Cameron Morrison, of Charlotte and Washington, D. C.; Senator and Mrs. Josiah W. Bailey, of Raleigh; Chief Justice and Mrs. W. J. Stacey, of Raleigh; Honorable and Mrs. J. C. B. Ehringhaus, of Elizabeth City; Honorable and Mrs. R. T. Fountain, of Rocky Mount; Judge and Mrs. John J. Parker, of Charlotte; President and Mrs. Walter Lingle, of Davidson College; President and Mrs. J. I. Foust, of N. C. C. W., Greensboro; President and Mrs. E. C. Brooks, of State College, of Raleigh; and President and Mrs. William P. Few, of Duke University, Durham; Josephus Daniels, of the Raleigh News and Observer; E. B. Jeffries, of the Greensboro Daily News; John J. Park, of the Raleigh Times; and Wade H. Harris, of the Charlotte Observer have also been invited.

Spanish Politics Are Discussed by Leavitt

Dr. S. E. Leavitt, head of the Spanish department, spoke to the Spanish Club Friday evening at their meeting in the Y. M. C. A. He chose as his subject "Political Conditions in Spain" on which he enumerated three main problems which Spain was facing at present.

The first is the problem of establishing a republic. He stated that the fear in taking this step was that Catalonia, which is the richest commercial center in the Spanish peninsula, might declare her independence and probably other provinces would do likewise.

The second problem is that of reducing the cost of living. This, he said, could probably be accomplished by the separation of the church and state and reducing the standing army. But the latter method must be brought about cautiously to prevent the army from revolting.

The third problem Dr. Leavitt ennumerated is that of stabilizing the value of the pesita. This he said, was a difficult task because the people have little confidence in the government. The value of the pesita at par is nineteen cents, while at present it has dropped to ten and eleven cents. In the conclusion Dr. Leavitt said: "Spain is passing through one of its most critical moments."

A. K. Shields presented "La Paticula Condition" on the program after which "Unas Cientos" was given by O. T. Slate. C. H. Contree presented "Una Poema". The entire program was conducted in Spanish.

Staff Meetings

Members of the editorial and reportorial staffs of the Daily Tar Heel will assemble today in two separate meetings. The editorial staff meets in room 104 Alumni building at 5:00 this afternoon, and the reportorial staff in the same room at 7:00 tonight.

Attendance to these meetings is compulsory, and all persons absent will be in danger of being suspended from the staff.

CUPS AWARDED IN ANNUAL CONTESTS

Prizes in High School Competitions Are Given Out Friday Night.

The final awards were made Friday night to the winners in the state high school Latin, French, and Spanish cup contests. These awards marked the outcomes of competitions closed at various different times. The state Latin contest took place February 27; the French closed March 13; and the Spanish was finished March 27.

Sixty-five schools and 1084 students participated in the Latin cup contest. The cup was awarded to Margaret Edwards of the Durham Central High School.

One hundred and nine schools and 2294 students tried for the French cup, which was awarded to Effie Hewitt of the Fayetteville High School.

Twelve schools and 250 students contested for the Spanish cup. It was awarded to C. A. Thomas, Jr., of the Fayetteville High School.

The contest for the magazine cup, which is awarded to the school having the best magazine, was won by the Greensboro High School. There were only two schools participating in this contest, Greensboro and Winston-Salem. This competition took place last year and evidently both schools had forgotten all about it, for when the award was made Friday night, there were no representatives of either of the magazines present and the cup was given to a student from Greensboro who was here for the track meet with the request that he give it to the school on his return.

Five Bills On Di And Phi Calendars

The bills which are to be discussed in the Phi and Di societies on Tuesday night at seven fifteen o'clock are as follows:

Phi Assembly — 1. Resolved: That the prohibition act should be modified so as to legalize the sale of light wines and beers. 2. Resolved: That the Phi assembly should go on record as favoring the proposed consolidation of counties in North Carolina.

Di senate—1. Resolved: That winter and spring football practice should be abolished. Senator Weeks: affirmative; Senator McGuire: negative. 2. Resolved: That the North Carolina legislature should adjourn without passing a revenue bill and return within two weeks in a special session. Senator Ramsay: affirmative; Senator Shreve: negative. 3. Resolved: That all candidates for degrees at the University be made to qualify according to a certain fixed standard in at least four sports. Senator Medford, affirmative: Senator Daughteridge: negative.

Leaders for Junior-Senior Ball

One of the biggest social events of the spring quarter will take place next week-end when the Junior-Senior Ball will be given on Friday and Saturday nights, April 24 and 25.

Pictured above are the dance leaders and their partners. Reading from left to right, from the top, they are Miss Madeline Thompson of Chapel Hill, and Pat Patterson, High Point, president of the senior class; and Theron Brown, Greensboro, president of the junior class, with Miss Alice Caldwell of High Point.

Old East Remains Most Popular Dormitory Because Of Traditions

By Charles Rose

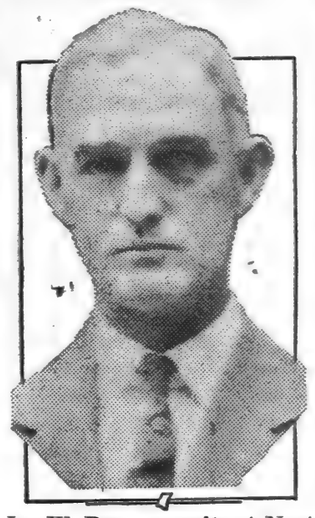
Tradition more than anything else seems to be the main factor considered by students making application for rooms here at the University. Out of the approximately 1,500 men applying for rooms in the dormitories, more than a third of this number requests places in Old East and Old West dormitories. Many of the new students coming here for the first time desire to stay in the same dormitories that their fathers and grand-fathers roomed in before them.

Not only does the past history of these two buildings cause them to be in such demand, but also their proximity to the campus has a great deal to do with the students desiring places in them. Steele dormitory is probably even nearer to the classrooms than Old East and Old West, but the latter have the advantage in the fact that they have a long tradition behind them.

Of these two, Old East is in even greater demand than Old West, possibly, because of the fact that it is thirty years the elder. According to interviews with several of the roomers in the eastern dormitory its more modern room equipment makes it a better rooming place than its twin rival.

Meeting in 1793 to make plans for a new building, the committee in charge of Old East decided to build a three-story dormitory 120 feet by fifty feet. Plans were made for a dinning-room on the first floor with the dimensions of 40 by 30 feet, and on the second and third floors, the committee decided to place public meeting halls both the same size as the dinning-room. The capacity of the new building was to be approximately fifty students. An order for 350,000 bricks at four dollars per thousand was put in, but after much deliberation the committee were forced to give up their plans for such a large building.

On July 19, of the same year, a contract was let to James Patterson, an architect of Chatam county, for a two-story brick building, ninety-six feet seven inches long and forty feet one and one-half inches wide. The building was to be built for $5,000 with the University furnishing the "brick, sash weights, locks, hooks, fastenings, and painting." With sixteen rooms, and four passages, the new dormitory was to be completed by November 1, 1794.



At a dignified ceremony, October 12, 1793, the corner-stone of the new building was laid, at which time Dr. S. E. McCorkle, a noted Scotch educator, made the address.

Upon the urgent demand of President Caldwell, the Old East building was, in 1824, given a third story, and at the same time its sister building, Old West, was begun.

For over fifty years following the addition of the third story, Old East as well as Old West, were used for lecture buildings, with large classrooms on the second floor up until a little over twenty years ago.

Several times since their construction, these two buildings have been completely over-hauled, and are today as modern as any of the newer dormitories on the campus. With their modern fixtures, tradition, and nearness to the campus, these two old land-marks are still serving the University, each housing over one hundred students each quarter.

Ira W. Rose

Ira W. Rose, prominent North Carolina druggist, has been appointed to the faculty of the school of pharmacy for the spring quarter.

IRA ROSE ADDED TO FACULTY LIST

Rocky Mount Druggist Joins Pharmacy School for Spring Term.

The death of Vernon Howell and the subsequent appointment of Grover Beard to the deanship of the school of pharmacy in the University has made it necessary for the University trustees to appoint another teacher to the pharmacy faculty.

With the approval of the trustees and on the recommendation of Dean Beard, President Frank P. Graham has appointed Ira W. Rose, of Rocky Mount, as a member of the teaching staff for the spring term. Mr. Rose's chief work will consist in teaching the courses in operative and dispensing pharmacy, practical subjects which he is admirably qualified to handle.

Mr. Rose graduated from the University in 1906 with the degree of Ph.G. During his senior year he served as assistant in pharmacy. Previously he had taught school in Johnston County. Continuously since graduation he has operated a drug store in Rocky Mount where he is held in the highest esteem.

Mr. Rose has been a member of the North Carolina Board of Pharmacy for a number of years, being in charge of the examinations in theoretical and practical pharmacy. He has attended most of the meetings of the National Association of Boards of Pharmacy and the American Pharmaceutical Association for many years and has steadily maintained a keen interest in the work of these national organizations. In the state pharmaceutical association Mr. Rose has been a member since he obtained his license in 1906. He was elected first vice-president in 1920 and the following year he was elevated to the presidency. In addition he

LYNN RIGGS WILL READ HIS LATEST DRAMA TONIGHT

"Cherokee Night" Was Written Here During Author's Last Visit.

This evening at 8:30 in the Playmakers Theatre, Lynn Riggs will read his new creation, "The Cherokee Night."

It will mark the second appearance of the Oklahoma writer on the regular program of monthly Sunday dramatic ceremonies here. He was first introduced to a Chapel Hill audience during the winter and made a decided hit with his really wonderful impersonation of the characters in "Green Grow the Lilacs" at a time when that Broadway success was in its first week at New York.

Today's offering carries with it even greater significance than the other in that it has never before been heard by any gathering. A similar local pre-natal consideration of Paul Green's "Tread the Green Grass" will be recalled, being given several months ago.

Mr. Riggs has grown up with the southwesterners whom he brings to the footlights; he knows them intimately, appreciates them in their triumphs and their foibles and their poetry, and fills them magicly with life as he catches their rhythm from his manuscript.

"The Cherokee Night" was written in Chapel Hill, which the author found an inspiring

FINE ART EXHIBIT OPENS THURSDAY

Work of Prominent Painters Will Be Presented By Association Of Professional Artists.

Beginning Thursday, April 23, through Sunday, May 3, the exhibition of the North Carolina association of professional artists will be on display in the University music building. The exhibit will be open to the public during the hours of 11:00 to 1:00 in the morning, 2:30 to 5:30 (except next Friday) in the afternoon, and from 7:30 to 9:00 in the evenings.

Nelson O. Kennedy, with the aid of the University symphony orchestra, will give a vesper organ concert, at 4:45 o'clock Sunday afternoon, April 26, for the pleasure of those who attend the exhibit.

In cooperation with the Community Club, the association, with Mrs. W. S. Bernard as hostess, will give a tea for the American college publicity association Friday afternoon, April 24. The chairman of the hostess committee is Mrs. John Couch.

Among the exhibitors will be Elliot Daingerfield, Charles Baskerville, and Miss Mabel Pugh of New York; Mrs. Hope Chamberlain; Frances Spright of the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts; Louis Vorhees of High Point; Isabelle Bowen, Mrs. Ruth Moore, Miss Mary Tillery, and James MacLean, of Raleigh; Clement Strudwig of Hillsboro; Mary deB. Graves and William Steene of Chapel Hill. There will be others whose names are not listed yet.

The oil paintings will be hung in the main rotunda. Mrs. Grace Woodman's studio on the second floor will house the water colors, pastels, etchings, and block prints.

To the Class Of 1934

Never has there been such a sincere, wholehearted, and purposeful demonstration on the part of a single class as that which "Ike" Minor and the other men of the class of 1934 staged Friday night. It was advertised as a smoker, but it was a revival.

In a year marked by its apathy, this was a refreshing exception. Freshmen are always better cheerers, and more enthusiastic than we upperclassmen who have reached man's state—a state which we full well know doesn't permit of such childish things as "boosting." However, this aggregation of first year men have a drive and efficiency that points toward permanency. When they want a famous football coach to address them, they get him, even though he may refuse radio audiences the pleasure of hearing him.

Friday night the members of the class of 1934 for all intent and purposes became upperclassmen. The juniors and seniors of this institution have but a brief pause to make on the threshold of the outward swinging door, until they will have ended forever the evanescent life they have been leading here. Their aspirations, university ideals, hopes and plans are as good as ended. It is to these men of 1934 that the institution now looks to carry on, to progress with, and to realize these ideals, aspirations, and plans.

Becoming upperclassmen, these freshmen have unconsciously assumed obligations of great proportions. Frank Graham, the greatest president the University has ever had, has said the students in this University at this time owe it to the struggling tax-payers and their equally burdened relatives to get the maximum good out of every one of their college courses and days. They are obligated to see that every penny of student fees are legitimately spent, and that a reduction be effected shortly. It is their pleasure to inculcate within themselves and the college generation which will follow deep love of the University, a desire to serve community, state, and nation on the part of honest, tolerant, and educated persons, and to accomplish a revival of the more serious activities which represent the intellect more and the senses less.

Great classes have been discovered in the freshman unit before; and they were great classes. Somewhere along the road, however, has lain devastating influences which have vitrated all the abundant energy, the altruistic enthusiasm, and serious minded intent.

A World In Itself

Collegians hear much of preparing themselves for "life" after leaving school. A sudden metamorphosis is said to take place in one's daily habits upon completion of the final year of four spent supposedly in preparation. Observing the fallacy of such a surmise, others vigorously assert that college existence is as truly life itself as is any period of the life of an individual. But in reality it seems, as well expressed in a recent class smoker address, that college is a world in itself.

Many are the elements and factors going to make up the ordinary routine at any of America's institutes of higher learning. Intense interest and loyalty in regard to athletics and scholastic teams, fraternity and other binding group affiliations, association with those striving toward a common end and attracted by similar pursuits, the pervasion of a spirit of friendly cooperation and mutual desire, and above all the sense of carefree existence and irresponsibility—these and other features, not to be found in just such relation anywhere else, combine to set apart in a category peculiarly its own the ordinary activity of undergraduates. Probably never afterward will the average student encounter from authority over him the leniency accorded the cutting of classes, big week-ends, and youthful escapades. It is extremely unlikely that any such friendly regard for his welfare and individualism as is accorded him there will be extended by subsequent coworkers and associates. It is no doubt with a somewhat wistful feeling of longing that alumni look back on the joyful days spent at college as belonging to another world.—J. M. L.

Scholarship Demands Precision

An harmone is a gland secretion. An excellent illustration of a prevalent and adolescent characteristic of the average student is found in an anecdote told by a psychology professor here. It was in a test that the question was asked, "what is an harmone?" The answer was. "When a bunch of fellows sit around, and start singing; if it sounds good—harmone." In commenting, the professor struck upon an important failing in the character of our average student. The illustration was exaggeration of the point but it does make clear this need. The average student is standing in crying need for precision in his scholarship and for a deep sense of personal responsibility and a desire to be thoroughly true to himself.

I am sure that without exception there are groups in every prep-school anywhere which not only indulge in the high are of "bull-dozing" but find an unparelleled delight in seeming to be familiar with something which in reality is quite beyond their vaguest comprehension. Exuberance, and care-free indifference and irresponsibility forbid seriousness but to find the same phenomenon among college men is cause for concern in this modern day of science, speed, knowledge, and precision. It indicates intellectual irresponsibility, laziness, and a tendency to be untrue to oneself.

A dramatic living out of this quality of preciseness and of the spirit as in the parting words of Polonius to his son, "to thine own self be true" is found in the life of Michael Pupin, the richly spiritual scientist, whose life was the very epitome of scholarship, criticism, intellectual and physical energy and stamina, of honesty, and nobility. There is everything to be gained by severe intellectual criticism, nothing by clever verbose indifference. There is hope in severe personal honesty. there is hope of simplification, organization, and growth. But in adventuresome cleverness there can be nothing but the consequences of intellectual and moral chaos. —R. W. B.

Friends In Need

Thomas Carlyle said many years ago: "The true university of these days is a collection of books," in his famous essays on "Heroes and Hero Worship." The same statement contains more of an element of truth as the years roll by and the need for larger and larger libraries to keep up with the advances made in literature and science becomes increasingly evident to the university officials of today.

Most college and university libraries are maintained and operated largely through the generous support of alumni or friends of the institution. In several instances these people have organized societies or clubs with this aim as a standard for the group. Oxford has its Friends of the Bodleian Library, founded by the late Sir William Osler, former curator of the library at Oxford University.

Harvard has its Friends of the Library, a group of alumni who organized at a dinner in 1925 and have since presented the library at Harvard with $216,742 in gifts for the upkeep and payment of books.

In 1928 the Friends of the Columbia Library was formed with annual assessments for each member of $5. Since then they have donated to the library its private collections of economics and mathematics, probably the largest in the world, as well as other useful donations.

The Friends of the Princeton Library was formed last April and accepts all who are interested as members. They publish an annual review, Biblia, and without active campaigns, raise sufficient funds to present the library with occasional gifts.

The newest library friends society is the Yale Library Associates, organized last December by Professor Tinker, keeper of rare books in Yale's new Sterling Memorial Library. Through the associates, the library has just acquired an important addition to their rare books a summary of Einstein's relativity theory, written in his own hand, and valued at $25,000.

Dartmouth remains singularly along among the large eastern college without "friends" for its magnificent new Baker Memorial Library. Occasionally, individual bequests for gifts are made. Sometimes old libraries and private collections are offered to the College. In these instances the cost of putting the books in the stacks does not warrant the expense, in view of their value to the students.

No one knows a library's needs any more than the trustees of the building. If presented with gifts of money they can buy new or rare books which will prove a real asset to the College. Baker needs a group of interested alumni or friends who will have as their purpose in organizing, the collection of funds for making monetary gifts to the library.—The Dartmouth

Truly Great Novels

When the balmy days of spring attempt to coerce all ideas out of one's head, it is sometimes a difficult thing to attempt to start an argument, to discourse upon the day's news, or in any manner elaborate at length upon anything.

With that thought comes the idea of arguments in general, and we note with innate glee the haranguing and debating which has already started over John Galsworthy and his list of "greatest American novels."

One of the easiest ways in the world to start a heated argument among the literati is to produce a list of the best American novels. Regardless of what books are selected, there will always be a generous coterie of people to disagree, and since there is no way of proving or disproving the correctness of such lists, the arguments may go on and on as long as anyone feels like arguing.

Galsworthy, who is surely one of the greatest living novelists, recently named "Tom Sawyer" and "Huckleberry Finn" by Mark Twain, "The Scarlet Letter" by Hawthorne, and "McTeague," by Frank Norris, as the four greatest American novels.

While we sit back in our easy chair and wait for the various critics to fall upon their choice as a vulture seizes a T-Bone—provided vultures especially like T-Bone steaks—it might be interesting to complacently review Galsworthy's list.

Easily the most notable thing about his list is that it completely ignores great writers of the present day. Hawthorne belongs far back in an earlier, almost forgotten, generation. The present generation usually list him with the great unread, barring excerpts found in the Fifth Reader. Mark Twain, likewise although far from being ignored today, represents a vanished era. Only Norris comes close to the present, and even he concerned himself with the San Francisco of the nineties.

But where are the writers of today—those writers whom earnest critics exalt mightily, as if they and only they, among all Americans, had been permitted to see the true inwardness of things? Where are the great exponents of frankness, the sober weighers of tragedy, the acidulous of American hypocrisy and immaturity, the Nobel prize winners?

Where, to be specific, are such men as Lewis, Cabell, or Dreiser? Galsworthy has evidently ignored them, and above such books as "Babbitt" and "Jurgen" and "The Genius" he places a simple tale of colonial New England, two romances of the pre-war Mississippi, and a story of Polk street at the turn of the century.

We may assure ourselves that Galsworthy's selections are not final, as there are many, many qualified judges who are quite convinced in their smug certainty that Dreiser and Lewis have more to say to the world than had Twain or Hawthorne. The English novelist's list at least reminds us that American literature was not born after the World War.

Indeed, the present epoch of history-making literature has often been classed as a renaissance of American writing, but we must cautiously aver that there were able writers in the country before most of the present-day reading public were born, and it is quite plausible and possible that some writers of the present generation have received a trifle more generous praise than they really deserve. —O'Collegian.

The Sunday Hangover

By Wex Malone

Knowing that everyone would be expecting a gag about the high school debaters, I looked around, and as luck would have it, ran into this one. Ray Farris reports that as he was walking by Old East he saw a youthful couple coming out of that venerable building. Evidently they had invaded the privacy of the inmates. The girls asked Ray where the debating room of Old East was, explaining that they had been looking for it more than half an hour.

The Playmakers wish me to make the following apology concerning their performance last week-end. For some unknown reason the scenery shifters went off on a jag and mixed up the sets. Always a Bettin Man should have been laid in the fraternity house, and Blue Remembered Hills should have taken place on the roof of the insane asylum.

Even columnists have their blue remembered moments. Mac Grey was tactless enough to tell me what the rest of you feel, just how really lousy my column is. In a final frantic effort to appease, I submit the following poem, which was inspired, not by the spring weather or the Pi Phi tea, but simply by the sudden realization that I was flat broke.

A POEM IN PRAISE OF PRACTICALLY SOMETHING
An expensive venture in the field of free verse

By Wex Malone, the Edgar Lee Masters of Chapel Hill
(With apologies to my ancestors)

I want to take this opportunity to holler
About the virtues of the almighty dollar,
To praise the filthy lucre
That buys our bread and salt and sucre,
That inspires the plot for the bologny
So often heard on the Vitaphogny,
About poor dad who worked till he landed in the hearse,
And his darling daughters who ended up wearse.

To those radio speakers who extoll poverty I would add this P.S.,
That the stuff they hand out is mostly all B.S.
Why, the radio would never have been invented by Mr. Marconi
If he hadn't been backed by some capitalist's moni.
These fellows who give the dollar so many damns
Are probably speaking on advertising programms.
And when they're through, to say the least,
They will talk to you for twenty minutes about Tasty Yeast,
And they'll tell you about the vitamins it has stored away,
And advise you to buy three bars today.

If it weren't for money we'd have no alumni donations,
Nor be able to holler about inadequate legislative appropriations.
There would be no wise guys to make bright suggestions
As to when we'll be out of our economic deprestions,
Nor any exciting World War clashes,
Nor October stock market crashes.
We'd have to stop indulging in the pastime of having bluesies
If there were no money to provide financial excuses.

Ever since the twenty-second of July, 1924, I've wanted to give the hee-hee,
To the bird who wrote that song about the best things in life are free.
He sings about the free spring breezes,
And forgets they bring on coughs and sneezes
That necessitate a trip to the family physician;
And free love means the obstetrician.
So, all in all, I am quite adverse
To the bird who praises the empty purse.

IRA ROSE ADDED TO FACULTY LIST

has held numerous committee assignments in the association.

In making the announcement Dean Beard said: "Mr. Rose will bring to the pharmacy students at the University a rich experience in the very sort of work they will, as graduates, encounter and be expected successfully to perform. Possessed of high professional ideals he is nevertheless a practical retail owner who knows the varied nature of the drug business of today and he can be expected, therefore, to inculcate in his students a fine appreciation of high standard and at the same time show them how to apply themselves to the stern task of blending professional and commercial practice in such a way as to render a fine public service without financial sacrifice."

U. N. C. Track Men Down V. P. I. By Score 91 To 34

Slusser Stars With Ten Points In 100 and Low Hurdles.

Performing on a dry track for the first time this season, the Carolina track team overwhelmed V. P. I. here yesterday by a score of 91 2-3 to 34 1-3, taking eleven first places and a number of seconds and thirds. Carolina swept all three places in three events, the 100 yard dash, broad jump, and half mile, and took first and second in the 220, high hurdles, javelin, and pole vault.

Rip Slusser led the Tar Heel point gatherers with ten points earned by firsts in the 100 and low hurdles. Theron Brown, with first in the broad jump, second in the javelin, and third in the shot put, was second for the Tar Heels while Smith followed him with a first in the 220 and second in the 100 for eight points.

Swart accounted for ten points and two of V. P. I.'s three first places. Rhinehart won V. P. I.'s other first by taking the quarter mile in 51.2 seconds. Swart heaved the shot 47 feet 9 1-2 inches to take that event and won the discus with a distance of 130 feet three inches.

Rip Slusser turned in two good performances in scoring his ten points. Rip stepped the 100 in ten seconds flat and then came back in the low hurdles to take first with a time of 24.6 seconds.

Carolina was without the services of Clic Baucom in the two mile, but Bob Hubbard came through to win easily in 10:14.8. With Bagby out of the high jump, Stafford cleared the bar at five feet eight and one-quarter inches to place first with Red Hamlet in a triple tie for second.

Mark Jones, Carolina miler, defeated Miles of V. P. I. by more than seventy-five yards to break the tape in 4:33.4. Jones took the lead at the start of the race and increased it throughout.

In the 440, which Rhinehart won with a time of 51.2, Lionel Weil, running in second place, finished in spite of a spike wound in his right foot.

Smith and Drane finished almost neck and neck in the 220, but Smith won the event in 22.2 seconds. Drane made a strong finish, diminishing Smith's lead considerably over the last fifty yards.

Brodie Arnold and Ray Ruble tied for first place in the pole vault for the third time this season. They cleared twelve feet six inches, but both failed when the bar was raised to thirteen.

Dick Garrett took first place in the 880 with Tom Watkins second and Wallace Case third. All three were bunched fairly closely when Garrett broke the tape in two minutes and one-fifth second.

Swart's 47 feet 9 1-2 inches in the shot put, Slusser's 24.6 seconds in the low hurdles, Ruble's and Arnold's 12 feet 6 inches in the pole vault, and Jones' time of 4:33.4 in the mile were the outstanding performances of the day.

Carolina's next meet is scheduled for Wednesday when the Duke varsity and freshman teams will be met on Emerson Field at four o'clock. The Carolina freshmen have not had a meet for the past two Saturdays although they participated in time trials yesterday following the varsity events. The freshmen have already defeated the Blue Imps this season, carrying off a 90-36 decision in Durham some time ago.

Summary of events follows:

100 yard dash—First, Slusser, Carolina; second, Smith, Carolina; third, Marland, Carolina. Time 10 seconds.

220 yard dash—First, Smith, Carolina; second, Drane, Carolina; third, Carr, V. P. I. Time 22.2 seconds.

440 yard dash—First, Rhinehart, V. P. I.; second Weil, Carolina; third, Moore, V. P. I. Time 51.2 seconds.

880 yard run—First, Garrett, Carolina; second, Watkins, Carolina; third, Case, Carolina. Time 2:00.2.

One mile run—First, Jones, Carolina; second, Miles, V. P. I.; third, Donnell, Carolina. Time 4:33.4.

Two mile run—First, Hubbard, Carolina; second, White, V. P. I.; third, Elder, V. P. I.. Time 10:14.8.

120 yard high hurdles—First, Davis, Carolina; second, Waugh, Carolina; third, Preble, V. P. I. Time 16.2 seconds.

220 yard low hurdles—First, Slusser, Carolina; second, Preble, V. P. I.; third, Davis, Carolina. Time 24.6.

High Jump—First, Stafford, Carolina; second, Hamlet, Carolina, Newland, Carolina, and Gibson, V. P. I. tied. Heighth 5 feet 8 1-4 inches.

Pole vault—First, Arnold and Ruble, Carolina tied; third, Turner, V. P. I. Heighth 12 feet 6 inches.

Broad jump—First, Brown, Carolina; second, Howard, Carolina; third, Henry, Carolina. Distance 20 feet 9 1-2 inches.

Shot put—First, Swart, V. P. I.; second, Taylor,; V. P. I. third, Brown, Carolina. Distance 47 feet 9 1-2 inches.

Discus—First, Swart, V. P. I.; second, Dameron, Carolina; third, Brown, Carolina. Distance 130 feet 3 inches.

Javelin — First, Chandler, Carolina; second, Brown, Carolina; third, Downing, V. P. I. Distance 162 feet 3 inches.

Final score Carolina 91 2-3; V. P. I. 34 1-3.

DOPING 'EM OUT

By

BOB BETTS

NORTH CAROLINA
DUKE
DAVIDSON
WAKE FOREST

Coach Bob Fetzer's Tar Heels should have no trouble in winning another state track title this year. Carolina has ruled the cinder world in the state for so many years that the remaining members of the Big Five group are wondering if they will ever be dethroned. With the possible exception of the Tennis Team, no other championship looks any safer for the next few years than the track team.

The Tar Heels struck a hard piece of luck when they lost the speed king, Charlie Farmer, a few weeks ago. However, the Wilmington flash should be in shape for the State meet at Greensboro on May 2. In the meantime, Rip Slusser, Marland, Drane, and J. K. Smith have been rolling up points for Carolina in the century event. This is one of the best group of dash men in the South.

In the 440 Weil holds the indoor Southern record. J. K. Smith and Marland are the other Carolina entrants in this run. Dick Garrett, Tom Watkins, and Case carry Tar Heel colors in the 880. Jones and Gabriel hold forth in the mile run. Jones has been having a great season so far. Cliff Baucom, Captain of the cross-country team last fall, Hubbard, and Pratt form a brilliant trio of two mile runners.

No other team in the State or in the Southern Conference can match Carolina's great pair of pole vaulters, Ruble and Arnold. Ruble holds the indoor record at 12:11 1-2. Broadie Arnold formerly held this record at 12:7 1-2. Both boys have been slipping over the bar at 13 feet in practice this spring, Bagby, "Red" Hamlet, Owens, Stafford, and Newland are the high jumpers. Bagby is present state champion in this event. Nor is the Charlotte boy confined to the high jump alone. Against N. C. State a few weeks ago he came out first in the broad jump; it was the first time he had ever entered this event. Broadie Arnold and Houston are are other men in this division. Two football players, Brown and Hodges, toss the shot for Carolina. However, there are other athletes in the State that can

HARRIS DEFEATED BY LARRY JONES FOR TENNIS TITLE

Unseeded Charlotte Youth Upsets Defending Champion; Raleigh Wins Doubles.

The 1931 high school tennis champions of the state were crowned Friday. One was an unseeded dark horse—Lawrence Jones, Charlotte high's new singles champ. The other was the favorite—Harris and Lynch, Raleigh's new doubles champions.

Jones pulled the grand upset of the tourney when he outsteadied Harvey Harris, Raleigh's defending champ, and heavy favorite, in a dogged two and a half hour match, 4-6, 6-1, 9-7, 6-4. He went on to win in the afternoon over Robert Lovill, Mount Airy, seeded second to Harris, 6-3, 1-6, 4-6, 6-2, 6-1. In his semi-final match Lovill had beaten Hanson, Wilmington, straight sets, 8-6, 6-4, 6-3.

The Harris-Lynch championship doubles team won the title without too much exertion, downing Respess and Gurganus, of Washington, in the morning by 8-6, 6-3, 6-3, and besting Lovill and Lowry, of Mount Airy in the afternoon by 6-0, 6-4. The Mount Airy team had come through to the finals by beating P. Jones and Stevens, of Charlotte, 7-5, 6-2, 8-6.

The new champions rode the crest of victory over a field of players from 17 state high schools.

Jones, who takes the first singles championship cup back to Charlotte high since the days of Teddy Burwell, was the only one of four players reaching the semi-finals who hadn't been seeded.

Little thought was had that he might upset the usually speedy Harris, but he did exactly that. A bit off, and many of his shots going wild, Harris quit his driving to play a slow game of chops and lobs. This was Jones' game, and he completely outsteadied the defending champion.

In his finals match Lovill had a better net attack, but Jones had the better serve and a much better all round game.

Jones took the first set, but Lovill won the next two on remarkable spurts. In the second he took six straight games to win 6-1. In the third he was behind 4-1 but rallied to win on his net game, 6-4.

Jones got another 4-1 lead in the fourth set. Lovill rallied and took the sixth game after being behind 40-15, but he couldn't make it. Jones placements were working fine and he ran it out at 6-4.

The slight, slender Charlotteam was leading in the final and decisive set, when Lovill hurt his leg. Lovill refused to quit, although he did take a slight rest, but game as he was he was an easy prey from there on for Jones' placements.

Carolina And Gobblers Play Ten Innings 11-11

The Tar Heels and the Gobblers staged a ten inning show called the "Comedy of Errors" yesterday at Emerson nField. The so called baseball game was called at the end of the tenth inning with the score tied at 11-11.

No less than eight errors were chalked up, five of them being credited to the Tar Heels.

Cecil Longest started on the mound for Carolina but a five run barrage in the second inning sent him to the showers. Edwards, who relieved him, finished the game.

Billingsly, who beat the Tar Heels last year, started for the Gobblers but failed to last the distance, being replaced by Land, who was found for six hits in the four frames he worked.

The Tar Heels started off with a three run attack off Billingsly. Croom walked and scored when "Smokey" Ferebee blasted a home run to deep center field. Dunlap singled to center, advanced to third on Hardwick's error and Billingsly's wild pitch, and scored on Peacock's single to left.

V. P. I. went the Tar Heels one better in the second inning, scoring five runs on two hits and four bases on balls.

Carolina scored again in the third inning on Dunlap's mighty blow to center, which was good for the circuit.

In the fourth inning the Tar Heels bunted four runs across the plate. Potter singled to right. Powell, Edwards, and Ferebee each laid down beautiful bunts scoring Potter, and filling the bases. A pass ball by Hagerty scored Ferebee, and Dunlap scored two with his third straight hit, a double to center.

V. P. I. was given three runs in the seventh when a mixup in the outfield allowed three Gobblers to cross the plate. Anderson, batting for Hagerty, walked as did Sutton. A short single to right by Barnard filled the bases: Weede lifted a fly between left and center; both House and Peacock went after it, and as usually happens, neither caught it, the ball going off House's finger tips.

Going into the tenth inning, the Gobblers appeared to have the game sewed up when an error by Ferebee followed by two singles tallied a run.

In their own part of the tenth, Paxton, batting for Powell, walked, and advanced on an infield out. Ferebee grounded out, thus ending the game but Umpire Hubbard ruled that Land balked and the ball was dead. This advanced Paxton to third and he scored when Ferebee singled to center. Umpire Hubbard called the game on account of darkness at the end of the tenth.

Briefs

Paul Dunlap, the slugging first baseman, had a field day at the expense of Billingsly and Land. Paul got four for four, including a home run, a double and two singles.

Dunlap also showed the fans as pretty a bit of baserunning as has been seen around here in a long while. Paul went all the way from first to home on a single.

Dunlap, Ferebee, and Captain Potter led the attack on the Gobbler pitchers with four, four, and three hits respectively, while Nicholas starred for the visitors with three safe blows.

TENNIS TOURNEY WON BY VAN RYN

Davis Cup Player Has Little Trouble in Beating Sutter, 7-5, 6-3, 6-1.

John Van Ryn, of Philadelphia, won the singles title in the 13th annual North and South tennis tournament by decisively defeating Clifford Sutter, of New Orleans, intercollegiate champion, in straight sets in the final match Friday at Pinehurst. The score was 7-5, 6-3, 6-1.

Mrs. Marian Jessup won the women's singles title by an equally easy triumph over Mrs. Van Ryn, who was almost as decisively beaten as was her husband's opponent in the men's final match. The score was 7-5, 6-3.

In the men's final, Sutter failed to show the almost magical stroking he displayed on Thursday when he ousted Bryan Grant in the semi-finals. He found a harder hitter, and a cleaner placement expert in Van Ryn.

Nevertheless, the New Orleans lad had the first set 5-4 in his favor, had the session at set point, 40-love. Then he let slip by an easy volley from the racquet of Van Ryn, and went on to lose the game, set and match. That little slip seemed to be the turning point. Van Ryn had only to coast along while Sutter poked easy volleys into the net or sent them soaring over the

DUKE GRID COACH MAKES PLEA FOR FRIENDLY RIVALRY

Wade Summarizes His Impressions of Carolina at Freshman Class Smoker.

Meeting together for the last time this year five hundred members of the freshman class assembled at a class smoker Friday night. The main events on the program were talks by President Frank P. Graham, Coach Chuck Collins, Coach Wallace Wade of Duke, and Red Greene. Music was furnished by the N. C. State Collegians.

After a short opening speech, Ike Minor, president of the class, presented the class officers and committees, and the student officers. Following the presentation of the student officers a short talk was made by Red Greene, retiring president of the student union.

After Greene had spoken, Minor presented President Graham, who gave a short talk on "The Four Essentials of a Successful College Career." In his talk, President Graham stressed hard work, honor, social contacts, and athletics as means of getting the most out of a college career, and urged the freshmen to make use of their time, and to make the University a place in which students will strive to do their best. He also urged that the students become better acquainted with the faculty and asked them to develop the social side of their lives. The speaker concluded with a request that the students develop themselves physically and that they strive for sportsmanship in their athletic life here.

President Graham was followed by Coach Collins, who praised the work of Coach Wallace Wade of Duke. After making a few jokes which brough hearty laughs from the assembled class, Collins introduced Wade, who spoke on "The Value of Sportsmanship in College Life."

Coach Wade summarized his impressions of the University, saying that Carolina is the oldest state University in the country and the one with the highest standards of scholarship in the south. He stated that the freshmen by means of good sportsmanship should pass on its ideals, both in the class room and on the athletic field, to the coming generations of students. He concluded by asking that the University of North Carolina and Duke enter into their athletic contests with a friendly rivalry and that good sportsmanship should be allowed to govern all their contests.

spot for work, on his previous vacation here, when "Green Grow the Lilacs" opened in the city.

Based upon an old Indian poem predicting a night of sorrow for the Cherokees, the new plays deal with the tragedy of their descendants and the fulfillment of the prophecy in assimilation.

As in "Green Grow the Lilacs," the conventional three-act form has been disregarded and a succession of scenes almost free from the handicaps of time substituted.

Of the conquering and blotting up of the Cherokees by the whites, an inevitable result of paleface avariciousness and cruelty, Mr. Riggs says, "If this absorption had been complete, there would have been no Cherokee night, except the bearable one of oblivion—and this play would not have been written."

Graduate Club Address

Dr. Gustav Plessow, visiting lecturer from Germany, will address the graduate school on Tuesday, April 21, at 7:30 in the lounge of the Graduate Club. His topic will be "German University Life." This will be the second of a series of lectures Dr. Plessow is delivering under the auspices of the English department.

Violin Concert

T. Smith McCorkle, of the University music faculty, will present a violin program on the vesper series in the music auditorium this afternoon at 4:45. He will be assisted by Lilita W. McCorkle at the piano.

Concert Wednesday

The University symphonic band will give a concert in the music auditorium Wednesday evening at 8:15.

Guild Movie

The Guild production for today is "Ten Days That Shook the World," a Russian picture taken in Russia and showing the changing from the old order of things, under the Czarists regime, to the new under the reign of Sovietism. Many of the scenes were actually photographed during the Red revolution, and the feature is highly realistic. The national board of censors has stricken from the production all propaganda, but none of the original force and vigor of the picture have been harmed.

nor have such a large number been invited to a social function on the Hill.

Johnny Hamp and His Kentucky Serenaders, an internationally recognized dance orchestra which has just completed an engagement at the Cocoanut Grove, Los Angeles, has been engaged to render the music for the occasion. Commensurate with the rest of the program will be the original decorations which will be ultra-modern. The colors will be black and white in harmony with the formality of the occasion. The building known as the Tin Can, used for athletic contests, is to undergo a metamorphosis by which it will be converted into the most modern and up to date of beautiful ballrooms. The dancing space will be unusually large, thus providing ample room for the largest social event which the Hill has had.

Friday night will be the occasion of the Junior Prom. Neglected at the University for more than a decade, this social institution, the foremost in practically all of the colleges in the country, is again to be restored to Chapel Hill, April 24. Theron Brown, of Greensboro, president of the Junior class, together with Miss Alice Caldwell of High Point, have been chosen to lead the grand march. Brown will be assisted by John Phil Cooper, of Raleigh, and Miss Grace Boren, of Greensboro, and John Stallings and Miss Lola Collins, of Nashville.

Saturday night the Seniors will be most prominent. The dance that evening is to be known as the Senior Ball. Pat Patterson, of High Point, also president of his class, who will be assisted by Miss Madeline Thompson, of Chapel Hill, will lead the march that night. Beverley Moore and Miss Sarah Scott, both of Greensboro, and Chuck Ericson of Oak Park, Illinois, and Miss Laura Jones, of Asheville, will be the other leaders.

base line. It was almost pathetic.

In the Jessup, Van Ryn battle Mrs. Jessup had little real work to do. Mrs. Van Ryn seemed slow of foot and weak of wrist. She failed to chase very hard after placements that landed quite close, and seemed to be tired. Just occasionally she would unloose some real tennis strokes, and she certainly pleased the crowd when she did so.

Mr. and Mrs. Van Ryn won their semi-final match in the mixed doubles against Miss Marjorie Sachs, of Boston and Jack Wright, of Montreal, and on Saturday played Miss Virginia Rice of Boston, and Cliff Sutter, in the final. The final in the women's doubles and the men's doubles also were played Saturday.

The summary:

Women's singles—Final, Mrs. Marian Jessup, Wilmington, Del., defeated Mrs. John Van Ryn, Philadelphia, 7-5, 6-3.

Women's doubles—Semi-final, Mrs. Jessup and Mrs. John Van Ryn defeated Mrs. William Shedden, and Miss Marjorie Sachs, Boston 6-1, 6-1.

Men singles—John Van Ryn defeated Cliff Sutter, 7-5, 6-3, 6-1.

Mixed doubles—Semi-finals, Mr. and Mrs. Van Ryn defeated Miss Sachs and Jack Wright, Montreal, 6-1, 4-6, 6-4. Miss Virginia Rice and Sutter defeated Mrs. Jessup and Wilmer Hines, Columbia, S. C., 6-3, 7-5.

The head of the department of history, R. D. W. Connor, will address the sophomores Wednesday on the "History of the University."

At The Carolina

The program for the week gets off to a good start with Ruth Chatterton's latest, "Unfaithful," a feature production woven around the theme of marital infidelity on the part of a husband, discovery by the wife of the situation, and the resultant effort on her part to forget her unhappiness in a round of gayety and pleasure seeking. Miss Chatterton fills the main role, while able supporting characters are Paul Cavanaugh, Paul Lukas, and Juliette Compton.

One of the most beloved of comic strip characterizations comes to life in the vitaphone production appearing Tuesday, "Skippy." In "Skippy" all the host of Skippy's friends, enemies, and adult acquaintances are metamorphosed into living, breathing human beings and the connected story and action woven around them and their relationship with the one small boy make the picture vividly entertaining. Jackie Cooper takes the title role, while Mitzi Green plays the part of Eloise. Robert Coogan is Sooky (Skippy's pal), and Jackie Searl (the Sid of "Tom Sawyer") is the "'fraid cat Sidney."

"Kept Husbands," an original story, forms the latest vehicle for the starring of Dorothy Mackaill, one of Hollywood's favorite blondes whose many productions since the advent of the talkies attests her prolific ability. The story is woven around the theme of a rich-girl poor-husband combination. Joel McCrea plays opposite the leading star, and an able cast supports the chief players.

The modern language feature for the week, coming as usual on Wednesday night at 11:00 is an all-French talkie with an entire foreign cast. The picture is "Contre-Enquente."

Gary Cooper, he-man of the West, comes East in his latest, "City Streets," which is laid in a big city and portrays the lives of gangsters and people of the underworld. The characterization is a somewhat different role for the westerner; still it is well suited to those masculine qualities which have made him the star that he is.

Richard Barthelmess returns to the screen in his latest and another gang picture, "The Finger Points," which is based almost literally on the recent sensational discoveries made about the actual practices of a Chicago crime reporter who had for years been extorting tributes from gangsters in return for favorable news write-ups. Barthelmess is a news man who falls under temptation and finally degrades himself by aligning his journalism with the work of the gangs and living a double life. Fay Wray plays opposite the star, and Regis Toomey is excellent as the friend of the reporter who is unwittingly the cause of his downfall.

The program for the week closes with "Millie," starring Helen Twelvetrees. This feature is an unusual and absorbing treatment of a young girl's life, beginning with her in adolescence and continuing through marriage, disappointment, divorce, middle age, and finally old age. The production is handled with successful realism, and the work of Miss Twelvetrees in the title role contributes largely to the success of the picture.

better their records. "Sandy" Dameron and Brown hurl the discus; they are about the best in the State. Brown, Straus, and Chandler form the strongest trio of javelin throwers in the Big Five group.

In the low hurdles Slusser, Archie Davis, and Stanford are all able to hold their own with the best in the State; this is one of the strongest divisions of the track team. Davis and Slusser also run the high hurdles. The Tar Heels have strength in every division.

Duke has a fair track team this year. If Carolina were not in the state, they might have a championship team. Simon is Duke's big star. He is the best man in the State in the mile event. He also runs the 880 in good time. Brownlee is Duke's best man in the centry, 220, and the low hurdles. Lemons, the silent quarterback, runs the high hurdles and is fair. Hicks is the main threat in the 440. Flinton is the best performer in the 2 mile jog. Kid Brewer throws both the shot and the discus. Ripley hurls the javelin. In the high jump Smith is one of the best men in the State. Also in the broad jump they have perhaps the best performer in this section. Fulmer's mark of 23 feet 1 inch against Davidson is impressive.

Over in the Capital City the Techmen are singing the praise of Captain McGinn. McGinn is the most outstanding performer in the 880 run in the State. Wilson is another good man. He beat the best Carolina had in the shot division.

Stout is the best bet in the 220. Neil Paris runs both the high and low hurdles. State has a good man in the mile run in Ricks. Sam Gurneau, State's jack-of-all-trades, tosses the shot and discus.

Davidson has a brilliant runner in the mile. Brannon's time against Wake Forest was 4:38, thus setting a new college record. Fleagle and George run the 100 yard dash; Fleagle has done it in 10 seconds. He also runs the 220. McGhee, in the 440, is a very fast man. Brock hurls the javelin well. The Wildcats crushed Wake Forest by a score of 98 1-3 to 27 2-3; they were barely nosed out by Duke.

Wake Forest has the weakest track team of any of the Big Five schools. Edwards runs the centry for them, Fuller is the miler, McCallie the high hurdler, Greene the 440 man, and Dupree hurls the javelin. These are the Deacon's best performers. Dupree beat Brock to take the Deacon's only first place in the Davidson meet.

VISITING GERMAN TO MAKE SECOND ADDRESS TONIGHT

Graduate Club Will Hear Dr. Plessow in Smith Building.

Dr. Gustav Plessow, eminent visiting professor from Germany in the English department of the University, will address the graduate students tonight at eight o'clock in Smith building on the subject of German university life.

This will be the second of the series of four lectures he is to deliver at the University. He has spoken to the graduate students on the principal forms of style in middle English literature, a subject on which he is a recognized authority. His third appearance will be before the Philological club Tuesday evenig, May 5, at 7:30 in Smith building, when he will expound a new theory concerning middle English dialects.

He will finish up his series of lectures with a talk on the aspects of German life. This address, at 8:30 Tuesday evening, May 12, in Gerrard hall, will be open to members of the University and Chapel Hill townspeople.

Dr. Plessow has received his doctorate in English and will take over the chair of Americana at the University of Tubingen, Germany, next year. The English department of the University engaged him this spring to deliver the series of lectures, of which the one tonight will be the second. The manner with which he presents his material has won considerable popularity on the campus, and the lecture tonight is expected to draw a widespread attendance.

Brockman Will Not Attend Human Relations Institute

Fletcher Brockman who was to be the principal speaker on the Far Eastern question at the Institute of Human Relations, which will convene here May 3 through 9, will not be able to attend.

Mr. Brockman was run down by a taxicab on the streets of New York ten days ago, suffering terrible nervous shock and a slight concussion of the brain. He will be confined to the hospital for a month. No one as yet has been selected to take his place.

Margaret Vale's New Play

The House of Grief, Margaret Vale's poetic fantasy, which will be presented at an invitation performance in the Playmakers Theatre in the near future, is an interesting comparative treatment of maternal sorrows, one of the most important of which is that of the mother whose child is afflicted.

This important role has been assigned to Bess Jones Winburn, of Georgia, who has been taking work exclusively in dramatics here for the past ten months.

Reporters

The following newsmen and reporters are requested to bring their note books to Peter Hairston at the Daily Tar Heel office at 2:00 this afternoon: E. M. Spruill, McB. Fleming-Jones, Charles Poe, Alex Andrews, Saul Gordon, D. J. Olive, Ronald Kochendorfer, and Woodward Glenn.

Council Meeting

Jack Ward, president of the Interfraternity Council, states that the new council will meet with the old council, Thursday night at 7:15 o'clock in the Coop.

President Ward urges that each fraternity elect the best men possible for the council and have them present at this meeting Thursday night.

FACULTY MUSIC GROUP TO PLAY SATURDAY NIGHT

Chamber Concert by Stringfield Will Consist of Living Composers' Works.

The chamber music concert to be given by Lamar Stringfield, flutist, composer, and conductor, in the Playmakers Theatre next Saturday evening, April 25th at 8:30, will not only consist of compositions based on native folk-lore, but compositions by living composers.

With the exception of one composition, all were written by composers now living: five being native Americans. Mr. Stringfield says that he did not build the program with this in mind; but, in striving to choose an interesting and entertaining program, this resulted.

John Powell, a native Virginian and a composer-pianist of international fame, is coming here for the concert, which includes one of his own compositions, the "Hoochee-Coochee Dance" from "At the Fair." He is very much interested in the activities surrounding the development of folk-music into larger forms. Such an interest has drawn Mr. Powell and Mr. Stringfield, who also believes the distinct American music comes from folk sources, more closely together.

The program will consist of compositions by Mozart, Bove, Barrere, Hadley, Powell, Briggs, and Stringfield. Mr. Stringfield will be assisted by Adeline McCall, pianist, D. A. McPherson, violinist, Hugo Giduz, violinist, Wilbur Royster 'cellist, and the Faculty Chamber Orchestra. Tickets for the concert may be obtained at the Student Supply Store.

Phi And Di Bills

The bills which are to be discussed in the Phi and Di societies tonight at 7:15 o'clock are:

Phi assembly—1. Resolved: That the prohibition act should be modified so as to legalize the sale of light wines and beers. 2. Resolved: That the Phi assembly should go on record as favoring the proposed consolidation of counties in North Carolina.

Di senate—1. Resolved: That winter and spring football practice should be abolished. 2. Resolved: That the North Carolina legislature should adjourn without passing a revenue bill and return within two weeks in a special session. 3. Resolved: That all candidates for degrees at the University be made to qualify according to a certain fixed standard in at least four sports.

Infirmary List

Those confined in the infirmary yesterday were the following: Professor Samuel Selden, Charlie Gault, J. S. Bivens, C. L. Stutts, B. D. Maudey, L. I. Harris, Ovilena Culpepper, W. B. Figget, W. S. Thompson, and R. E. Orbaugh.

Johnny Hamp Won Fame Playing For Movie Colony In Hollywood

One of the most versatile band of musicians is coming to Chapel Hill Friday and Saturday nights, when Johnny Hamp and his Kentucky Serenaders will play for the combined junior and senior dances.

In the summer of 1922 Johnny Hamp's orchestra had its first real opportunity. Senator Edge, of New Jersey, planned a small informal dinner party for President and Mrs. Harding. The management of the Sea View Golf Club, exclusive country of Atlantic City, where the dinner was to be given considered several orchestras, then sent for Johnny Hamp. The managing director told Hamp that his orchestra furnished just the sort of music he believed would please the President.

That night seven young musicians outdid themselves to the compelling strains of fox-trots and waltzes and the President danced and danced. Hamp said "he was the type that danced naturally, tall and graceful and with a well balanced sense of rhythm. We could see that the President was enjoying himself, and he led every one in applause and called persistently for encores, then toward the end of the evening as he was clapping for an encore he gave me one of his famous smiles. A thrill went right through me. Needless to say, the President got his encore."

It was at the Ambassador that the orchestra made itself famous under the name of the Kentucky Serenaders. Starting his engagement at the Balloon Room in Chicago, society's favorite gathering place, the orchestra rapidly became society's favorite music, for in these ideal surroundings their music was exceptionally appropriate.

Following this engagement came a trip to Los Angeles where Johnny Hamp and the Kentucky Serenaders began to show the folks on the West Coast what real music was. They were playing at the Cocoanut Grove, at the Ambassador Hotel in Los Angeles where really fine music is truly appreciated, but the band had very little trouble in convincing the folks in Southern California that their music was of a brand entirely different.

During a six months stay in Los Angeles literally the entire movie colony had danced and enjoyed themselves to the orchestra's enticing music. The Kentucky Serenaders style of music is entirely different from the blary, loud type of jazz so commonly found in many orchestras. It is low, sweet, rhythmic, and if such a word may appropriately be used actually refined syncopation, yet on the slightest excuse Johnny Hamp's boys can slide into a tempo which equals the hottest jazz bands in the country. The orchestra is remarkably well equipped to satisfy the tastes of literally every type of people from the young university boys to the more sedate older folk.

Oklahoma Union Costing $600,000 Built By Alumni And Student Aid

(The following is the eleventh of a series of articles in the PRINCETONIAN describing the purpose, financing and success of university centers throughout the country. It is reprinted through the courtesy of the Oklahoma Daily.)

The Oklahoma Union, one of the most popular spots on Oklahoma's campus, has had a long and varied history. The project dates back more than ten years, but the building itself has been completed only since November 17, 1928.

In 1924, groups of alumni, interested in promoting a stadium and union building on the campus of the University of Oklahoma, organized a money-raising corporation known as the "Stadium-Union Memorial Fund." An intensive campaign among alumni students, faculty, and friends of the university was conducted and approximately $600,000 was pledged to the fund. These pledges were to be payable over a period of five years.

In the latter part of 1927, when it became apparent that sufficient funds would not be secured from pledges, the board of regents of the university, following the expressed desires of the students, authorized the collection of a student union fee of $2.50 per semester. This income and the proceeds derived from commercial operations under the direction of a general manager, are turned over annually to the Stadium Union Memorial fund.

The Union has had a rather stormy career. In view of its convenient location and somewhat lower prices, the commercial operations have taken some business away from the nearby campus merchants. These merchants objected and succeeded in putting a resolution through the state senate providing for an investigation of the union claiming that it was a "private organization" doing business on the university campus. The hearings on this investigation have been completed and the union has now been cleared of all spurious charges.

The building itself contains a large ballroom, offices and meeting rooms for various student organizations, a lounge room, which is at present unfinished but partially furnished, the alumni office, and the following departments which are classed as commercial: cafeteria, soda fountain, billiard room and newstand. In addition to the above, the university maintains temporarily six class rooms and two offices in an uncompleted wing of the building. It has now become the center of campus life and the common meeting-place of the university.

UNIVERSITY BAND WILL APPEAR IN GREENSBORO

The University symphonic band will present two programs today in Greensboro, under the direction of T. Smith McCorkle, of the music faculty. At 2:30 in the afternoon, the band plays at the high school and at 8:30 at Greensboro College.

YOUTHFUL CHECK FORGER APPREHENDED BY POLICE

Chapel Hill police yesterday apprehended and are holding for investigation a youth, alleged to be a student, who is said to be responsible for looting mail boxes in the local post office and forgeing checks here over a period of several months.

Junior-Senior Bids

Bids to the Junior-Senior Ball were placed in the lobby of the Y yesterday and will be there today and tomorrow. All those desiring to attend must obtain them either today or tomorrow. Only those juniors and seniors who have paid their class dues for the past two quarters are eligible to attend. Bids at the Y will not be available to professional students.

COLLEGES SEND DELEGATES FOR PRESS MEETING

Heads of News Bureaus Will Convene Here Thursday for Three-Day Session.

Approximately a hundred college publicity directors, representing leading institutions in all sections of the country, will attend the 14th annual convention of the American College Publicity Association, which opens at the University Thursday morning, April 23, and continues through Saturday noon, according to advance registration for hotel accomodations. This indicates a record attendance.

Convention headquarters will be at the Carolina Inn, where most of the delegates will stay. R. W. Madry, director of the University News Bureau, is in charge of arrangements. The University Extension Division is cooperating.

A number of delegates, including Harold Ellis of California, Horace Renegar of Tulane, Don Cresswell of Penn State, and Curtis Vinson of Texas A. and M., will arrive today. Others will come in Wednesday, and the rest will arrive Thursday morning.

The highlight of the three-day session will be the convention banquet and dance, beginning at 7:00 Friday evening, at which the principal speakers will be Josephus Daniels, Raleigh publisher, and Frank Graham, president of the University.

Duke University will entertain the delegates at a barbecue and brunswick stew supper on the Duke campus at 6:30 Thursday evening, and the North Carolina Association of Professional Artists, who are to open

Senior Invitations

Bound in blue felt-leather with a plain white cardboard cover and beautifully embossed with an engraving of new Memorial Hall, invitations to commencement exercises are now on sale at the Y, and Pritchard-Lloyd's, Ed Hamer, chairman of the invitation committee stated yesterday.

Contents of the invitations will include a picture of President Graham, the invitation, and the program of commencement. A picture of old Memorial hall, the list of class officers, executive committee, invitations committee, names of candidates for degrees, and an etching of the Old Well, will conclude the contents of the invitation. The recently made etching of the well is printed with the Alma Mater shaded over it.

The invitations committee is composed of Ed Hamer, chairman, Pat Patterson, and John Idol.

PROFESSORS' PAY CUT OPPOSED BY STATE SENATORS

Amendment to Appropriation Bill Provides Against Reduction of Salaries.

Sitting as a committee of the whole the Senate Saturday reported out the appropriations bill, with one exception. Action on that section of the House bill which appropriated $18,500,000 for the state's part of the public school expense was left open until final action on the revenue bill. The appropriations bill, like most of the major legislation considered during this session, is vitally concerned with the MacLean law and the Senate's effort to repudiate it.

The major amendment adopted by the Senate yesterday was that which made certain the intention of the joint appropriations committee, that the salaries of professors of the various State institutions would not be affected by the ten per cent cut which affects other salary appropriations. The amendment was sent forward by Senator Jones of Richmond.

Saturday's committee-of-the-whole session was long drawn out in that almost everybody had questions to ask about everything considered but not much change was adopted.

One thing is virtually certain. When the appropriations bill comes up on the floor of the Senate itself an amendment, or amendments will be offered to cut the appropriation of the University from the $800,000 in the Senate amendment to $759,000, and to cut the appropriations of the other institutions by proportionally greater increases, at least one of them, N. C. C. W., having been awarded a greater appropriation than it asked before the committee for the sole reason that the University's appropriation had been increased.

On the final reading the Senate passed the administration bill which protects the school appropriation—whether it be an equalizing fund or enough money to run the six months schools—from a horizontal cut. The same bill also provides for the issuance of general fund notes, if it be found necessary to borrow to carry on the operating expenses of the State.

Dance Bids

According to an announcement made yesterday afternoon by John Idol, in charge of giving out bids for the junior and senior dances this week-end, all persons entitled to invitations must go to the Y. M. C. A. and obtain their cards personally.

A number of persons have been attempting to obtain bids of others, and this action by the committee comes as an attempt to see that everyone gets his own invitation. It was also announced that students in commercial and professional schools who have not paid their bills with the University must wait and get their bids at the Tin Can the night of the dances. There will be a table for that purpose, and bids not obtained at the Y may be obtained at that time.

Band Concert

Wednesday evening at 8:15, the University symphonic band will present a concert in the music auditorium to which the public is invited.

The Great God Lucre

The empty clatter of the Chapel Hill church bells on Sunday morning is quite in harmony with this age of competition and advertising. All the bells clang at once and seem to say, "I am holier than thou—my goods are better than his. Come into my church!"

Reverend Harry Emerson Fosdick's new church on Riverside Drive as well as many others now have gymnasiums and social rooms, dances and bridges—all manner of attractions to induce people to go to church. The sermons, too, have changed radically, at least in urban centers. They must now rely for their effect on intellectual rather than emotional appeal.

The Puritans required only a place to gather, and their innate religiosity did the rest. Now we must be cajoled and flattered and be given playthings—get religion with sugar on it.

What's the matter with religion that it has had to resort to this method? Don't we have time for it? Are we less religious? The answer lies in individual pettiness, in narrow-mindedness, and in a failure to cooperate. A mountain preacher said, "I'm not a Christian; I'm a Baptist!" That remark typifies the spirit of contemporary religion.

As a result of this internecine controversy the great god Lucre is at last coming into his own, and the Church cannot compete with him. Ecclesiastics have scorned him for centuries and have never acceded him the power that was really his. It is amusing to note that for countless years, in spite of the scorn and contempt of the narrowly religious, Lucre's throne has remained secure, and he sits complacently watching the rise and fall of many theologies, knowing that whatever other god the people may worship they all pay homage to him.—A. J. S.

Taxation

In the forefront among topics of legislative concern at present is the subject of taxation. This state, Georgia, and many another have been engaged for the past few months in wrestling with this weighty problem. Revenue from every conceivable source is advocated or opposed, according to the particular interests of various groups. Sales taxes, taxes on income, property, corporations, inheritance, luxuries, specific commodities such as gasoline, and innumerable others have come in for their share of discussion and analysis.

Some would tax stock held in "foreign" corporations by individuals, but since the franchise and the corporation itself are subject to governmental levies, cries of "double taxation" are inevitably raised in answer to this suggestion. Others would increase the income tax rate, were it not that experience shows this measure usually defeats its own end by causing wealthy individuals to incorporate, invest in non-taxable securities, form trusts funds, or move out of the state.

Energetic support is usually found for any suggestion for deriving revenue from certain industries fortunate and well-managed enough to survive the present depression. This plan generally assumes the name of a "luxury tax," but is open to the criticism that it is preferential or ununiform. Certainly it seems unreasonable to demand that a tobacco company, paying already ten cents out of every fifteen cent package of cigarettes either to the state or federal government, should contribute further to the expenses of administration. Even the gasoline tax, so called, is in reality a tariff, since it is not paid equally by all citizens, but only by those using the roads—not, indeed, an inequitable situation, but one which prevents its being a true taxing medium, whereby funds for carrying on all departments of government may be derived.

Inevitably some method of acquiring money for the expenses of government must be decided upon. Admitting the disadvantages attaching to each system of accomplishing this, nevertheless there is no avoiding the conclusion that one or more must be chosen. The obvious and adequate solution to a major portion of the problem seems to have been relegated to the background in most discussions of the question. Why not follow the procedure of any successful business, and compute first the amount possible to be collected, then, and then only, how it can be allocated to the best interests and advantage of the state as a whole? The present custom of appropriating enormous amounts without considering where or how the money is to be raised for administration is clearly illogical and, we believe, the principle cause of unbalanced budgets, huge state deficits, and quarreling over methods of taxation.—J. M. L.

Espana Nueva

With the abdiction of King Alphonso and the fall of the House of Bourbon, the royalist regime in Spain, together with all its attendant splendor and tradition, has come to an end. Everywhere onlookers are sentimentally bewailing the Republican rashness which cost the country its genial monarch and nonchalant statesman, Alphonso XIII. But those who extend all their sympathy to the monarchists are not fully cognizant of the facts. There has been very little true nobility in the House of Bourbon since it took the throne in 1700. Along with its inherent physical and mental weaknesses, it has carried an unscrupulousness in conduct which has always been a baneful influence on Spanish government. Those in power have had principally their own ends in view; the people have been victimized, dazzled by the show and pomp of royalty.

The fact that the country was overwhelmingly opposed to the Royalists was, however, a great surprise to those in power. It had been generally acknowledged that the urban centers were Republican, but the country districts had been considered monarchist strongholds. When, as a result of the popular election, quite the contrary was found to be true, Alphonso, lacking his people's sympathy, in danger even of his life, had no course but abdication.

It will be remarked by the many, who doubt the adaptability of the Spanish people to self-government, that the present government cannot help but follow in the steps of its short lived predecessor of 1868. This might be a sound argument but for one fact—that Spain seems to have now, for the first time in over 400 years, a political ideal divorced from personal gain. The country is certainly in full accord with its governing body, and, according to report, Zamora and his cabinet have at heart only the welfare of the nation.

Several things augur well for the success of the new Spain. First of these is its projected union with Catalonia,—perhaps, in the future, with Portugal. The resultant Spanish Federation would have a most beneficial effect. Second is the esteem it will regain in the eyes of the South American countries, long estranged from Spain because of their hatred for the Bourbon dynasty.

The new Spanish Federation deserves recognition and support from all nations founded on similar principles of popular sovereignty.—Princetonian.

Y Cabinets Merge

Last night the old sophomore cabinet of the Y.M.C.A. merged into the junior-senior cabinet. At this meeting the new president of the Y, "Pardner" James, presided for the first time. The old freshman council also went out of existence, merging into the sophomore cabinet.

By Ralph Westerman
(Playmakers Reading, Lynn Riggs, "The Cherokee Night")

The American Indian has furnished material for countless stories and dramas. Practically all of this literature has been rank and inartistic propaganda, with little or no psychological insight or spiritual symbolism. Lynn Riggs, however, in his latest play, The Cherokee Night, has created a drama that deals largely with the influences of inter-racial traits upon the descendents of the Cherokee Indians.

There are seven scenes in the play. One intermission, between scenes four and five, supplies the only definite break in the episodic tragedy. Each scene melts into the succeeding one with the smoothness and rhythm of a fade-out.

In the first episode one is introduced to a group of characters who represent the decadent qualities of the half-breed Indian. An old man comes upon the scene—a shadow from the past, whose half-crazed speeches are inspired by the evident deterioration of a once proud and powerful tribe. Further episodes picture the backgrounds of these personalities. We see two of them in prison, the man accused of murder, the woman, a prostitute, now turned "stool-pigeon." Another scene depicts three boys in fearful search of a negro criminal. In this episode, particularly Mr. Riggs convinces with his keen insight into the boys primitive natures. At the close of the episode a half-naked negro appears in the background—a stark and compelling figure, the eternal symbol of a naively lustful domination.

An episode in the tabernacle, as yet undeveloped, promises to be one of the most searching incidents of the drama. Here one of the characters seeks spiritual enlightment and he is offered a shabby substitute. The last scene deals with the ancestors of the characters who were introduced in scene one. Only then is the audience allowed to see the chaotic and bestial undercurrents that converged to create the emotional lives of Bee and Hutch and Gar, the half-breeds of the play.

There is a cool impersonality about The Cherokee Night that distinguishes it from the "Vanishing American" type of literature. One does not have to be interested in Indians in order to respond to Mr. Riggs' drama. Each episode is a unit in itself, and yet each unit contributes to an emotional design supported by dramatic continuity rather than chronological sequence.

With apologies to nobody

To one who strutted out in print with curses
On free comodities and empty purses:
A co-ed craves to say there must be many
Who admit the joys of having not a penny.
To wit: the poor so great a number be
That misery has lots of company.
When wealthy folk go strutting out of town
For week-ends, never think we paupers frown
And curse our fate. Ah no—we never hope
For more than a cigarette or just a dope
And also in the big-domed library.
Are reconciled to humble poverty.
And also i nthe big-domed library.
That vast Pierian stream flows ever free
And we insolvent folk perforce must choose
Intoxicating books instead of booze.
Expensive magazines we cannot buy
And so we patriotically try
To satisfy ourselves with what we may
From Yarborough's little Tar Heel day by day.
Oh, many are the other compensations
From getting few pecuniary donations.
And if you'd like to hear them, drop around
And get the low-down on the ones we've found.
But one best answer to that "pome" of Wexie's
Is this: we paupers pay no income taxes!

Heels Meet Deacons To Open Big Five Season

Wake Forest Boasts Wins Over Durham and Raleigh; Previously Beaten by State, Duke and Guilford.

The Carolina Tar Heels journey to Wake Forest this afternoon to engage the Demon Deacons in their first Big Five game of the season. The Heels were scheduled to meet Davidson in Greensboro Easter Monday but the game was called off on account of rain.

The Deacons have played two Big Five tilts this season, dropping games to both State and Duke. Wake Forest also has dropped two games to the Guilford Quakers, but boast wins over professional rivals in the Piedmont League.

The Heels boast a record of seven wins against losses to V. P. I. and Washington and Lee and ties with V. M. I. and V. P. I. The Carolina men have just returned from a six game trip to Virginia and Maryland, bringing back a record of four wins, one loss, and one tie. With only nine games remaining to be played, all of which will be played on North Carolina soil, they will be endeavoring to finish out the season as successfully.

Shields, who knuckle balled his way to a 2-0 shut out over the strong Pennsylvania nine in his first start of the season, will probably get the call for mound duty for the Heels, although there is a possibility that George Hinton may see service.

Wake Forest's choice for mound duty has not been announced as yet. Coach Cadell's choice will probably not be known before game time, the selection depending on who shows best in the pre-game warming up.

The probable line-up for the Tar Heels is: Captain Potter, c; Dunlap, 1b; Wyrick, 2b; Ferebee, ss; Powell, 3b; House, lf; Peacock, cf; Blythe, rf; Shields or Hinton, pitchers.

COBB ADDRESSES MONDAY CHAPEL

Dr. Collier Cobb, of the department of geology, talked to the freshmen at chapel yesterday morning on "Chapel Hill Fifty Years and Back." According to Dr. Cobb, college boys had different diversions in the eighties than at the present time. "Knucks" was a popular sport among the students, and another favorite pastime was sophomores' running freshmen across town and back again.

Commecement was a memorable event. People drove their wagons and buggies from great distances and parked all over the campus for several days. The exercises took place in Gerrard hall and later in old Memorial hall. These places were always filled to capacity at commencement, and everyone attended all exercises and debates. Dr. Cobb closed his talk by advising freshmen not to be discouraged over failing a course, for failure sometimes does a person good.

The entire business is picking up. You ought to see what ours picked up.—American Lumberman (Chicago).

The Blue Imps walked off with a 20-7 decision over the Tar Babies yesterday at the Duke ball park. The winners gathered fifteen hits to the Tar Babies seven. The batteries for Duke were: Harkrader, Alpert, Glavier and Rogers, while Brandt, Frankel, Crouch, Matheson, Tatum, and Parker worked for Carolina. Adair led the attack for Carolina with two singles, while Harrington with three hits and Gadd with a triple and a single led the Blue Imps.

PREP SCHOOLS FURNISH FEW PHI BETA KAPPA MEN

How safe the scholastic world is for democracy was shown in an extremely conclusive manner when President J. R. Angell, recently analysed the Phi Beta Kappa elections at Yale. Of the fifty-one students admitted to the honor society there during this year but ten had received their preliminary training at the highly-rated eastern preparatory schools. Nine of the initiates were educated in middle western private schools and the remainder came from the nations public high schools.

"In other words," President Angell said, according to the report in the Yale Daily News, "the eastern preparatory schools that pride themselves on their scholastic excellence, and thoroughness of training, and whose graduates make up two-thirds of each Yale class furnish us with only one-fifty of the men who make Phi Beta Kappa, and the public high schools of the nation, from which come only one-third of all Yale students, furnish us nearly four-fifths of the honor societies scholars."

We are told of a man who fell asleep in a dentist's chair while having a tooth drilled. He felt bored, of course.—Punch.

TAR HEELS, DUKE MEET TOMORROW

Track Meet With Blue Devils to Have Important Bearing on State Title Race.

The first contest in the Big Five finds the Carolina Tar Heels in a crippled condition. The Duke-Carolina meet tomorrow afternoon will find Ken Marland added to the names of Bagby, Farmer, and Jensen. The Tar Heels have not been pressed to take the last four meets, but tomorrow's contest will mark the meeting of two of the state's foremost track teams.

Already suffering from the losses of Farmer, Jensen, and Bagby, Carolina will be further handicapped tomorrow by an injury received by Marland in last Saturday's meet. Marland sprained his ankle against V. P. I.

Carolina's chief bet in the 440 will rest in Lionel Weil, southern indoor champion. Slusser, Drane, and J. K. Smith are scheduled to run the dashes. Smith took a first against V. P. I. in the 220 and Slusser also tallied five points in the century.

The hurdles will find Carolina especially strong with Davis, Hamlet and Waugh. Davis will be the Tar Heels best bet to take first place, Archie having taken most of his races this season rather handily. Against the Gobblers, Waugh stepped out to grab second place.

Slusser will run against Brownlee, Duke's star low hurdler. Rip ran his best race Saturday, coming close to equaling the Dixie record set by Beard of Auburn in that event. Slusser will be supported by Gieger and Davis in both hurdles.

Duke will offer its stiffest competition in the dashes, the low hurdles, the broad jump and the two mile. Brownlee will be in the dashes and low hurdles, Frilmer in the broad jump, and Simon, cross-country star and state two mile champion, in the distance races.

New York Debaters Forfeit Engagement

After almost hourly postponements, the debate with the University of New York, scheduled to take place Saturday night, was cancelled when the northerners failed to appear.

The Carolina team, C. A. Shreve and F. C. Wardlaw, was to have taken the affirmative side of the question, Resolved: That the several states should enact legislation providing for compulsory unemployment insurance.

The next engagement of the Tar Heels will be with N. C. C. W. in a dual debate with that school on the first and second of May, when the same question will be argued. The Carolina team will go to Greensboro the first of May, returning the following day for the second part of the engagement. C. A. Shreve with F. C. Wardlaw and W. W. Speight with C. D. Wardlaw will debate for the University.

Carolina Tennis Stars Shutout Blue Devils, 9-0

Duke Netmen Take One Set; Three Matches and State Tournament Weeks Play

The Tar Heel netmen continued their unbroken string of victories with a 9-0 shut out over the Duke Blue Devils on the varsity courts here yesterday afternoon. The Heels had no trouble taking the Devils, allowing them one set in the nine matches.

Duke failed to even come close to win a single match although the No. 1 singles match, between Bryan Grant and George Rogers went three sets before Grant took the match, 6-3, 4-6, 6-3. Rogers' service was his strongest point in his second set win over the Carolina star. Rogers' service was working nicely when it worked but when it didn't work it was either a double fault or a point for the Heels.

Hines easily beat Myers, Duke No. 2, 6-1, 6-3 to win his singles match, while Hendlin, playing No. 3 in the absence of Yeomans, easily won the first set of his match, 6-2, but had a fight in the second set, finally winning 8-6. The other matches were easily won, Graham defeating Peake, 6-0, 6-0; Wright allowing his opponent three games to win, 6-2, 6-1; and Abels whitewashing Clarke, 6-0, 6-0.

In the doubles the Blue Devils were unable to win a set on the Tar Heel aces. Hines and Grant, No. 1 doubles, easily defeated Myers and Rogers, 6-0, 6-4. Grant and Hines won nine straight games in their doubles match to win the first set 6-0, and take a three game lead in the second set before the Dukemen scored.

In the second set the two national champions, playing their second match as a doubles team, took things easy to win the final set, 6-4.

In the remaining doubles Hendlin and Captain Graham paired to defeat Garber and Peake, 6-1, 6-4, while Wright and Abels paired to turn back Clarke and Fulp, 6-2, 6-3.

The Heel netmen play Wake Forest here today and Davidson here tomorrow before entering the annual state tournament which is being held here beginning Thursday and lasting through Saturday.

Next Monday the Carolina net stars will meet Sewanee here as a preliminary to the Northern trip which begins May 2, meeting Georgetown in Washington, D. C. On this trip the Heels will meet Harvard, Brown, New York University, Yale, Army, and Princeton in what will be the hardest trip ever taken by a Carolina tennis team and what is probably the hardest schedule ever undertaken by any Carolina team.

While no definite announcement as to who will be taken on the trip it is generally understood that the lineup will be: Grant, No. 1; Hines, No. 2; Yeomans, No. 3; Hendlin, No. 4; Liskin, No. 5; Captain Graham, No. 6; Wright, No. 7; Abels, No. 8.

These will probably carry the hopes of Carolina tennis fans in the state tournament and if the dopesters have it right, they will probably finish that way although Poe, of Davidson, and

COLLEGIANA

By THOMAS H. BROUGHTON

The honor of being the first to catch a football dropped from the campanile of the University of California campus, which is 285 feet high, was won by Tad Beckett, assistant freshman coach and all-American guard for the Bears last year.

Six players competed with Beckett but could not hang onto the ball, which was dropped by Coach Bill Ingram. Among those who have tried the feat is Brick Muller, former California star, who made an attempt in 1922 but failed. Later he caught a ball dropped from a 485 foot building in San Francisco.

It is not generally known that Knute Rockne once signed a contract to coach football at Michigan State. About ten years ago Spartan athletic officials negotiated with him to come to East Lansing and Rockne put his name on the dotted line, but later he was permitted to withdraw because of unexpected conditions which arose. However, the contract remains in file in the office of Director of Athletics, Ralph H. Young.

To the astonishment of the scientific world, Leroy "Sparrow" Mott, freshman football player of Denver University, proved beyond all shadow of doubt that bird food is equally nourishing to man is it is to fowl, by consuming a live angle worm.

The experiment was performed before several students for the nominal sum of one dollar. Several small boys, whose names, because of their youthfulness, are being withheld, also looked on.

Dr. Mott, D. O. L. W., (Devourer of Large Worms), announced that for the above mentioned sum, he, the human sparrow, will at any time visit your home and rid your garden of any insects. Special rates are given to those having grasshoppers, or night-crawlers, says Dr. Mott. (Cries of RIPLEY heard in the distance).

A new form of "racketeering" has appeared on the campus of Columbia University recently. Two youthful "gansters" hit upon the idea of forming a ping pong club to help pay expenses. A membership fee of twenty cents is charged.

An organization composed of varsity sports managers has been formed at Columbia University recently. The group call themselves the Ball and Chain.

George Kojac, captain of the swimming team, became the first Rutgers athlete in history to win the championship sweater with a triple scarlet bar on the sleeve. The award is emblematic of national college con-

GOBBLERS LEAD TRI-STATE LOOP

Getting a belated start last week in Tri-state baseball league competition Virginia Poly institute earned one victory and two ties to take a place on top of the heap.

Washington and Lee lost a game to Carolina and went from first to third place while the Tar Heels slipped into second position. Virginia lost a third successive game and was left in the cellar.

Three tie games were played during the week. North Carolina, playing V. M. I. in Lexington on Tuesday left with the score still deadlocked and Friday North Carolina State entertained V. P. I. with a similar result, and Saturday Carolina and V. P. I. played a ten inning tie.

CAROLINA CO-EDS HAIL NEW DAY OF FREEDOM AND EQUAL RIGHTS

After Long and Hard Fight for Recognition, Socially and in Activities, Co-Eds Finally Come Into Their Rights As "University Women."

By Joe Jones

It is believed by many that a turning-point in the history of the University was reached one day when a couple of co-eds walked straight between the eight men's dormitories of East Campus without invoking the shrill cry of "Fire!" from a single one of the hundreds of windows beneath which they passed. For as far as the memory of man runneth to the contrary, the presence of women in the male portion of the campus has invariably been announced by that resounding cry.

It is true that this ancient and dishonorable custom has been gradually dying out in recent years, that those who insist on keeping it alive have for some time fallen under the category of freshmen, oafs, and yokels; but not until recently, when the two girls accomplished what no women had ever accomplished before, did the co-eds of the University feel that their victory and freedom on the campus were ultimate and complete.

Today it is doubtful if there is a person in Chapel Hill who would care to deny that the co-ed at the University has at last come into her rightful inheritance. During the 35 years that have elapsed since the first woman enrolled at the University, the once-petticoated portion of the campus has waged a slow, determined fight for recognition and equality. For a quarter-century the co-ed made but few pitiful nicks in the solid wall of prejudice and rebuffal the men-students had set in her way. The last decade alone witnessed the visible beginning, rise, and culmination of her triumph. To one who has been on the campus during this period it seems that she has leaped suddenly full-fledged to equality.

Real Pioneers

But before looking at her as she is today, strong and confident, and ready with level glance to face Chapel Hill's most incorrigible misogynists let us drop a word or two for those of her number who patiently watched over coeducation's banner during the long, weary years when it lay dusty and furled. For their vigil is the true background of the modern co-eds' freedom and victory.

It was in 1897 that women were first allowed to register in the University. It is said of the five who entered then that the late Major Cain, Chapel Hill's immortal bachelor-mathematician, looked them over with a sardonic eye; but it was not long before he had to present one of them a medal for proficiency in mathematics.

This, however, had no effect on that army of scoffers, the men of the student body. They were already in full cry with a sentiment that was to last unabated for almost 30 years. Loudly they bewailed the encroachment of mere woman into what for a hundred years had been the classic shades and sacred precincts of man alone. They invoked the wrath of God on President Alderman and the trustees for inaugurating the desecration. They were convincingly rude and haughty toward the long-haired intruders.

It was not until 1900 that the student-editors of the college annual deigned even to list the women-students' names, and seven more years passed before their pictures were included in the publication.

So slow and cautious was the progress of coeducation during the following two decades that it was not until 1919 that the office of Adviser to Women was created in the University. The boys, however, continued to resent the feminine presence. The co-eds were made to feel inferior and out of place, and no collegian thought of asking a co-ed to a dance unless it was impossible for him to procure an out-of-town girl.

The Co-Ed Wins

But the beginning of a new era was at hand. In 1924 Spencer hall, the elaborate dormitory for women, was built; and in 1923 two national sororities had appeared on the campus. Most of the men-students declared their hatred anew when they saw a "Co-ed shack" being built with money which they believed should have been used for a badly-needed new gymnasium. But the co-ed concealed as mile and knew that she had come to stay; that with organization and a lovely new home, she was at last ready to make a final assault against the dubious walls of masculine disdain.

The fight was on! Armed with smiles and all the feminine charms at her command she went subtly forth to meet the enemy. With a dauntless swish of accordion pleats and a courageous rustle of georgette, she wrought deadly havoc in the camp of the Philistines. Of course, the battle was already half won.

Doors that had once been slammed in her face were by 1925 being politely held open for her, and by 1926 Carolina gentlemen no longer said, "If you can't get a girl get a co-ed." By 1927 women were on the very faculty of the University, and by 1930 Carolina men students had begun to woo and wed Carolina girl students.

Today the co-eds are a gay, dauntless part of the old University's life. Last year they organized a basketball team, and for the first time in its history Carolina was represented by women in athletic contests. Many of the co-eds are active members of the local riding club. They play tennis on the University courts, and in Battle Park, which is near Spencer Hall, they have an archery range of their own, with a flambuoyant target set artistically among the trees.

Spencer Hall and the sorority house across the street have become the mecca of the campus sheiks. From their doors visions in long evening gowns are escorted to the smartest social affairs in the college community. The most exclusive collegians no longer consider it bad form to select their dates from the ranks of the lovely Spencerians.

Proud to Be Carolina Women

The co-eds here have crashed other gates than those of society and athletics. In the Carolina Playmakers they have immortalized themselves both as actresses and playwrights; choruses and leading ladies from among them have become the chief drawing cards in the Wigue and Masque musical comedies; and co-eds have even been allowed to enter the doors of the Philanthropic Literary Society, an organization which had been a masculine holy of holies for more than a century.

There is little danger that the Tar Heel co-eds will ever lose what they have gained, for they are well organized among themselves. Every woman in the University is a member of the Woman's Association, whose meeting each week is in the shape of that most formidable of human conclaves, the afternoon tea. In recent years they have become more and more active in the bitterly-fought campus politics; and last Spring a co-ed was nominated by the University Publications Union Board as a candidate for an important office. Incredibly as it may seem, she modestly withdrew her name from the ticket.

Some years ago, at a reunion of the women who had studied in the University, these words were spoken: "It is certain that there is a bright future ahead of co-education here at the University, and it is up to us who have staked our claim on the frontier line to help push on into the fairer land beyond, always with this goal in view: that the same pride our brothers feel in being Carolina men may thrill our hearts at the thought of being Carolina women." No longer "pioneers in the cause of co-education in North Carolina," the women of today's university yet bear themselves as if they too heard these words ringing in their ears.

The Campus Calendar

Playmaker Tryouts

Try-outs for A. A. Milne's play, The Perfect Alibi, will take place in the Playmakers Theatre at 4:30 o'clock, tomorrow afternoon. This play, the last on the year's program had long runs both in New York and London, and is taking the place of the Forest Theatre production. It will be presented, May 14, 15, and 16. There are eight men and three women characters in this comedy-murder story.

Request for Old Clothes

The health department of the community club requests that all persons who have any old clothes which they no longer want please leave them at the Y. M. C. A. lobby for distribution to the county poor. No clothes are considered too old or worn for use, as they will be repaired before distribution by the King's Daughters and Mr. George Lawrence.

Rifle Club

The rifle club will meet at 7:30 tonight in the basement of the Alumni building.

Education Seniors

All seniors in the school of education who expect to graduate in June, are requested to make application at once for their degrees by calling at 127 Peabody.

French Talkie

The foreign language feature for the week, to be shown, as usual, tomorrow night at 11:00, is a French production, "La Nuit de Mariage." The picture is entirely in French and has a foreign cast.

Senior Invitations

Senior invitations will be on sale Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday of this week in the Y and at Pritchard-Lloyd's, at chapel period and from 3:00 to 5:00 in the afternoon.

Mrs. Valentine to Conduct Community Club Program

At a meeting of the literature department of the Community Club, which will take place this evening at eight o'clock, in the social rooms of the Methodist church, Mrs. J. M. Valentine will review the second and third volumes of The Ring of the Lowanskolds, by Selma Lagerof.

Birth Announcement

Mr. and Mrs. F. P. Brooks announce the birth of a son, April 19, in Duke hospital, Durham. Both mother and son are doing nicely.

Miss Reeme Moore

Besides being president of the Women's Association for this past school year Reeme Moore has just recently been elected to Phi Beta Kappa, honorary scholarship fraternity.

MINNESOTA GETS HUGE SLASH IN APPROPRIATIONS

Lopping $1,200,000 from the maintenance appropriations for the University for the coming biennium as approved by the house of representatives, members of the senate finance committee last night reduced the funds to the amount given the University for the past two years.

The cut reduced the house bill from a total of $7,650,000 to $6,450,000 for the biennium for the general maintenance. In addition, $75,000 was dropped from the appropriation for the state's share of the expenses of county indigent patients at the University hospital, setting the suggested funds at $300,000 for the two year period.

The slash means that for each of the estimated 18,000 students enrolled in the University during each of the next two years, approximately $203 will be allowed. This per capita appropriation is $7 less than that allowed during the past two years.

Added to the $3,225,000 provided by the existing amended bill for each of the two years will be an estimated sum of $426,000 for the current millage tax.

The cuts were made during a special meeting of the senate finance committee, held in an attempt to hasten the passage of the bill through both chambers before Wednesday noon, at which time the current sessions of the state legislature are scheduled to adjourn sine die.

The bill as amended probably will come before the senate as special business tomorrow, Senator Lewis Duemke, chairman of the University committee, said.

Approval by the senate of the amended bill is expected and then the bill will go back to the house of representatives.

Approval of the bill in its final form, after a definite compromise has been reached, will send it to the governor for his final decision.—Minnesota Daily.

UNIVERSITY BAND
MUSIC AUDITORIUM
TONIGHT — 8:15

VOLUME XXXIX — CHAPEL HILL, N. C., WEDNESDAY, APRIL 22, 1931 — NUMBER 151

UNIVERSITY BAND TO OFFER ANNUAL CONCERT TONIGHT

Symphonic Organization to Present Classical Program in Music Auditorium.

The University symphonic band, under the direction of Professor T. Smith McCorkle, will offer a program of classical music at 8:15 tonight in the music auditorium.

This is the yearly concert which the band presents each spring. It is composed of members selected from the entire band, which also includes the athletic organization. The band is somewhat larger this year than it has been formerly. The soloists are: James C. Pfohl, cornetist; Walter C. Prescott, bassoonist; Thor M. Johnson, violinist; and Mrs. T. Smith McCorkle, pianist.

The program will consist of eleven selections from the classical composers.

Prelude from "Suite Anciennе," opus 108, Henry Hadley; Overture, "La Donna del Lago," Rossini; "Sounds from the Hudson," Clarke; "Serenade Roccoco," Meyer-Helmund; "In the Tavern," Adolf Jensen; "Les Adieux," Sarsate; "March of the Dwarfs," Grieg; "Under the Spanish Flag," from the "Cumberland Suite," Sousa; "Polonaise, theme with variations," Wieschendorff; Overture from "Eastern World," Chenette; "Nero, the Burning of Rome," Colby.

Commencement Invitations

Senior invitations will be given out today, Thursday, and Friday at chapel period and this afternoon between the hours of three and four o'clock. These may be secured at both the Y and Pritchard-Lloyd.

Invitations for the Senior Prom may be secured at the Y at the same times Thursday.

"Frame-Ups" Control As Frosh Y Elects

The largest attendance of freshmen friendship councilmen of the year assembled in Gerrard hall Monday night for the purpose of electing officers for the sophomore Y. M. C. A. cabinet. Over one hundred men were present; but as so much time was required, many left before the meeting was over.

Politics entered into this election with three frame-ups. Because of the three checkings of the roll, two hours were needed to complete the meeting. Edwin Lanier, adviser to the council, and President McLeod who were presiding, had their hands full keeping the group under control.

The election results came as a surprise to the majority of persons present. The following men were elected as officers for the sophomore cabinet: president, John Acee; vice-president, Alan Smith; secretary, Ed Michaels; and treasurer, John B. Brown.

BOOK COLLECTION DISPLAYED HERE

Library Exhibits Fifty Volumes Selected for High Standard Of Design.

Fifty outstanding books of the year, now on display in the library, may be seen until May 4. These books were chosen by the American Institute of Graphic Arts on the basis of their typographical excellence.

This collection was displayed February at the New York public library and was then sent on a tour of fifty libraries and museums of the United States. It was sent here from the University of Pennsylvania and will later go to Yale.

The books were selected from five hundred volumes submitted by one hundred and forty publishers, private presses, college presses, book clubs and printers.

HUGE TIN CAN IS CONVERTED INTO NOVEL BALLROOM

Elaborate Decorations in Modernistic Design Executed for Junior-Senior Ball.

The monstrous Tin Can which has been the scene of Southern Conference indoor track meets, exciting basketball games, hard fought wrestling and boxing matches, this year's registration for classes, and beautiful flower shows, will be converted into a huge ballroom, the nights of April 24 and 25, when the Junior-Senior Ball will take place.

The rafters which have echoed with referee's whistles and the cheers of the contesting groups will ring with a new note. Four hundred social leaders and their wives have been invited. Invitations have already been mailed throughout the South to hundreds of beautiful young women who will act as pardners for the young men of both classes.

For the occasion of the dances special designs were procured in New York which will be executed by R. C. Greene and Mayne Albright. The colors will be black and white to stress the strict formality of the affair. The dancing space will be cut off from the rest of the hall by a solid wall of fluted paper which will be arranged in cubistic panels. This space will be entered through a flower garden lit by black and white lanterns. Official chaperons will be seated in de-luxe boxes. The orchestra will play from a stage centrally located at one side of the floor, and behind the stage will be a large shell to reflect the music. The ceiling will be covered with billowing paper. From the center of the ceiling a large crystal ball will be suspended, upon which colored lights from the four corners of the room will be played, and which will be rotated in order to break the light into myriads of tiny particles.

At the far end of the building, a tea garden set in natural surroundings with shrubs and trees, and tables and benches will provide refreshments for the guests.

Freshmen Told Of Infirmary's History

Dr. Eric A. Abernethy, University physician, speaking at freshman chapel yesterday, told the story of the growth of the infirmary since its establishment twenty-five years ago until the present time. The original infirmary was built about twenty-five years ago near the center of the campus. Another infirmary was erected in 1910, which was a wooden structure containing twenty-four beds. It had one negro man for a nurse.

After the war in 1918 there was much agitation for a new building, and the present infirmary was erected. This is said to be the best planned college infirmary in the United States and is modeled on the plan of the British hospitals, with several small units containing four beds each.

Dr. Abernethy stated that a case of every known disease had been confined to the University infirmary at some time or other. He urged the students to take a sane and healthy view of life and life's problems, and closed his talk by advising them to report illness to the infirmary at once.

STATE'S ARTISTS EXHIBITION WILL OPEN TOMORROW

Chapel Hill Will Entertain Many Notables in First Professional Art Exhibit.

The first exhibition to be given by the North Carolina Association of Professional Artists will open here tomorrow and continue for eleven days.

Arrangements are being made by Mrs. Mary Graves Rees, president of the association, who has announced that the hours will be: mornings, 11 to 1; afternoons, 2:30 to 5:30 (except Friday, April 24); evenings, 7:30 to 9. Admission free.

Only the work of members of the association is eligible for the exhibit. Native-born artists of artists working in the state are eligible for membership, and candidates must be submitted to the association's jury. Isabelle Bowen, of Raleigh, is secretary-treasurer of the organization.

Among the exhibitors will be Elliott Daingerfield, Charles Baskerville, and Miss Mabel Pugh, all of New York; Mrs. Hope Chamberlain; Frances Spright, of the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts; Louis Vorhees, of High Point; Isabelle Bowen, Mrs. Ruth Moore, Miss Mary Tillery, and James McLean, of Raleigh; Clement Strudwick, of Hillsboro; and William Steene and Mary deB. Graves, of Chapel Hill. There will be others whose names are not yet listed.

The association, assisted by the Community Club, with Mrs. W. S. Bernard as hostess, will give a tea for the delegates to the convention of the American College Publicity Association Friday afternoon at 4 o'clock. The Community Club will have a hostess at the exhibition to welcome visitors and to answer questions.

All who attend the exhibition are invited to attend a vesper organ concert which will be given at 4:45 Sunday afternoon, the 26th, by Nelson O. Kennedy, of the University's music department, assisted by the University Symphony Orchestra. Other musical programs, now being arranged, will be announced.

The Rockingham Booklover's Club will come to the exhibition one day, and clubs from other towns will be welcomed.

MEDICAL ALUMNI WILL CONVENE AT LUNCHEON TODAY

The medical unit of the General Alumni association of the University will meet at luncheon today in the Washington Duke hotel, Durham, at one o'clock. This will take place as a part on the program of the meeting of the North Carolina Medical association, which began its activities in Durham Monday with the dedication of the new medical building at Duke University.

Dr. Frank P. Smith, '10, of Charlotte, president of the University of North Carolina unit, will preside at the luncheon. Around one hundred and twenty-five alumni are expected to attend, judging from the success at the meeting last year, which was inaugurated at Pinehurst.

Dr. J. G. Murphy, '01, president of the North Carolina medical society, is also an alumnus of the University.

Lawyers Round Up Cowboy Professor

Professor Patrick Henry Winston, when he arrived late at the law building to instruct his class in mortgages, was attired in a sporty cowboy suit of some antiquity, and a red bandana kerchief which did not quite conceal his need of a shave. He clattered up to the steps of Manning hall in a delapidated old buggy drawn by a mangy pony, which he parked in the rear of the law building. This strange assemblage would have been left in the front, but Miss Ione Post wrathfully intervened.

At the end of the instruction in mortgages—a very learned and erudite performance — Professor Winston, accompanied by Professor Millard Sheridan Breckenridge, toured in state to Pritchard-Lloyd's drug store to recuperate from the trials of classes on peanuts and chocolate. They were accompanied by an admiring throng of students.

NEWS DIRECTORS WILL REPORT ON SCIENCE SURVEY

Colleges' Contributions To Science Will Be Revealed at Publicity Men's Meeting.

Historic scientific contributions of American colleges and universities during the past century will be revealed at the annual meeting of the American College Publicity Association which opens here tomorrow.

Louis C. Boochever, director of public information at Cornell University, has made a national survey of outstanding sciences developments in American colleges and will present his findings at the convention.

The highlight of the convention will be the annual banquet and dance Friday night, when President Graham of the University and Josephus Daniels of

HAZELWOOD WILL MAKE EFFORT TO REVIVE CHEERING

Cheerleader Announces Campaign Beginning with Tryouts Of Candidates Today.

By Ed Hazelwood
Chief Cheerleader

Since the departure of the justly-renowned Kay Kyser from the campus, organized cheering at the University has been steadily on the decline. Despite the heroic efforts of succeeding cheerleaders, there has been a noticeable lack of spirit in the responses to cheer leaders attempts to renew the old enthusiasm at the various athletic events of recent years.

The underlying factor behind this lack of cooperation is indubitably this feeling among the students that sternly forbids any display of school loyalty, emotion, or enthusiasm. But when this false pose—for it is nothing more than a pose—is analysed, all the hypocrisy of such an attitude is revealed.

Anyone would resent the implication of being untrue to the Carolina colors, but when no interest is shown in cheering the Blue and White team, what other meaning can possibly be inferred?

The chief cheerleader-elect hereby announces his intention of making the coming year a turning-point in the development of organized cheering at Carolina and hopes to realize a return of that old spirit of loyalty that has always characterized Carolina men in the past.

Often visiting teams and student bodies get very poor impressions of what the University of North Carolina really is by noticing the lack of enthusiasm shown in cheering. In addition to this unfavorable impression which may be given to visitors, those men who are upholding Carolina's name on the Student Musician Has Baby Grand Piano In Everett Dormitory Room

The University of Virginia may be "the country club of the South," but it will have to go some to tie this: two boys, a thousand dollar baby grand piano, an electric radio, a glass paneled bookcase, easy chairs, and numerous pictures and tapestries all assembled in one dormitory room.

A few months ago the occupants of the dormitories in the lower quadrangle were somewhat astonished to hear the strains of Beethoven's Sonata in D Minor, played on a piano, emanating from one of the rooms in the newest dormitory on the campus.

After a few hasty consultations, a delegation was chosen to investigate the matter and report back to the crowd of interested students the results of the inquiry.

The head of the delegation politely rapped on the door, but there was no answer. The music continued to reach the ears of all persons within hearing distance. After knocking once or twice more with no response from within, one of the boys became impatient and in quite vivid language explained what he would do if "this hellish noise doesn't stop."

The smooth even tempo of the music continued to float through the halls as if there were not the slightest disturbances within ten miles. By this time the quality of the music had more or less soothed the "savage breasts" and the students were beginning to conjecture about the mysterious music which apparently was being played inside without human assistance.

At the conclusion of the selection, the door was quietly opened, and the occupant of the room inquired of the delegation what they wished. So startled were the boys at the sight of the student who had calmly remained playing throughout their noise and howling that they could for the moment answer nothing.

The students residing in the buildings on the lower quadrangle, however, soon became accustomed to the strange fact of being treated to selections from the world's greatest composers at all hours of the day and evening. By the urgent request of his fellow students, the musical artist was prevailed upon to refrain from playing his instrument at such times as was found necessary for study.

In addition to the piano, this student had an electirc radio with which he amused himself by listening to the world's most eminent musicians, or in his lighter moments even condes-

Student Center Becomes Tangible As Memorial Reaches Completion

Ever since work was begun on Graham Memorial some months ago, progress has been steadily made until a very tangible vision of the future student center can now be seen.

Workers are at present setting up the stone portico in front of the building. It is expected that this part of the work will be completed in approximately two weeks. The stone is Indiana limestone of a Roman-Doric type, and the architecture is formal Georgian in keeping with the design of the other new buildings on the campus. Ornamental cornices will tip the eight marble columns in front of the building.

Plans have been made for a very ornamental lobby with a memorial tablet on the west wall. The exact inscription has not been determined as yet. The lobby floor will be of marble with walls of cane stone cement.

Within the building, work is rapidly progressing on the main floor. Two marble stairways, with wrought iron rails have been constructed at each end leading up to mezzannine balconies. Rest room and coat room facilities for both men and women have also been arranged here.

The ceiling of the main lobby is beautified by a number of large wooden cross beams. Three large chandeliers have been suspended for lighting facilities and various smaller side lights have been placed at different points around the walls. A large open fireplace has been built in the center of the north wall.

Twelve rooms have been planned out on the third floor but their exact use has not yet been determined. A committee has been appointed to decide the use for both the third floor and the basement.

The plastering in the basement, now in progress, will be finished some time soon. Two winding flights of concrete stairs have been constructed in the rear of the building.

The University architect, Mr. Weeks, stated that the entire job would be finished about commencement time. He was unable to give any information regarding the purposes for which the various floors would be used.

When the building is completed, the students will once again have a meeting center. With the gradual increase in enrollment at the University, the present Y. M. C. A. has become too small to act in this capacity, the result of which was the disappearance of informal gatherings of large numbers of students. Graham Memorial will again make these meetings possible.

Our Pornographic Record

Of the many records that we Americans hold the least creditable to us is our supremacy in the pornographic field. Germans, Frenchmen, and Italians have all expressed opinions that they have never witnessed such general obscenity and relish for the pornographic as in America.

A great majority of us take a sort of smirking delight in dirty jokes, obscene literature, and anything which smacks of the immoral or risque. Meretricious women are evidently much in demand, too, for there are almost a half-million prostitutes in the United States. The extensive patronage they enjoy is just another reflection of our secret sex perversion.

The question of sex in this country has become something to be evaded openly, but discussed and practiced secretly in a distracted form. Other countries which we consider less enlightened are not even bothered with anything like our problem of popular evil-mindedness. For example, in Japan, the brides-to-be are placed in so-called "tea houses," where they spend a period of about a year as prostitutes before they are considered fit for marriage. Whatever we may think of the custom we must admire them for not writing Smutty Stories or coining traveling salesman legends about something which is a recognized institution.

Among some savage tribes the women go about with their breasts exposed, but they are not necessarily immoral—the male members of the tribe take it for granted and think no more of it. Why cannot we be thus sexually indifferent and quit perverting knowledge of natural functions?

The trouble started with our severely moral Puritan and Quaker forbears, among whom all sex knowledge for young people was harmful and sinful. For youth there is no incentive like restriction; so these same young people got their sex misinformation secretely and set up a double standard of conduct—moral outwardly, lascivious inwardly.

We, their descendants, have inherited their narrow idealism, which we find it impossible to live up to and become more evil-minded all the time. Until we cease to think of sex as something to smirk and titter over and remove the esoteric hush which surrounds it, we shall continue to hold our odious pornographic record—to the amusement and contempt of the rest of the world.—A. J. S.

"An Old Spanish Custom"

Despite the fact that for several centuries man has proclaimed himself the master of his own affairs, all during this time he has been the slave of an institution which has existed since the establishment of society. Since the time man first began to wear any sort of coverng, he has been governed entirely by this powerful ruler—custom.

Today, after several thousand years, the power of this monster has increased infinitely. Today a man would not dare to go out into public with a costume of Sir Walter Raleigh without expecting to be laughed at; nor would he attend a swell dinning in the oldtimed horse and buggy. It just isn't done. Why? Simply because it is not "in style."

Were a man to attend his classes tomorrow in a suit of pajamas, as some have tried to do, he would be the center of amusement on the part of his fellow-students. He would be laughed at and called a fool. Perhaps the suit of pajamas would be much more comfortable for hot weather, but for the simple reason that custom does not allow it, people refuse to do it.

True enough that uniformity of dress and manners in society makes for a much more pleasant world to live in, but are we to be so entirely ruled by the power of custom that we cannot dress as we desire? Must we wear stiff-collared shirts to formal affairs merely because "it's being done?" Are we to wear all our clothes as we do just because everyone else does? Shall we be forever pulled around and told what to wear and how to dress by this slave-driver, custom? If we continue as we are now, we will, but why not start a habit of every man dressing for comfort rather than "style."—C. G. R.

Speaking The Campus Mind

Level The Wall

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

I am sure that I speak for more than one member of the faculty when I express thanks to the freshman class for their gesture of cordially inviting the faculty to the smoker which they gave last Friday. It is fitting that such a breach in the growing wall between faculty and student should have been made in the first year of the administration of President Graham, who has repeatedly expressed the desire that his administration may be remembered for the attention it has paid to the undergraduate.

Without neglecting the call of serious scholarship and the graduate students who come to the University in ever-increasing numbers, the University can well afford to retain those former ideals of the small college which encourage close relationship between student and professor. Small classes where student and teacher can meet on intimate ground, and opportunities for the cultivation of a closer personal relationship, social as well as scholarly, ought to be our ideal here, so that we may boast honestly of being a great university in scholarship and a small college in the friendly spirit which interanimates student and faculty.

Cordially yours,
A. C. Howell,
Associate Professor of English.

With Contemporaries

The Klan Invades The College

Eight students at the University of Kansas have formed an organization to enforce the recently adopted anti-liquor resolution of the Kansas fraternities. The Daily Kansas was informed of the new organization as follows:

"To Whom it May Concern:

"In reply to the so-called 'clearance resolution' passed by the men's Pan-Hellenic association and student councils, we, a group of eight students, with the cooperation of an outside group, are taking it upon ourselves to see that these promises are fulfilled.

"Among the student body we hope to gather sufficient information to rid the campus of its student drinkers and bootleggers and see that your diplomatic 'blanks' are not idle threats.

"—The Group of Eight."

It seems fairly evident just what "outside group" lies behind this society of noble vigilante. The Kansans call them "white-caps."

The spirit of the Klan is by no means dead. Whether or not this group is definitely connected with that organization, it is clear it is in its spirit that the new student organization has been founded. Nor is the Klannish spirit without others to carry on its medieval banner. We have no lack of witch-burners. If the Klan has for the moment retired from active part in the contemporary campaign against freedom, it has its torch-bearers among organizations somewhat more respectable at the moment. Consider the D. A. R. and its blacklist, the American Legion and its attempted exclusion of Dr. Einstein from the state of California, consider the Coal and Iron Police, the San Francisco chamber of commerce and its activities in the matter of Mooney and Billings.

Certainly this is no era of great advancement. We have got rid of the ducking-stool, but there are plenty of equivalents. We advise the Daily Kansas to get busy on the local substitute. —Daily Cardinal.

John Galsworthy Litt.D.

This afternoon, in the Faculty Room of Nassau Hall, Princeton University does honor to herself in honoring John Galsworthy with the degree of Doctor of Letters. The popular and respected Briton has shone brightly in the literary firmament ever since the publication of his first works, long before the War, and has distinguished himself in drama, poetry, the essay and the novel, all the forms of the literary art. His style has been called idealistic and realistic; his pictures of men and women have been both faithful and optimistic. There is hardly another such portrayer of the modern scene—the French critic Chevrillon has said: "of this essential England, of its various categories and types, noblemen, politicians, squires, priests of the Anglican Church, intellectuals, University men, rich merchants; of the ideas of duty, customs, and class prejudices which fashion ther souls and persons,

Mr. Galsworthy's novels are a most penetrating and methodical study, the more incisive because in secret he consistently opposes to the artificial, conventional and insular in the principles of English life the great elemental necessities which make man everywhere the same thing of Nature."

But what is perhaps the most gratifying aspect of today's ceremony is the fact that, in honoring Mr. Galsworthy, the University is again recognizing the place of men of literature among powerful civilizing forces. While recipients of honorary degrees for science and research are thus distinguished for their contributions to human knowledge, it is the influence of good writers that spreads this knowledge among all men and applies it to the improvement and beautifying of life. Since the honor associated with a degree can be preserved only by bestowing it with judicious limitation, we trust that, in determining future awards, Princeton University will remember the admirable judgment which is shown today.—Princetonian.

Politics In Prison

When prisoners, with their meager allowances, think enough of a retiring warden to pay him three-months' salary after he has been ousted without pay by the state, because he was alleged to be a Socialist, as is the case with Warden B. F. Van Dyke of the Oklahoma state penitentary, there must be considerable merit in the warden's policy.

Socialists, regardless of their merit, have never been recognized in this country. Immediately following the World War several men who were elected by the Socialist party in New York were refused their seats in the state legislature. This is directly opposed to the American ideal of democracy which is supposed to be a government representative of the will of the majority.

Warden Van Dyke has shown himself to be a prison executive of extraordinary ability. His many reforms won him the admiration of a class of men which society has cast out as being worthless and ingratious. In his three months of service there were many reforms of merit inaugurated. Until the governments of the respective states are willing to recognize the ability of prison executives, regardless of their party affiliations, there can be little hope for penal reforms.—Daily Kansan.

The Possibility Of Freedom

It has been argued that the spirit of a university must be the spirit of freedom if thought is to be stimulated to its fullest development. The question at once arises: Is freedom possible? If students are simply turned loose to follow their own inclinations and interests, are they not liable to make irreparable mistakes which they would have escaped had they been required to follow certain courses? Thus we are faced with a fundamental dilemma: on the one hand, compulsion smothers thought; on the other, compulsion seems necessary to make certain that students will know that which is essential to a rounded mental development. How can freedom and necessary authority be reconciled?

The answer lies in the use of a hypothetical imperative. Let the University say to the student: You wish to enter this institution which implies that you wish to pursue a course of study in some field of knowledge. You are given the liberty of choosing the field in which you wish to work. You choose such and such a field. Very well. Now, within this field, there are certain things which a well-educated man ought to know. Accordingly, the University must set certain standards, and to those who reach these standards, it will grant degrees. If, therefore, you wish to receive a degree, it will be necessary for you to prepare yourself to meet these stadards. The responsibility for preparing yourself is yours, and you may go about the task in your own way and at your own pace. The library and lectures of the University are at your disposal; you may attend lectures or not, as you think best. The advice and guidance of the faculty are also open to you. These things the University provides for your use, but it does not compel you to use them. Its only requirement is that before you receive your degree, you must show that you have attained the standards the University has set. The responsibility is your own.

In this way, by setting certain standards that are intrinsically reasonable and desirable while leaving the responsibility and effort for attaining these standards to the individual student himself, the dilemma is solved and freedom is possible under authority.—Daily Minnesota.

Luther Burbank, Infidel

Luther Burbank was one of the world's best known scientists, and the entire nation was shocked when he called himself an infidel one day, a few months before his death on April 11, 1926. Luther Burbank an infidel? Letters of remonstrance poured in upon him from every side. The man who had sought peace and quiet found himself in a bedlam of bitter religious war.

To secure peace, and to set the minds of the nation at rest, Burbank consented to speak at the First Congregational church in San Francisco, and the address that he made that day has since become historic.

Luther Burbank an infidel? He, who had spent 60 years among the plants and animals he loved, a disbeliever? This is what he said, "I love everybody. I love everything. Some people seem to make mistakes, but everything and everybody has something of value to contribute or they would not be here. . . . All things, plants, animals, men, are already in eternity, traveling across the face of time. . . . Let us make the journey one of joy to our fellow passengers, and trust the rest as we trust life."

That was the philosophy of the man who had called himself an infidel—a name that no other would dare to place upon him, and a name that was misconstrued by those who did not understand Luther Burbank.

His was a sound philosophy—that of brotherly love. His was the true challenge that swept his critics from their shocked acceptance of his statement that he was an "infidel."

Burbank has given something more to the world than his scientific discoveries. His religion of humanity has served as a guide to many followers since his famous speech five years ago. He believed that while immortality was the ultimate aim of the religion practiced by a majority of people, immortality was really secondary. He has often been misquoted and greatly criticized for his attitude.

Five years ago today, Luther Burbank died, and the questions that had troubled him were answered. No longer does the world know him, but it can never forget the influence of its "beloved infidel."—Daily Iowan.

Heel Trackmen Oppose Duke Blue Devils Today

Devils Possesses Strongest Team In Years; State Championship Rests on Outcome.

The Carolina trackmen will meet Duke this afternoon in a meet which will decide the dual meet championship of the Big Five. Duke will present one of its strongest teams in years while the Tar Heels will be weakened by losses due to injuries and ineligibility.

Bagby and Farmer are still on the injured list. The Tar Heels will be without the service of Clarence Jensen for the rest of the season. Jensen was dropped from school due to his failure to pass his academic work during the winter quarter. This is quite a blow to the hopes of the team, particularly against Penn State and in the Southern Conference meet.

Marland may be in shape to run the 440 with his teammate, Lionel Weil, against Hicks, of Duke. Hicks won second against W. & L. and placed third in the Duke-Davidson affair in the 440. He is also entered in the 100.

Brownlee of Duke has won every 220 he has entered this season. He is equally as strong in the 100 yard dash and the low hurdles. Brownlee, in his only hurdle race on a straight track this spring set a new Duke record of 25.6. He ran this remarkable time to Finkestein and Speer of W. & L. Slusser, Davis, and Geiger will oppose Brownlee this afternoon.

If Brownlee remains unbeaten in the dashes, Simons in the 880 and mile, and Fulmer in the broad jump today, the outcome of the score will be doubtful.

Simons will have his hands full in the distance events. He will have to tangle with M. Jones in the mile and Watkins, in the 880. If he runs the two mile, he will face Cliff Baucom, last year's cross country captain, whom he beat in the indoor meet. Besides Simons, the Blue Devils have Bradsher in the 880, Lewis in the mile, and Heizer, Flinton and Lewis in the two mile.

Lemons is the Duke high hurdler. The Tar Heels will be strong in this event also. Archie Davis, Don Waugh, and "Red" Hamlet will be the Carolina entries.

Ruble and Arnold will take care of the pole vault for Carolina. The high jump is expected to be a toss-up between Brewer, Smith, and Lemons of Duke, and Stafford, Hamlet, and Newland of Carolina. Brewer and Smith have both done five feet eight inches.

In the broad jump, the Blue Devils are exceptionally well fortified. Fulmer is doing consistently over 23 feet, while Colby and Brewer are capable of 21 feet. Brewer likewise excels in the weights.

The javelin will be another close event. McClarty of Duke has thrown well over 160 feet this spring. He is well backed by Ripley and Kagan. Chandler and Brown are entered for Carolina.

The Duke freshmen are well prepared for their return meet with the Tar Babies. Grant Fritz, Duke dash star, ran a 10 flat hundred against the State freshmen last week and will compete against Weisker and Higby in both dashes. The Miles twins won the 880 and mile against the Tar Babies in the earlier meet. The mile will be taken care of by Groover, of Carolina.

The N. C. freshmen are especially strong in the hurdles, javelin, and high jump.

The freshmen to show the most consistent for Carolina to date are Weisker, Higby, Nicholson, Goodwin, Glenn, Bonner, Groover, Sullivans, Mullis, Horney, LeGore, Dockery, Phipps, Meade, Gold, Blount, and Bullock. The Tar Babies have not been defeated this season.

SPURTS IN SPORTS

Jack Bessen

After four hours' discussion, the executive committee of the Eastern Intercollegiate Baseball League decided to continue its experiment of keeping the coaches off the bench during league games. . . . Kid Brewer, captain-elect of the football team, will be a three letter man this year. The Winston-Salem boy has already won his monograms in football and boxing and had rolled up enough points to assure him of a letter in track. . . . Governor Pinchot vetoed a bill providing for fifteen round professional championship boxing bouts in Pennsylvania instead of the ten round limit now provided. . . . Speaking of boxnig. The manly sport was abolished as an intercollegiate activity last week at the University of Washington. The purpose was to curb athletes from participating in ring engagements off the campus. However, the sport will be retained as an intramural activity. . . . The Athletic Council of American College for Women went on record as opposing competition of women in the Olympic games. The reasons offered were: specialized training of few, exploitation, physical strain, rowdiness and newspaper publicity. . . .

A good start toward a football team could be made by recruiting members of the New York University and Georgetown baseball teams. Five members of the catholic school are football players, while three of the New Yorkers would feel right at home in mole skins. . . . The second largest baseball crowd, 80,000, saw the A's beat the Yanks 3-2, Sunday. On September 8, 1928, a crowd of 85,000 saw the Yankees take both ends of a double header from Connie Mack's forces. The Athletics came to the stadium that day with a half game lead and left one and a half games behind. The blow that ruined the Philadelphia team was Bob Meusel's home run with the bases loaded in the eighth inning and the score tied. . . . Rabbit Maranville has, in his twelve years of major league competition, dropped only one fly ball and that was two years ago. Another one and he'll probably be fired. . . .

Carolina and Washington and Lee will be the only two Southern teams that will send a squad up to the Penn Relays next week. . . . The Brooklyn Robins, generally conceded to take the flag in the National loop, have lost their first five games—four to the Braves and one to the lowly Phils. The ways it looks now, the only way Babe Herman and Co. will see the series will be to pay the price at the gate.

Chapel Hill High Defeats Pittsboro

Pittsboro high school baseball team lost to Chapel Hill by the score of 3-2 in a game played in Chapel Hill, Monday afternoon. Outstanding for the local team was Joffre Ray who played center field. Riggsby pitched for Chapel Hill.

Henderson and Chapel Hill will clash in the first game of the championship series, Friday, in Henderson. The local team is in good condition to meet the opposition, according to Coach Brookbranch.

BRYAN GRANT IS RANKED AT NO. 1 ON TENNIS SQUAD

Hines Ranked No. 2; Morgan And Shuford Get No. 1 and 2 In Freshman Rankings.

Bryan Grant, National Clay Courts champion, will play the No. 1 singles position for the Carolina net team according to the varsity tennis rankings which were released this week.

Last year the No. 1 position was held by Yeomans and Hendlin, both of whom have held the state singles championship, while Grant held down the No. 1 position for the star freshmen team which decisively defeated the varsity in an exhibition match.

Hines, at No. 2, Yeomans, at No. 3, Hendlin, at No. 4, Liskin, at No. 5, Graham, at No. 6, Wright, at No. 7, and Abels, at No. 8, will finish out the regular members of the team, these probably making the Northern trip next week.

In the doubles Grant and Hines will play No. 1, with either Hendlin and Graham or Yeomans and Wright playing the No. 2 doubles.

At the same time the freshmen rankings were announced with David Morgan at the No. 1 position, with Shuford, Dillard, Dockery, and Bennett finishing out the first five, in order. Shuford and Morgan will probably play No. 1 doubles, with Dockery and Dillard playing the No. 2 position.

Varsity rankings: (1) Bryan Grant; (2) Wilmer Hines; (3) Ed Yeomans; (4) H. H. Hendlin; (5) Phil Liskin; (6) E. K. Graham (captain); (7) Lenoir Wright; (8) Lucas Abels; (9) J. Bailey; (10) F. Huskins; (11) B. Kendall; (12) D. Pachman; (13) B. Barnett; (14) M. Wolf; (15) P. Kaufman; (16) G. Reid; (17) A. Bloom; (18) W. Draper; (19) G. Blauman; (20) W. McKee.

Freshman rankings: (1) David Morgan; (2) Harley Shuford; (3) J. Dillard; (4) S. Dockery; (5) M. Bennett; (6) W. Harris; (7) C. Poe; (8) M. Carson; (9) L. Rosenstraugh; (10) E. Odum.

FROSH TO MEET DAVIDSON TODAY

The heavy-hitting Carolina Freshman nine will continue its Big Five freshman campaign this afternoon with a game with Davidson's Frosh, to be played on the Freshman field at 4 o'clock.

The Tar Babies, who played their first Big Five game with Duke Monday, have been having an exceptionally good season. They dropped an opening game of many substitutions to Wardlaw Prep, but downed Roanoke Rapids High, Winston-Salem High, Campbell, Danville Military Institute, and Mt. Airy High in a row.

Pitching selections haven't been announced, but at the other posts the Tar Babies will probably present to Davidson's Frosh Brandt at first base; Harry Phipps at second; John Phipps at short; Adair at third; Fisher in left field; DeRose in center; McIver in right; and Matheson or Tatum behind the bat.

Carolina Netmen Defeat Deacons By 9-0 Shutout

Continue Perfect Record, Allowing Wake Forest Deacons Twenty Games in Fourth Straight Victory.

The Carolina tennis team won its second successive victory over Big Five rivals in as many days yesterday afternoon, shuting out the Wake Forest netmen, 9-0. The Deacons failed to take a single set and won only twenty games, winning ten in the singles and ten in the doubles.

Grant and Hines, Tar Heel No. 1 and 2 respectively, won their singles matches easily and paired to win the No. 1 doubles just as easily.

In the other singles matches Hendlin, Graham, Wright, and Abels scored decisive victories over their opponents, Abels and Hendlin both winning by scores of 6-0, 6-0. It was the second day in succession that Abels' opponent has failed to win a game, defeating Clarke of Duke by a like score Monday afternoon. Captain Sonny Graham runs him a close second however, allowing Smith of Wake Forest one game in their match and winning from his Duke opponent Monday by a score of 6-0, 6-0.

In the doubles Grant and Hines had little trouble, allowing Griffin and Fletcher, Deacon No. 1 doubles team, three games to win, 6-2, 6-1. Hendlin and Graham won just as easily over Glenn and Smith, winning by scores of 6-0, 6-1, while Abels and Wright paired to win over Winton and Carroll, 6-4, 6-2.

Griffin and Fletcher won the two opening games in their doubles match with Grant and Hines but from then on were helpless before the Tar Heel's two national champions, winning only one game and that in the final set.

It was the Heels second victory over Wake Forest by a shut out score and their third over Big Five rivals by a like score.

Summary:

Singles:

No. 1—Grant (C) over Griffin (W. F.), 6-1, 6-2.

No. 2—Hines (C) over Fletcher (W. F.), 6-0, 6-1.

No. 3—Hendlin (C) over Glenn (W. F.), 6-0, 6-0.

No. 4—Graham (C) over Smith (W. F.), 6-0, 6-1.

No. 5—Wright (C) over Winton (W. F.), 6-1, 6-4.

No. 6—Abels (C) over Carroll (W. F.), 6-0, 6-0.

Doubles:

No. 1—Grant and Hines (C) over Fletcher and Griffin (W. F.), 6-2, 6-1.

No. 2—Graham and Hendlin (C) over Glenn and Smith (W. F.), 6-0, 6-1.

No. 3—Abels and Wright (C) over Carroll and Winton (W. F.), 6-4, 6-2.

INTRAMURAL RESULTS

New Dorms Continues Streak

New Dorms continued a perfect record for the season with a 7-1 victory over Lewis. New Dorms has won three games while losing none. New Dorms bunched hits in the first frame to score two runs and the margin of victory.

Cox of New Dorms continued his batting average of 1.000 with three hits in as many times at bat. In three games he has hit successfully every time up to the plate.

Scott, New Dorms pitcher, held Lewis to one hit and one run while breezing the third strike by nine batters.

Score by innings:

			R	H
Lewis	000	10—1	1
New Dorms	203	2x—7	6

Batteries: Willis and Crutchfield; Scott and Martin.

Everett Forfeits

Mangum received a forfeit yesterday afternoon when Everett failed to put in an appearance.

Best House Wins

Best House defeated Old East yesterday afternoon in the intramural baseball league 4-1. Old East scored a run in the opening inning but the Best House bunched hits for four runs in their half of the same inning to win the game. Harper, with a three bagger, and Crouch, with a two bagger, led the hitting for the winners.

Score by innings:

			R	H
Old East	100	00—1	2
Best House	400	0x—4	4

Batteries: Jackson and McCombs; Allison and Smith.

Old West Shuts Out Manly

Old West opened up on Laws, Manly pitcher, yesterday afternoon to get a 15-0 victory over the boys from the quadrangle. Laws was hit hard at all times, allowing twelve safeties.

Kuralt hit a home run to lead Old West's hitting.

Score by innings:

NETMEN ENGAGE WILDCATS TODAY

Davidson Favored for Second Place in State Tournament; Tourney Starts Thursday.

Carolina meets Davidson's tennis team here Wednesday afternoon at 3 o'clock, and Thursday the Tar Heels, the Wildcats, the Blue Devils and all other interested parties will gather on the Carolina courts here to begin play for the 1931 college championships of the State.

Davidson has a number of old men back, and should probably be favored along with Duke, just below Carolina, which ranks first because of such stars as Bryan Grant, National Claycourt Champion; Wilmer Hines, National Junior Champ; Ed Yeomans, State Champ in 1929; Hinkey Hendlin, State Champ in 1930; Phil Liskin, Captain Ed Graham, Lenoir Wright, and Lucas Abels.

The Davidson players to face Carolina here Wedensday afternoon, and to carry the Wildcat colors in the State Tourney, were selected on the basis of play in Davidson's spring tourney and are Captain W. L. Poe, Rock Hill, S. C.; E. Z. DuBose, Camden, S. C.; M. L. Roddey, Rock Hill, S. C.; S. B. McLean, Jr., Charlotte; D. G. Calder, Charlotte; and Charles F. Myers, Greensboro.

In the State Tourney beginning Thursday Carolina will offer defending champions in both singles and doubles, but oddly enough neither will be a favorite to repeat. Hinkey Hendlin, singles champion, and doubles champion with Phil Liskin, are a pair of star left handers, but Grant and Hines have come up on the scene as sopho-

SAUNDERS AND GRISETTE RETURN FROM ATLANTA

J. Maryon Saunders, secretary of the University Alumni association and editor of the Alumni Review, returned Sunday from the 18th annual convention of the American Alumni Council, which convened at the Atlanta Biltmore hotel, Atlanta, Ga.

In attendance were alumni secretaries and editors of alumni magazines from colleges and universities all over the United States and Canada. The Atlanta institutions of higher learning, Georgia Tech, Emory, and Agnes Scott, were hosts to the convention.

President Frank P. Graham was scheduled to appear before the meeting, but had to decline at the last moment because of urgent business at the state legislature. Maryon Saunders presided over the University division of the convention.

MEDICAL SOCIETY ELECTS OFFICERS

The aim of the medical society is to unify the students and promote a closer relationship between medical students, and physicians and surgeons in active practice.

Greensboro Will Be Scene of Contests

An important event in the state's high school musical life is the annual contest at Greensboro where young musicians from high schools throughout the state will gather. This event will occur tomorrow in the auditorium of the state college for women and is to be conducted under the direction of Dr. Wade R. Brown, dean of the school of music. This will be the twelfth annual music contest held in the state.

Tomorrow morning the two-day competition will start with contests for vocal soloists, pianists, and all other instrumental soloists. Following these portion of the program will be the mixed choruses, glee clubs, and quartets, both instrumental and vocal.

At 8:30 Friday morning the elimination events will begin for glee clubs, bands, and orchestras representing class A and B schools. The second day of the contest closes with a grand concert at 8:30 in the evening.

Director Brown reports that more schools have enrolled than ever before and that much interest has been shown in the coming occasion. Last year 2,367 students from seventy-three schools were competing in Greensboro.

Trophies are awarded to the aggregations from the different institutions that are victorious in the various events.

McNeill, Virginia Polytechnic Institute; William H. Wranek, Jr., University of Virginia; Fred Turbyville, University of Pittsburgh; John Maxwell, Lehigh University; and Mrs. Margaret Wellses, University of Tennessee.

A special feature of the convention will be a session for sports publicity directors Saturday morning when Coach Wallace Wade, of Duke University, Coach R. A. Fetzer, of the University, and member delegates will discuss the question of sports emphasis.

Donald Bean Visits Local Press Head

Donald Bean, director of the University of Chicago Press, is visiting W. T. Couch and other friends in Chapel Hill. Mr. Bean attended the Religious Education Association meeting in Atlanta, Georgia, and decided to break his return journey with a short stop here.

The Chicago Press has its own printing press and bookstore. Its net business is about $400,000 per year. As head of this organization, Mr. Bean is interested in problems of scholarly publishing. He recently completed a study in this subject for a national foundation.

At present he is interested in the cooperation of the divisions of university presses. This is the subject of his discussions with Mr. Couch, who has taken him to Duke to see the director of press there.

S. A. E. Fraternity Erects $500,000 Memorial Temple On Illini Campus

With the recent erection of a magnificent national building costing $500,000, the Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity is the first in the country to erect its own national headquarters. This beautiful structure, done in English collegiate-Gothic architecture, and located in Evanston, Illinois, on the shores of Lake Michigan, far surpasses that of any other fraternity.

The building, known as the Levere Memorial Temple, was erected in commemoration of S. A. E.'s who gave their lives in the World War, and was dedicated December 28, 1930.

Billy Levere, for whom the temple derives its name, was national secretary of the organization. Having given 17 years of his life to the work of the fraternity, he died soon after the war, during which he rendered distinguished services as the director of a Y. M. C. A. Hut at Neuf-chateau, in France.

The windows of the temple represent an outlay of $35,000, and were designed by a famous artist. A story of American history from the pre-historic times up through the world war is depicted in the stained glass windows in the second floor or balcony of the chapel.

A beautiful set of chimes is located in the tower of the temple. In addition to commodious office space for national executives and staff, the building contains one of the most complete fraternity libraries. Perhaps the only fraternity museum is located here, in which may be seen the first saxaphone ever owned by the famous exponent of dance music, Rudy Vallee, an S. A. E. from the University of Maine. In addition, there is one of Bobby Jones' first championship drivers (golf club)—as Mr. Jones is a member of this fraternity.

The Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity was founded in 1856, and this numeral designates both the street address on Sheridan Road in Evanston and the telephone number.

The selection does not pretend to be the fifty best printed books of 1930, but it does represent fifty of the five hundred books submitted which represent a high standard of design and manufacture in relation to the cost of the book.

This exhibition was organized to stimulate and encourage those engaged in the graphic arts and to focus the attention of the reading public on beautiful and well-designed printing. When the exhibition finishes its tour, it will go to England as an exchange exhibition with the English limited editions club.

This is the first time that the fifty books of the year have been exhibited in this state. The exhibit will be shown in two parts. The first part is now on display and will be shown until April 25, when it will be followed by the second part, which will be on display until May 4.

Every Package now a Humidor

CARRIZOZO, N. M., now gets Camels in as prime condition as Winston-Salem, the cigarette capital of the world. Camels that leave our factory are now wrapped in moisture-proof, air-tight Cellophane which acts as a humidor and keeps the natural moisture in.

Peppery tobacco dust and harsh moisture-robbed tobacco are what sting the tongue and burn the throat. Thanks to our patented vacuum cleaning apparatus and the new Humidor Pack everybody, everywhere, can enjoy the Camel blend of fine Turkish and mellow Domestic tobaccos in prime, fresh condition.

Switch to Camels today then leave them tomorrow, if you can.

AVERAGE GRADES OF FRATERNITIES HAVE HIGH RANK

Fifteen Above Fraternity Academic Average While Ten Raise Score from Last Quarter.

The Pi Beta Phi fraternity ranked first on the registrar's list of fraternity averages for the winter quarter, which has just been compiled. The next four fraternities listed in the leading five are, in respective order: Theta Chi, Tau Epsilon Phi, Sigma Delta, and Zeta Psi.

The next ten ranking fraternities are: Pi Kappa Alpha, Zeta Beta Tau, Delta Kappa Epsilon, Sigma Alpha Epsilon, Kappa Alpha, Kappa Sigma, Alpha Lambda Tau, Chi Psi, Sigma Nu, Theta Chi, and Chi Omega.

The remaining fraternities that had averages above the academic average are: Sigma Phi Epsilon, Delta Sigma Phi, Alpha Tau Omega, Phi Alpha, Beta Theta Pi, Phi Sigma Kappa, Phi Gamma Delta, Delta Psi, and Chi Phi.

Nine fraternities had averages below the general academic average of the entire student body. These are: Theta Kappa Nu, Phi Kappa Sigma, Delta Tau Delta, Pi Kappa Phi, Sigma Phi Sigma, Lambda Chi Alpha, Phi Delta Theta, Sigma Chi, Sigma Zeta, and Sigma Epsilon.

The first fifteen of the thirty-five fraternities were above the fraternity academic average. The general ranking of all the clubs was calculated with the general academic average of the student body as a basis. In these quarterly reports, the averages of graduate students

FERGER EXPLAINS CONFUSED VIEWS IN USE OF MEAN

Professor W. F. Ferger, of the economics department, discussed in a current issue of the Journal of the American Statistical Association certain misunderstandings of the nature and use of the harmonic mean. Mr. Ferger showed that much confusion exists even among statisticians concerning averages obtained through use of this mean, and then gave several illustrations of its correct use.

Ferger stated that it would seem to most people that, if three automobiles were traveling at ten, twenty, and thirty miles an hour, respectively, the average rate of speed would be twenty miles an hour. But the actual average depends on whether the automobiles travel a certain distance or a certain length of time. If the automobiles were traveling thirty miles, the average rate of speed would not be twenty miles an hour, but sixteen and two-fifths. But if the automobiles were traveling the same amount of time, regardless of the distance covered, twenty miles an hour would be the correct average.

Ferger gave other examples of the use of the harmonic mean, and showed its importance in economics in the determination of correct index numbers, taking into consideration in his calculations the relative demand for articles at differing price levels. He asserted that, in buying, we tend to purchase less of a commodity as its price increases. This is allowed for by the use of the harmonic mean in the construction of an index number.

Opening Speaker

Dean Shailer Mathews, of Chicago University, speaks to the first mass meeting of the Human Relations Institute, Sunday night, May 3, in Memorial hall. The subject of his address will be "A New Social Gospel for the New Social Order."

JAMES OUTLINES NEW Y POLICIES

Unity of Student Body Will Be Goal of 1931-32 Y. M. C. A.

F. M. "Pardner" James, recently elected president of the Y. M. C. A., in an interview with a Daily Tar Heel reporter yesterday stated his policies for the year. "Pardner" believing in the work of committees has drawn up the following plan: (1) reinstating of dormitory discussion groups, (2) revision of case committee work along the lines of cooperation with the self-help bureau, and (3) committee chairmans to make periodical reports of their work.

He believes that the Y. M. C. A. should act as an agency for helping to bring about a more friendly and cordial relationship between the faculty and students. To realize this cooperation, he plans to have the faculty and students meet together in discussion groups and in cabinet meetings.

His last policy is to reform the cabinets. Each cabinet will have a representative from every dormitory and fraternity.

A student administrative board was created for the first time this year for the purpose of investigating student opinions and to give suggestions for the bettering of the Y. M. C. A. on the campus. This board is composed of the following: John Miller, chairman, and Lee Greer, John Manning, Frank Hawley, Bim Ferguson, Billy McKee, Jack Dungan, Jim Kenan, John Acee, and President James.

University Men Will Go To Classical Association

A party from the the University of North Carolina will attend the meeting of the Southern Classical Association to be held at the University of Georgia at Athens, Georgia, from May 23 to 25. The party is made up from the department of classical languages.

The following men expect to attend: George Howe, G. A. Harrer, S. G. Saunders, J. M. Gwynn.

Infirmary List

There were but eight confined to the infirmary yesterday. They were as follows: George Weaver, R. H. L. Shlefstein, Arville Culpepper, L. R. Harris, W. B. Figgat, B. D. Coffield, Samuel Selden, and R. E. Orbaugh.

PROCLAMATION

To the Members of the Classes of 1931 and 1932:

Rumors of conflicting nature have been circulated over the campus these past several days relating to the Junior-Senior dances tomorrow and Saturday.

In regard to the bids. By an officially recorded vote of the two classes it was decided to issue bids beginning with Monday of this week. No person, regardless of rank in the University, who has failed to pay his class fees has been or will be entitled to secure bids or attend. In order to prevent the duplication of tickets, they have been stamped and signed by the persons to whom issued.

This has been announced for months as a formal set of dances which naturally require tuxedo dress. No men will be admitted at the door without formal attire. Attendants will be on hand to enforce this.

All but an exceedingly small group of the two classes have secured their tickets which number, taken together with alumni guests, will mean from fifteen hundred to two thousand persons on an available floor space which is hardly able to accommodate that number.

In conclusion, we sincerely hope the men of the two classes will thoroughly enjoy themselves, but due to the fact that large class dances are on trial here, as well as the large number of alumni guests, drinking regulations will be unusually and rigidly enforced by a committee of twenty-five members.

PAT PATTERSON,
President of the Senior Class.
THERON BROWN,
President of the Junior Class.

R. H. Winston Would Establish Chair Of Slang At University

By Bob Woerner

Robert H. Winston, class of '79, biographer of Andrew Johnson and of Jefferson Davis, has returned to the village for one of his intermittent visits.

Judge Winston was heard to remark the other day that he thought the University would do well to create a Chair of Slang, and he was nothing loath to defend his views on this idea. In his opinion the man who holds down this job will have one of the most useful chairs of the bunch. Slang he considers a variant, a lively interjection into a somewhat vapid tongue. If fresh and virile, slang is an asset to any language, he mainfains; though he does not agree with a visiting Frenchman that the song, dance and slang of the negro is the only contribution America has made to the intellectual advance of the world. How could we get along without Sam Weller and Tom Sawyer?

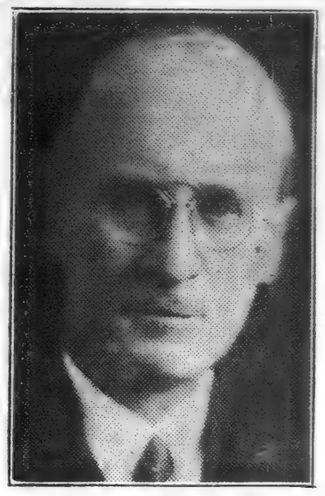
In recalling his days on the Hill, he tells of the time when the University extended no farther than an old wall a distance of about a hundred yards back of South building and there in the tangled wildwood the boys made their toilet. At that time only three buildings were habitable, Old East, Old West, and South. The New East and the New West were overgrown with grass and weeds, infested by bats, snakes, and frogs, and the faculty consisted of six members while the students numbered some seventy souls.

Amusement was scarce and money scarcer. Almost anything passed under the head of fun. Monthly fights were pulled off on schedule, except during college elections when they were daily. There was an old spring in the Cobb Terrace section; its waters flowing down a steep rock fully an acre wide. This was piped, and scores of boys as naked as jaybirds, enjoyed daily baths as they fought waterbattles and squalled like savages.

Life on the Hill was static in those days, and there were no week-ends off. Even Durham was a good three hours journey over muddy roads. And the University railroad and Captain Smith had never been dreampt of. Judge Winston recalls that during the four years he was a student he made only two trips, one to the Centenial at Philadelphia, the other to Hillsboro to hear the debate between Vance and Settle. This great debate contested the supremacy which the Republicans had held for so long, and the entire school went over to hurrah for Zeb Vance.

Death in college was so rare that they had to kill one student to start a cemetery.

Judge Winston thinks the completion of the Graham Memorial will prove a most advantageous step in the development of the University. He attributes the slow advance in the past few years, in part, to the fact that this building has laid useless, incompleted, and eye-sore, and a sign of decadence. This lack of support on the part of the alumni shows a loss of love for Alma Mater.



He seems to think there is more activity and actual advance on the part of the students now than in his time. But he also thinks most of this energy is lost motion. Men are running hither and yon not knowing to what end they are bending their efforts. In his opinion the work on the Daily Tar Heel is most beneficial to one intending to write. As he said to one of the English classes: "Write, write, write, and again write! Write a million words and then chuck them in the fire, and start all over again!"

Clyde Dunn Applies For Rumhill Scholarship

Clyde Dunn, editor of the Yackety-Yack, recently received a notice from the Harvard university scholarship committee, stating that he would be recommended for the Rumhill scholarship in the Harvard business school next year.

This scholarship pays $450 per year, and only one is given each year to a student recommended from southern states.

James Myers

James Myers, who is the industrial research secretary of the Federal Council of Churches, will be one of the main speakers in the industrial division of the second quadriennial Institute on Human Relations, which lasts from May 3rd through the 9th.

MANY GIRLS TO ATTEND DANCES

Work of Decorating Tin Can For Junior-Senior Dances Underway.

Everything in the village is in readiness for the largest affair of its kind ever sponsored by University classes, the Junior-Senior Ball. The Tin Can has been transformed into the most modern of ballrooms with an elaborate decoration scheme in black and white. A large crowd is expected to attend the function judging from the large number of invitations which have already been accepted. A partial list of the girls who will attend with their partners folfows:

Lena Jones, Concord, with K. C. Ramsay; Louise Middleton, Monroe, with Ed Hamer; Alice Houston Quarles, Charlotte, with Willis Henderson; Grace Boren, Greensboro, with John Phil Cooper; Agnes Pollack, New Bern, with Branch Carr; Rose Hamilton, Waynesville, with George Roach; Ruth De Rouen, Waynesville, with Fred Ferguson; Elizabeth Lorraine, Andulasia, Alabama, with Dick Barber; Evelyn Woods, Norfolk, Virginia, with J. P. Sherrill; Frances Faison, Faison, with Adrian Daniel; Lena Freedom, Durham, with Sam Silverstein; Rhoda Harsangi, New York, with Lee Cohen; Lola Collins, Nashville, with John Stallings; Jaqueline Ambler, Charleston, South Carolina, with Henkle Price; Elizabeth Roberta Gilmour, Wilmington, with Matthew Gilmour.

Ina Bishop, Hillsboro, with Wallace H. Kuralt; Adelaide Fortune, Greensboro, with Red Gilbreath; Douglas Long, Greensboro, with Lynn R. BIG ATTENDANCE IS EXPECTED AT NEWS SESSIONS

Annual Meeting of American College Publicity Association Will Begin Today.

With a record attendance of around a hundred directors expected, the annual convention of the American College Publicity Association will open here today for the first session of a three days' meeting. Among the events of interest listed for the meeting are the reviews of colleges' contributions to science and the session for sports publicity men.

The convention will open today and continue through Saturday noon. The sports publicity men have been invited to attend all the sessions, but they will have their big pow-wow Saturday morning, when Wallace Wade, director of athletics at Duke University, and R. A. Fetzer, director of athletics at the University of North Carolina, will address them.

Coaches Fetzer and Wade will give their views regarding the good and bad points of sports publicity, and they are also expected to touch on the much debated topic of sports emphasis.

Mrs. Margaret Wells Ragsdale, editor of the news bureau at the University of Tennessee, who handles sports as well as other publicity at her institution, will tell how a woman can handle the job of college sports writing.

William H. Wranek, director of the news service at the University of Virginia and a recognized authority on Southern college sports, will preside over this session.

Other speakers on the program include Fred Turbyville, director of sports publicity at

SIGMA XI SECURES RICHARDS FOR TWO ADDRESSES

Through the courtesy of the Sigma Xi Society for the promotion of research in science, Dr. Alfred N. Richards, head of the department of pharmacists at the University of Pennsylvania will give two public lectures here. The lectures will take place at 8:30 p. m., Monday and Tuesday, April 27 and 28, in the lecture room in Phillips hall. The subject of both talks will be "The Physiology of the Kidney."

Invitations have been sent to members of the faculty of the University, and to the faculties in the scientific departments of Duke, Wake Forest, State College, and N. C. C. W.

There will be a dinner in honor of Dr. Richards at the Carolina Inn at 6:30 p. m. Monday. All members of the Sigma Xi chapter of the University and of the Duke chapter have been invited. Immediately after the second lecture Tuesday night, all in attendance are invited to the home of Dr. Otto Stuhlman, president of the North Carolina chapter, for an informal smoker.

Dr. Richards work in pharmacology has won him recognition in Europe as well as in America. In 1917-18, he was a member of the British Research committee. As a major in the sanitary corps during the World War, he was attached to the chemical warfare service in the A. E. F.

While in Chapel Hill, Dr. Richards will be the guest of Dr. William deB. MacNider.

The Junior-Senior Brawl

Since October members of the executive committees of the two upper classes have had in mind a dance which a large number of upperclassmen could enjoy, realizing that the percentage of persons attending the final dances of the German club and the management of that organization naturally rests with a relatively few men. The idea those leaders had in mind was an efficiently managed ball or series of balls on a very high plane. The orchestra, the decorations, and the entire atmosphere of the affair was to be the best that a reasonable amount of money could buy.

That was the scope. Since the "jam-up" bands of the that time Johnny Hamp, one of nation, an elaborate decorating scheme, and an infinite number of small details have been completed. Among these, in order that opportunity might be given prominent alumni to renew their contacts back at "the old institution" three hundred invitations have been issued to political, social, and business leaders.

This is the one occasion when decorum and dignity must be observed. The amount of unfavorable publicity which a "wet" or "moist" dance and a "colossal bust" would bring the University is immeasurable.

The German Club has detailed a large number of committee men in addition to the large joint dance committee of the two classes which is more than ever pledged to insure sobriety.

The student union has been demanding large democratic dances in which quality is the key note. They are at last to realize them. The faculty of the University, the social leaders who will attend, as well as the newspapers and alumni of the state will watch with interest the conduct of the members of the senior and junior classes. What we are to expect in the future rests on how we will use what we have at present. In a final analysis whether these dances are to be a testimonial to the sporting blood of the younger generation which accepts in gentlemanly good taste whatever situation he finds himself in, or whether they are to be as some have said — a Junior - Senior Brawl rests with you and me.

Intellectual
M. Maurois

There is, it seems, little in these days to agitate students. The demands for the gymnasium are stilled, attendance regulations have been placed upon us; the necessary "Do Not Walk On The Grass" signs have been posted; cries for suitable appropriations await definite action of the legislature; and the King of Spain is resting comfortably at Fountainbleau, or it is Paris, or London. Yet in various corners and nooks of the new, united University, there are growls and howls being heard from incensed and disgruntled readers of Andre Maurois' observations on American life and love, as they appear in the current Revue des Deux Mondes.

The learned French gentlemen asserts that the present economic distress in these delighted states shows signs of being the cause of the disappearance of our "primitive optimism." He continues by saying that culture is extending, and that everywhere one sees the "healthy and gentle doubt" that comes with this expansion of culture.

Mr. Maurois had better give heed to the sad fate of Mr. Priestly, who made many distasteful dicta on the U. S. A. The days of admiring prominent foreigners, and enjoying their attacks are past. We haven't lost our optimism. And moreover, we haven't any doubt. A little thing like this past depression won't convince us that our economic or social theories are wrong. We don't, in spite of Mr. Maurois' assertion, doubt that our political institutions are the best that can be devised. Nor have we changed from our position that America's policies, abroad and at home, in matters of policy or liberalism, can be improved. We still are certain that Washington's statement a century or more ago as to our foreign relations still bears all the weight and accuracy of a prophet; in short, we know that all's well with the country; that nothing can be done to improve a well-nigh unimprovable land.

All we need, as Mr. Brisbane says, is to buckle down and work so that the good old days will be back again. And one of the primary requisites for the g. o. d. to return is to be optimistic, and let's scrap any of "this here" doubt that Maurois claims we have. And if it's true that doubt is a natural result of culture,—it's a pretty apparent indictment of culture. Let's scrap culture before we lose our optimism.—F. M.

Here And Now

There is always a cult of "futurists" wherever one goes. They are people who are preparing for their flourish tomorrow. They are the people who find the present unresponsive to their efforts of the moment. They are the ones who look ahead for the opportunities and the responsibilities that will mark their "coming of age."

It is interesting to study the lives of successful students, of successful business men, of successful scholars. An analysis of their success will usually show that they are the men who take life in their hands and live it moment by moment caring little for the future as an ultimate, but confident that the future is no more than the inevitable product of a succession of useful presents.

"Carolina is inferior to Harvard." "The South is inert." "People are not intellectual." "The student body is stupid." "There is no competition." "There is no stimulation." "All in all the campus, the student body, and life here is impossibly enervating." These are the charges of not a few of those who drift through the system of education set up here. The plea is of course a weak one and one which is calculated to heighten the estimation of the critic in the eyes of his auditors. Observation of the actual situation will reveal however a richness of opportunity and advantage on this campus that can be equalled at an exceedingly few institutions elsewhere. The plea of paucity of stimulation and opportunity here can be estimated as nothing more than cheap rationalization and unintelligent fault finding.—R. W. B.

Speaking The Campus Mind

The God Lucre Answered

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

"What is wrong with religion?" This is a question that has been asked through the ages by men who have been dissatisfied with life as they have found it and who have been all too ready to shift to other shoulders than theirs the responsibility for the ills of the world and the shortcomings of men instead of seeking earnestly for a remedy for these ills and shortcomings in the only place where it has ever been found.

It was not surprising to find this question asked once more on the editorial page of Tuesday's issue of the Daily Tar Heel in an article which contained much truth and well-founded criticism, mingled, however, with a misunderstanding of the real issue and a misrepresentation of the present trend in the organized church. Out of justice to the Church and to ourselves we should endeavor to think clearly and as nearly as possible without error on such a subject, for religion is the most vital matter that can claim the attention and thought of college men—today especially.

Nothing is wrong with religion. The trouble lies elsewhere, and the confusion arises only when 'religion' is confounded with 'the church'; and undoubtedly many of the criticisms which the editorial aimed at the head of religion are justly deserved by its earthly exponent and human energy, the church. What, after all, is religion? (And we mean the Christian religion, for that is undoubtedly what the writer of the editorial had in mind). Is it not the highest way of life? Did not Christ come that we might have life and have it more abundantly and to show us how this life might be lived? And wherever religion has been sincerely tried as a 'way of life,' applicable to every phase of life, it has proven a successful and joyful answer to man's problems. Where it has not been tried, it has, naturally, been unable to solve these problems.

Let us admit the faults of the Church, faults which are inherent in its very nature as a human organization. Undoubtedly it has become secular-minded at times, undoubtedly it has often lowered itself to the level of the world when the world has refused to rise to its heights, undoubtedly it has often compromised and rationalized until its real principles and real teachings have been buried deep under a gloss of 'sugar coating' which makes the remedy an

by
"Yarb"

Ideas for a column abound until the typewriter is secured and the process of putting those ideas on paper begin. This effort will be devoted to an introduction.

With rare exceptions it has been impossible to secure columnists who could write for the entire campus. Usually he is compelled to devote his writing to those with whom he has daily contact. Dave Carroll was the last of the campus columnists. This weekly attempt will not supply the need of one writing for campus consumption. If we were to employ Carroll's methods of attacking campus institutions we might succeed, but lacking Carroll's vitriolic pen and his mastery of English we are compelled to confine ourselves to observations gained from attending four classes five days a week.

The idea isn't to devote the column to observations gained from class attendance but to use comments picked up around the office which do not constitute news but are good column material.

Most everyone who hangs around a newspaper office, even a collegiate enterprise, is obsessed with the column itch. The trouble is that too few of these near-columnists can write cracks and most of the others think they can. And despite four years of association with the Daily Tar Heel we still want to write a column.

According to Block Bryson the life of a columnist is unsafe. If one writes about one's friends then they get sore. If one doesn't there is very little left. Frankly, we think that one should be flattered to break into print. During the last campaign quite a few hot words were spilled because someone was left out.

Proceeding on the assumption that those we use today will not be insulted but flattered, we list a few observations.

Chink Davis, who doesn't need publicity now that he has been elected, and Ruth Newby, who says she hates it, have been imitating squirrels. Ruth hides behind a tree and Chink looks for her. In the meantime two strange boys walk by, see Ruth hiding and start in her direction. Whereby the game ends. There's no sense in the above item, but it's amusing as they describe it. Ask them about it!

* * *

And Russell Wiliam and Mutt Ridenhour take "naps" in strange places.

Charlie, custodian of the telephone at the "Shack," says Tuesday night was a big one for the co-eds. He promises a compendium on who's whose down there next week.

* * *

J. C. Williams, erstwhile editor of the Magazine, begins his parting editorial with the headline "The Last Word." He uses an entire page of "a reflector of the Campus Literary" to describe the importance of the publication. Its appearance created a sensation. Some thought that it was an enlarged Buccaneer from the cover. The editor went out to attract attention and he certainly succeeded with the current issue. Congratulations!

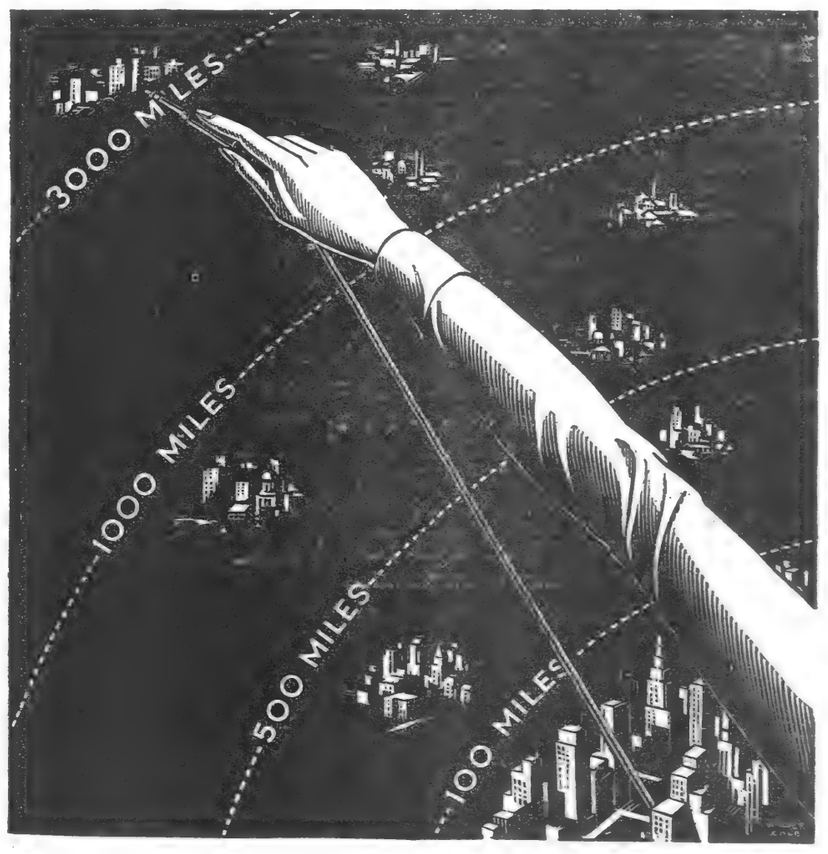
Are Books Coming Back?

Colleges have placed a great deal of quite natural emphasis upon the substance of volumes. But this emphasis has prevented any real appreciation of books as books. The pleasure gained from rare bindings and fine printing is only secondary, but it can be a genuine source of satisfaction to the connoisseur. Both the modern trend toward mass production and the advance of education have made possible and profitable the publishing of books in great numbers. This large-scale production has tended to reduce the beauty of volumes and to cheapen the workmanship. Students are apt to forget that binding, in years past, was as much an art as writing itself. A study of this kind can do much to create an understanding of artistic craftsmanship and to develop a very real appreciation of books in themselves.



At Harvard a course is given by Dr. Winship which brings to the students a feeling for the individuality and workmanship that are the hall marks of a fine volume. Rollins has carried the study into its more advanced stages.—The Harvard Crimson.

The long arm of the telephone operator - - - made longer

How to extend the operator's range fivefold? There's an example of the problems put up to a telephone engineer.

This was part of a study in stepping up the speed of service to distant points. "Long Distance" used to relay your call to one or more other operators. Now she herself reaches the city you are calling, 30 or 300 or 3000 miles away.

Result: in five years the average time needed to complete a long-distance connection has been cut from 7 minutes to less than 2 minutes.

In this industry even long approved methods are never considered beyond improvement. For men of the right aptitude, that viewpoint is a stimulating challenge.

Tar Heel Trackmen Win Over Duke Blue Devils

Brewer Is High Scorer with 16 Points as Carolina Noses Out Durham School, 68-58.

FRESHMEN BEAT IMPS, 95-30

With Tom Watkins taking first and Dick Garrett placing third in the 880, the Carolina trackmen were able to win over Duke here yesterday by a score of 68-58. The Tar Babies had little trouble in winning over the Blue Imps 95 3-4 to 30 1-4.

The score stood 62-55 in favor of Carolina when the boys lined up for the 880, and Carolina needed at least three points to clinch the meet, while Duke needed all three places to win. Watkins and Garret stepped out into the lead from the first and held it all the way, although Bradsher of Duke was pushing them closely. Bradsher succeeded in passing Garrett in the last hundred yards, but Watkins had too much of a lead, and the meet was Carolina's after one of the hardest fought track events ever seen on Emerson field.

Carolina jumped into the lead when Rip Slusser took a close 100 yard dash from Brownlee of Duke in ten seconds flat. Duke came back in the next running event, the one mile run, to score nine points when Mark Jones, Carolina runner, sprained his ankle at the end of the first quarter mile. Simons had a big lead, but slowed up near the finish to tie with Heizer in 4:55.2.

Kid Brewer was the high scorer for the meet with sixteen points. Brewer took first places in the javelin, and shot put, tied with Stafford of Carolina and Smith of Duke in the high jump, and placed second in the broad jump. Brownlee, Duke dash man was second high scorer with eleven points scored by a first in the 220, and seconds in the 100 and low hurdles.

Slusser led the Tar Heel scoring with ten points, while Brown and Smith followed him with seven each. Slusser scored first places in the 100 yard dash and low hurdles; Smith took seconds in the 220 and 440 and placed third in the century; and Brown took second places in the discus and javelin and third in the shot

Simons of Duke turned in the most exceptional work of the day when he won the two mile run from Cliff Baucom. It was the first time this season that Baucom has not won this event, and for a while it looked as if he would repeat yesterday. Baucom had the lead until the last hundred yards, but Simons, with a brilliant burst of speed, passed him as they went up the straight-away. Simons had previously tied for first place in the one mile run. He was also entered in the 880, but the pace was too much for him and he placed last in this event.

Don Waugh won the high hurdles from Archie Davis in sixteen seconds in another close race. Brodie Arnold took the pole vault again with a height of twelve feet six inches while Ruble was tied for second by Ripley of Duke. Sandy Dameron, Tar Heel discus thrower, took first in this event while Lionel Weil won the 440 with a time of 51.8. Fulmer of Duke placed first in the broad jump with a distance of twenty-two feet three inches.

Carolina swept only one event, the discus, in which Dameron took first with Brown second and Thompson third. Duke also took all three places in one event, the one mile run, in which Simon and Heizer tied for first and second with Lewis third.

The freshmen, in winning over the Blue Imps, took eleven of the possible fourteen first places and sent three men into a four way tie for the pole vault. Higby, with firsts in the broad jump and 440 and third in the 100 yard dash, led the scoring with eleven points. Goodwin, with first places in both the hurdle events was next with ten points.

TAR HEELS FACE V.M.I. TOMORROW IN LEAGUE GAME

Carolina Out for Fifth Tri-State Win, Beat Wake Forest, Three to Two.

The Tar Heels will be trying for their fifth Tri-State League victory tomorrow when they will entertain the V. M. I. Cadets at Emerson Field.

This will be the second of the two game series played with the Cadets, the first one at Lexington ending in an extra inning 5-5 tie.

Either Williams or Noble, who pitched good ball for the Cadets in the Tar Heel game, will probably be on the mound and George Hinton, fast ball hurler, will probably take his turn on the mound. Big George is the most improved player on the squad, and should be able to show the visitors a few things.

Williams, besides being a good pitcher, is a dangerous hitter, batting in the clean-up post, and if Noble works against the Tar Heels, the big boy will be seen cavorting around the left field.

Carolina broke into Big Five play with a bang Tuesday, beating the Deacons in a close ten inning contest, 3-2. Both Laning and Shields, who started for the Deacons and the Tar Heels, respectively, hurled great ball—baseball that would win almost any game, but a slip-up on Laning's part in the tenth inning proved fatal to the Wake Forest club. The Deacon tried to sneak one past "Smokey" Ferebee, but the Tar Heel shortstop lined the ball into deep left center for a home run and victory.

Ferebee has been playing stellar ball since the opening of the season, his batting average being up with the leaders and his fielding above par. Tuesday's circuit blow was the fourth one in the past four games for "Smokey."

Blythe also hit a home run in the fourth inning with no one on base. This blow came with the Deacons leading by one run.

Clark S. Chamberlain, Michigan State's crack distance star, has been invited to participate in the annual Drake relays at Des Monies. Chamberlain holds the Central Intercollegiate two mile indoor record with the remarkable time of 9:24.2, and finished third in the national A. A. U. championships held last winter.

Frank Carideo, Notre Dame's All-American quarterback, recognized as the outstanding individual performer on the gridiron during the 1930 season, will again don football togs, this time to appear as a member of the Senior-Alumni eleven that will battle the Purdue varsity in its annual battle with the former. In his new capacity as assistant coach Carideo has become thoroughly acquainted with the Boilermaker plays and will be able to step into the game without a hitch.

Possibility of the University of Oregon ultimately withdrawing from the Coast conference in all major sports if the suggestion made in the recent federal survey of the state educational system is adopted, was the statement made recently by Hugh E. Rosson, graduate manager at a student assembly.

The plan suggested is the same as that adopted by the University of Pennsylvania. All coaches would be paid on the same scale as members of the faculty. The present trend of prices for reputable coaches and the present scale of salaries of members of the faculty, would make it impossible for Oregon to secure the services of any reputable coach was the statement of the athletic head.

Early reports from collegiate rowing camps indicate that the annual Poughkeepsie regatta, to be held June 16, will produce some of the greatest competition in its history.

The Washington Huskies broke an all time record for their three mile row with California on the Oakland estuary, negotiating the distance in 14:55, and clipping fourteen seconds from the old mark established by their great varsity shell of 1929. Columbia, Syracuse, Wisconsin, Penn, and Navy are all reputed to have outstanding crews, with Wisconsin as the "dark horse."

Spud Mossman, sensational distance runner and captain of the 1931 Golden Bear track and field team, recently stated that the California Golden Bears were good enough to score fifty points against Southern California, whose track teams for years have been one of the outstanding in the country and whom California has not beaten in seven years. Mossman is finishing up a great career as a distance runner for the Bears. This year he has shown his heels to the best on the Pacific coast up to date and will be trying to finish out the season with wins over Stanford and Southern California.

FRESHMEN BEAT WILDKITTENS, 6-1

Strickland Strikes Out Fourteen Men; Fisher and Tatum Lead Tar Baby Attack.

The Carolina freshman nine defeated the Davidson Frosh 6-1 yesterday afternoon on the freshman field. Strickland held the Wildkittens at bay during the whole game, allowing but five scattered hits and striking out fourteen Davidson batsmen.

Three of the hits garnered by the visitors came off the bat of Alexander, left fielder. "Fannie" Fisher led the Tar Baby attack with a double and two singles out of four trips to the plate, while Tatum gathered two singles in three attempts.

Davidson pulled a snappy double play in the second frame with the sacks loaded and stopped a Carolina threat. Both teams played tight defensive ball, only three errors being chalked up against both sides.

Nalle, the Carolina shortstop, provided the feature base-running of the day, pilfering four sacks.

Davidson's lone tally came in the eighth after two men were out. Harrington doubled to left and scored on Alexander's third hit of the game, a sharp single to right. Carolina shoved one run across in the first stanza, as Fisher doubled to right and scored on Brandt's long triple to deep center. The yearlings bunched hits in the fifth frame to score three more and sew up the game. The remaining runs came in the sixth and eighth.

The scheduled game with the State freshmen for tomorrow has been postponed until May 11. The freshmen meet Presbyterian College here Saturday afternoon and Danville high next Tuesday.

Score by innings:	r	h	e
Davidson 000 000 010	1	5	2
Carolina 100 031 01x	6	10	1

Batteries: Koonce and Morris; Strickland and Tatum.

N.C.C.W. Has 3207 Students

The North Carolina College for Women, according to the latest bulletin of that institution, had a total enrollment of 3,207 students during the scholastic year 1930-31. Statistics show the following enrollment in classes for the year which is just coming to a close: seniors, 269; juniors, 247; sophomores, 374; freshmen, 620; commercials, 215; and special students, 36. The total number in residence for the regular session is 1,761.

TOWN ELECTIONS SET FOR MAY 5

The town elections of Chapel Hill are to be held May 5. For those who wish to vote in the coming election, which involves the mayor and several aldermen of Chapel Hill, registration on or before April 25, will be necessary. It is important for the people of Chapel Hill to note that the town elections are in no way connected with the state and national elections. Everyone who intends to vote in the coming elections is advised to see Paul Robertson in his office over the Carolina Theatre to make sure that he is eligible to vote.

The present mayor, Zeb P. Council, has been nominated for re-election for a term of two years. Also P. L. Burch, R. D. W. Connor, B. S. Thompson, and R. M. Trimble have been nominated for re-election to the board of aldermen. R. M. Trimble is running for a term of two years while the other three nominees' prospective terms are four years.

In the race for judge of the recorder's court two candidates have already been nominated. They are the present judge, C. P. Hinshaw, and J. L. Phipps.

OVER SIXTY HIGH SCHOOLS IN MATHEMATICS CONTEST

The annual high school mathematics contest will take place throughout the state Friday. Students eligible to participate in this contest are limited to members of the sophomore, junior and senior classes.

The contest will include an algebra test, an arithmetic test, and a plane geometry test. The best paper from each school participating will be sent in and they will be graded by faculty members of the department of mathematics of the University. A trophy cup will be awarded the high school a student of which submits the best paper.

This contest was won last year by the Greensboro high school and the year before by Rocky Mount high. Sixty-three high schools, entering 1906 papers, have sent in applications.

Ping Pong has captured the attention of co-ed athletes at the University of West Virginia. More than fifty girls participated in a ping pong tournament held there recently. Other sports popular with the co-eds are volley ball, horseshoes, swimming, and archery.

Archibald Henderson Delivers Talk On Walker To Antiquarian Society

Dr. Archibald Henderson has just returned from a meeting of the American Antiquarian Society, which convened at Boston. The society, of which Dr. Henderson is a member, has its headquarters at Worcester, Massachusetts, where it has one of the two most remarkable collections of Americana in the world. It is the constant purpose of the organization to secure all material that has ever been written about North America. All data of this kind that has been obtained is housed either in the Antiquarian library or in John Carter Brown's library in Providence, Rhode Island, where the rival collection of the society is located.

The annual meeting of the Antiquarian Society took place, April 15, in Boston. The president of the society, ex-President Calvin Coolidge, presided over the meeting. Three principal addresses were made at the assemblage, one by Dr. Henderson who spoke on Dr. Thomas Walker, of the Loyal land company of Virginia. The others were: Henry W. Belknap of the Essex Institute of Salem, Massachusetts, who spoke on "Philip English, Commerce Builder," and Lawrence C. Roth, librarian of the John Carter Brown library, who spoke on "James Sterling, Poet, Priest, and Prophet of Empire."

Unusual interest was shown in Dr. Henderson's talk on Dr. Walker when he displayed various photographs and photostats of letters written to Dr. Walker by Washington, Jefferson, Pendleton Walker, and others never before published. Dr. Walker was the guardian of Thomas Jefferson and triply related to George Washington through marriage.

In his speech Dr. Henderson told the story of the Loyal land company of Virginia, the largest real estate corporation that ever existed in that state. The corporation was founded in 1750, and Dr. Henderson's talk consisted of material gathered from twenty years of research about the firm. A life of Dr. Walker is now being written by Dr. Henderson, and will be published by the American Antiquarian Society. At the reception, Dr. Henderson had the pleasure of meeting both Mr. and Mrs. Coolidge for the first time.

It is estimated that the library of the Antiquarian Society contains more than seventy-five per cent of all the works published in connection with America before 1820. The John Carter Brown library has approximately ninety per cent of all the material published about America prior to 1700.

Ted Shawn Booked On Entertainment Program for 1932

The student entertainment committee, meeting in Dean A. W. Hobbs' office yesterday afternoon, arranged for the addition of another feature to next year's program, already having scheduled two. The latest contract calls for the appearance of Ted Shawn and his dancers at the University, January 7, 1932.

Upperclassmen remember the perfection with which Ruth St. Denis and the Denis-Shawn dancers executed their dances here in the spring of 1930. Now her equally famous husband will display his art for the pleasure of the campus.

The other two entertainments booked for next year are The Beggar's Opera, October 31, and a presentation by the Irish Theatre players, of Dublin, Ireland, March 31.

The school of liberal arts hopes to obtain the cooperation of the school of commerce in arranging for student entertainments, as compared with the past system which leaves all of the responsibility up to the former department. Several prominent members of the junior and senior classes in the commerce school have requested such action.

DI APPROVES OF SPRING FOOTBALL

The meetings of the Di and Phi societies at 7:15 last night, voted on only one bill. This bill was discussed in the Di Senate. The measure, Resolved: That winter and spring football should be abolished, was defeated after much discussion by a vote of fourteen to eight.

Senator Dungan suggested to the senate that the senators should discuss the merits of all prospective members before granting them membership. This suggestion was opposed by Senator Whittaker who stated that the senate had too many rules already. Senator Fleming-Jones moved that there should be a different arrangement of the seats in the senate hall in a less formal fashion. This motion was defeated by a vote of seventeen to three.

At the opening of the Phi Assembly session Representative Lanier suggested many changes in the constitution. These suggestions regarded a more definite formation of the rules regarding the roll of the Phi Assembly and other minor changes in the constitution.

The bill, Resolved: That the prohibition act should be modified so as to legalize the sale of light wines and beers, reached the floor of the assembly, but, due to lack of time, a vote was not taken.

are not counted, although they are averaged in along with the rest in the annual reports. In making out the present report, the averages of 521 students were used.

As a whole, the scholastic averages of the fraternity group have improved considerably over the averages of the fall quarter. Ten chapters have raised their score one point in the grading system devised by the registrar, consisting of a division into ten parts of the difference between the academic average, which is scored as zero, and the prefect score, which is scored as ten.

The general fraternity average for the fall quarter which was 3.22, shows favorable improvement in the past quarter's average which was 3.05. A substantial improvement in the academic average was shown in this winter quarter's average of 3.24 as compared to the fall quarter 3.41.

Speaking Campus Mind

evil, unpleasant medicine indeed. But let us not lay these evils at the door of religion, for this remains unchanged no matter how mistaken our conceptions and how inadequate our presentations of it may be. Men have often been muddled and confused before in their interpretations of religion and in their practice of it and dark periods have passed over the head of the church often, but the true religion has always emerged triumphant to take again its rightful place in the hearts and souls of men. Why should we despair now?

And what if, as is claimed in the editorial, Lucre is at present on the throne? There has never been a conflict between money and the church until the former has become the proverbial 'filthy lucre'; and if this servant of man who can be of so much use has become a despot shall we admit defeat, give up our ideals, and leave it on the throne? Is not the very materialism of this age a challenge to us all?

And indeed the condition of the church today is not as dark as pictured. It is our sincere belief that the writer of the editorial was mistaken in his facts when he said that 'the spirit of contemporary religion' is characterized by individual pettiness, narrowmindedness and a failure to cooperate, and when he hears the church bells 'clang' and 'clatter,' "I am holier than thou—my goods are better than his. Come into my church." Unhappily there has been all too much of this spirit in the past and more unhappily still far too much of it yet exists in the hearts of some so-called Christians. But the present trend is in a better and a brighter and a more Christian direction, as anyone can see for himself if he will take the trouble to consider the many movements for union in the church in this country and abroad, the more liberal attitude taken toward each other by the various denominations, and the Church Councils such as those of Lambeth, of Lausanne, and others, where Christians of all denominations, are meeting to talk over their agreements and disagreements and to find more common ground for unity. It seems to me that this statement characterizes the spirit of the Church today better than the one quoted, and that a preacher would be more in accord with the times if he should say, "I am not a Baptist first; I am a Christian."

Two men go into the woods now, and one sees only the crooked trunks of the trees, the gnarls and the knots and the imperfections which make them of less value as potential lumber. The other sees the beauty of the new green, of the blossoms, of the birds and flowers and trees, and finds joy and inspiration in the awakening life all about him. Two men listen to the church bells ringing on Sunday morning. One hears only clanging and clattering and selfish, egotistical claims amid a din of discord. The other hears a symphony of sweet music, singing out the invitation of all true Christianity, "Come unto Me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest."

Gilbert K. Chesterton is reported to have remarked on one occasion, "Christianity has not been tried and found wanting. It has been found difficult and left untried." Perhaps if it were tried more often and more earnestly by more people, the time would come when the church would be less deserving of the criticisms which are heaped upon it now and when more men would find in a more abundant life the happiness which comes to those who try to draw from the resources within.

FOLLIN ELECTED NEXT PRESIDENT OF GERMAN CLUB

Defeats Bill Bliss By Close Vote Of 123 to 103 for Highest Social Honor.

Tom Follin was proclaimed president of the German Club at a meeting of that body in Gerrard hall yesterday afternoon at 1:30 o'clock. The other officers elected were Steve Lynch, vice-president, and Milton Barber, Jr., secretary and treasurer.

The elections were taken by standing ballot, and the whole procedure required only a half hour. Two opposing factions were represented, and only two nominees were named for each office, adding to the general tension of popular interest in the outcomes.

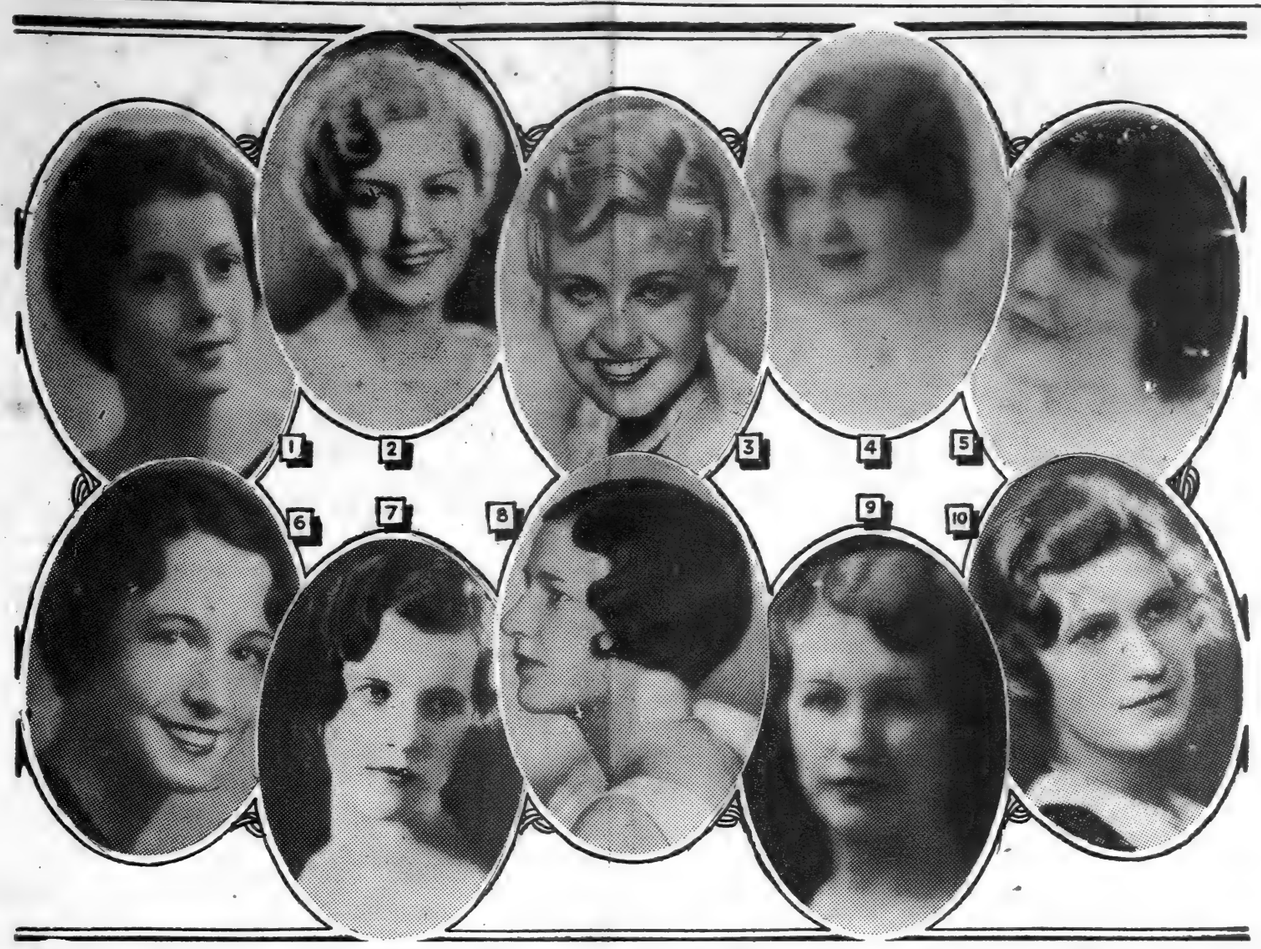
The ballots ran abnormally close. For the executive position, Follin won 123 votes to the 103 of his opponent, Bill Bliss. Steve Lynch defeated Ward Thompson in the race for vice-president by a count of 124 to 103. Due to the withdrawal of a good many voters from the hall, confident of the outcome of the elections, the votes polled in the election of the secertary-treasurer were considerably fewer than in the others; Milton Barber, Jr., won his office by receiving 115 votes as compared to the eighty-three by Armistead Boyd.

An interesting feature of the elections was the attempt of the losing faction to win the last office by calling for a recount after the majority of the winning faction had left the hall. The day was saved by the retiring secretary and treasurer, Will Yarborough, who stated that all voters on the recount would have to present their German club cards.

The retiring officers of the club are: Buck Snow, president; and Will Yarborough, secretary and treasurer.

VESPER CONCERT TO BE RENDERED IN MUSIC HALL

Professor Kennedy Will Continue Organ Concert Series Sunday Afternoon.



Presenting the fifth vesper organ concert since the dedication of the concert organ in Music hall, Professor Nelson O. Kennedy will present a program of music selections next Sunday. The former hour as scheduled for 4:00 has been moved up to 4:45. This change of hour is to avoid a number of conflicts among students and faculty members involved.

In this concert Professor Kennedy will have the assistance of a group of twenty-five musicians selected from the ranks of the University Symphony orchestra who will perform the orchestral score to the famous Guilmant, First Sonata, conducted by Professor Harold S. Dyer, and with Professor T. Smith McCorkle occupying the concertmeister's chair.

As an example of the brilliance of the French school of organ composition, this sonata ranks at the head of the list. It is given by organists the world over as an evidence of their command of the literature of modern romanticits. The entire resources of the organ in re-

GUESTS OF JUNIOR-SENIOR DANCES THIS WEEK-END

Pictured above are half a score of the charming young misses who will be on hand for the Junior-Senior Ball, which begins tonight in the Tin Can, the University's huge athletic arena. The juniors and seniors are cooperating this year, and together they have planned one of the most elaborate affairs of recent years at the University. The juniors will hold the place of honor tonight, while the seniors will dominate tomorrow night.

The young ladies above are, reading from top to bottom as numbered: Margaret Young, Atlantic City; Dorothy Furr, Raleigh; Martha Emerson, Havre de Grace, Maryland; Elizabeth Gilmore, Wilmington; Rose Hamilton, New Orleans; Frances Faison, Faison; Margaret Lorraine, Andalusia, Alabama; Elizabeth Morris, Roxboro; Ina Bishop, Jacksonville; and Carolyn Braxton, Kinston.

WARD STRESSES USEFULNESS OF SMALL COLLEGES

President of Western Maryland Backs Arts College Movement At Press Institute.

There are many students in American colleges and universities today who ought not to be there, but on the other hand there are equally as many who ought to be there but who, on account of financial difficulties, are denied such advantages," Dr. Albert N. Ward, president of Western Maryland College and chairman of the Liberal Arts College Movement, declared here yesterday in an address at the opening of the thirteenth annual convention of the American College Publicity Association.

"The Liberal Arts College Movement," which, although launched only a year ago, already has enrolled 250 colleges and universities, "is the best answer to this problem," Dr. Ward asserted. "The purpose of this movement," he explained, "is to define the place of the liberal arts college in the American scheme of higher education and to cooperate in securing funds for carrying out such plans as are being formulated."

"The usefulness of the small college was never greater than today," Dr. Ward asserted. "At least a million students will apply annually for admission into American colleges during the next decade. This tremendous enrollment will require the combined efforts of several hundred well endowed and efficiently equipped institutions.

"If the people of this country are properly approached and appealed to, they will give our colleges all the endowments they need. We have in this country 23,000 millionaires. We have 1200 institutions of higher

Deputation Trip

The Y. M. C. A. deputation team, composed of Noah Goodridge, "Bim" Ferguson, and Ed Hamer, went to Beaufort, last Tuesday. The program was presented before the Parent-Teachers' Association at 7:00 o'clock, with high school students present.

This was the first time that a deputation program has been given before a group of this type.

Commerce Freshmen

Dean D. D. Carroll wishes to meet all freshmen in the school of commerce this morning at the chapel hour in 103 Bingham hall.

Mid-Term Reports

The mid-term reports may be seen in the Registrar's office Monday morning.

Student Loans

Dean F. F. Bradshaw requests that all students now in the University who intend to make use of the loan fund in order to return next year, hand in to his office an estimation of their needs. Some difficulties in meeting these needs are anticipated, and any information as to the amount to be required next year will be of use.

Junior-Senior Bids

Today will be the last chance for students to obtain bids for the Junior-Senior Ball. Bids will be given out at the Y. M. C. A. between the hours of 2:00 and 5:00 o'clock.

Senior Invitations

Senior invitations are on sale this afternoon from 3:00 to 5:00 o'clock in the Y building and at Pritchard-Lloyd's.

German Club Rules

The attention of members of the junior and senior classes is called to the following rules of the German Club:

The Executive Committee shall be empowered to suspend from all dances given under the auspices of the German Club, for a period at the discretion of the committee, any student, visitor, or alumnus for any misconduct whatever in any period during which the dance or dances are being held, regardless of whether the misconduct is before, during, or after the dance.

The following rules shall govern conduct on the dance floor:

1. No smoking on the dance floor.

2. No one showing signs of drinking will be permitted to remain on the floor.

3. No girls will be allowed to leave the hall during an evening dance unless accompanied by a chaperon.

All dances given under the auspices of the German Club shall close not later than 1:00 a. m. provided, that the last dance in any given set of dances given by the German Club shall close not later than 2:00 a. m. When any dance is given on Saturday night, it shall close not later than 12:00 o'clock midnight.

In addition the by-laws of the committee on house parties of the University requires girls to be in their respective lodging places within an hour after the close of each night dance. There are to be no late dates after that time; the boys are to leave the girls, and the girls are to be under the supervision of their respective chaperones.

JUNIOR PROM TO BE STAGED IN TIN CAN THIS EVENING

Hundreds of Girls Expected for University's Largest Class Dances.

The first of the Junior-Senior dance series will take place tonight in the Tin Can under the name of the Junior Prom. This is the first time that two classes in the University have sponsored a set of dances together.

Johnny Hamp and His Kentucky Serenaders have been engaged to play for the occasion. The Tin Can has been elaborately decorated in black and white, and provides the large space for dancing that was used for the finals last year.

At the far end of the Tin Can, a tea garden has been set up where refreshments will be served.

Several hundred prominent social leaders of the state have been invited for the occasion, and several hundred more girls are expected to attend.

Spanish Club

The Spanish Club will meet this evening at 7:30 o'clock in the Y. M. C. A. All members are urged to attend the meeting.

Magazine Deadline

The deadline for copy contributed to the next issue of the Carolina Magazine will be next Tuesday at noon.

FRAZIER GRANTED FELLOWSHIP TO STUDY IN GENEVA

Carnegie Foundation Grants Money to Government Professor for Study.

Keener C. Frazier, associate professor of government in the University, has recently been granted a fellowship by the Carnegie Foundation to study the League of Nations and the disarmament conference, which will take place in Geneva next February, it was announced here yesterday.

The Carnegie Foundation is a national endowment for the advancement of peace among nations and for the abolishment of international war. These ends are obtained by promoting the investigation of the causes of war and practical means of preventing them. For this purpose, two men are appointed every year by the trustees of the fund. These men, who investigate international government as well as the causes of war, are taken from the teaching of international law in the various universities of the country, and all their expenses are paid for a period of approximately fourteen months. It is a signal honor to be chosen for this work, both for the appointee and for the university from which he is taken.

Professor Frazier will be interested chiefly in the politics of the League of Nations, studying its organization and relation to the United States in detail.

The disarmament conference is something new in the annals of attempts along this line. Its discussion will be equal paring of armies. Hitherto, no such attempt has been made, all disarmament parlies centering on the reduction of the navies of the countries concerned. It is extremely unlikely that any real cut will be effected in armies; all the odds are against

FLUTIST TO MAKE LAST APPEARANCE TOMORROW NIGHT

Lamar Stringfield, Assisted by Orchestra Plans Concert in Playmakers Theatre.

Lamar Stringfield, flutist-composer-conductor, and former Pulitzer Prize winner, has announced an interesting and entertaining program for the concert which he and the faculty chamber orchestra are to present in the Playmakers Theatre here at 8:30 o'clock tomorrow night, which, incidentally, is billed as Stringfield's last home appearance of the season.

The recital will feature compositions based on native Folk-Lore. Indeed, all of the composers to be played except one, Mozart, are living. Four of the seven are Americans, including Stringfield, Henry Hadley, John Powell and Lee Briggs, and three of the number are flutist-composers, including Georges Barrere the master, and his pupils J. Henry Bove and Stringfield.

Hadley, of course, needs no introduction in American music circles, while John Powell, one of the outstanding concert pianists in the country, is also one of the most acute artists and scholars of American folk music and its development, and has

A New Hall Good For Nothing

We have one of the finest auditoriums in the state, but there is a question as to the benefit we derive from it.

Several weeks ago the world famous Sir Philip Ben Greet and his followers presented Shakespeare's play, Hamlet, in the auditorium, but because of the poor equipment of the building the voices of the actors were practically inaudible to the back rows of the audience. The cause of this defect has been attributed to the poor seats, which have a large effect on the acoustics of the building.

In slightly more than two weeks we will be privileged to hear some of the country's noted speakers appearing here under the auspices of the Human Relations Institute, but will their speeches be also ruined by the old seats? Shall the whole purpose of their addresses be lost because of poor equipment of the building? Judging from the failure to hear the actor's voices in Greet's presentation, the same situation will be repeated.

There are to be several other important entertainments appearing in the building before the year is out, but if they are no more heard than were the players in Hamlet, there is absolutely no use in their appearing. The trustees, after much consideration, decided to give enough to build the new hall, but, sad to say, their saving efforts have been to no avail. True enough, they appropriated the money, hoping to be able to get more later, but so long as the new structure has to be equipped with antique seats, their new hall is good for nothing. So long as the voices of those on the stage are no better heard than they are under the present conditions, we would suggest that no more entertainments be presented. Not only is the chief aim of the presentation wasted by poor acoustics, but, more important, the audience is given a wrong impression of the persons on the stage.—C. G. R.

College Illiterates

It is surprising to note the number of upperclassmen in this University who murder the king's English—on paper and in speech. The illiteracy is of several types. Some students are downright provincial in their use of colloquialisms, others use faulty technical and grammatical structure, and still others write in the awkward "than which there is none whicher" style. Professors sometimes keep notebooks of especially ludicrous mistakes made in their freshman and sophomore classes, and read them for the delectation of their advanced classes. It would be still more effective to read upper class absurdities to the freshman; so they might hear what heights of erudition they could aspire to.

Although these upper classmen have all passed their freshman composition work and still cannot write, the fault does not necessarily lie with English I, but with their elementary training, or lack of it, before they ever come to college. An ultimate remedy would be to give a more thorough basic training in English in the so-called "Grammar" school stage and supplement it by foreign language study.

Until such a measure could be taken, a temporary plan might answer the immediate need. An examination in English should be given all students entering the University to ascertain their degrees of writing ability. Those passing the test creditably should be allowed to take advanced English or other courses, and those whose writing is below par should be required to take a drill course in the rudiments of composition, bearing no college credit. This system would discard the customary freshman English, and the drill course would be more intensive than English I-A. In this plan English I and I-A would be replaced by optional drama, poetry, or fiction courses.

A copious weeding-out of those who fail to be improved by the rigorous drill course would help matters, for no man should be graduated from a university without being able to express his thoughts in clear understandable English. The college graduate is supposed to be rather well-lettered—A. J. S.

Morals And Relativity

The character of morals, whether they be absolute and transcendent or relative, is of some philosophic importance. The faculty-student conference at Detroit this winter interested itself in part with this general field of thought. Goodwin Watson attempted two general summaries, one at the beginning, the other at the conclusion of the five day meeting.

Watson's analysis bespeaks a vivid intimacy with the modern mood. In describing the accelerating change of the day, the replacements and modifications of our times, he points to these differentiating qualities in the trend of our times and our thought. There is less faith in the past. People are less contented with a good heart and good motives and demand execution. People have less faith in absolutes in the field of morals (or in any field for that matter). Morals become a matter of poetic appreciation, in a sense, rather than raw limitation arbitrarily revered. There has been a general abandonment of moral categories. There is a concept of morals which is interested in social as well as the individual aspect of morality. The emphasis placed upon humility and "poor in spirit"-ness is being replaced by the Johannesburg conception of the abundant life. This broad analysis was his own.

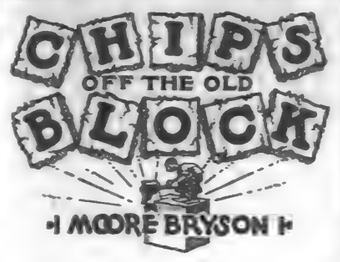
The group analysis of "morals in a day of relativity" read along these lines. Revolt is more talked about than real on our college campi. There is a consummate faith in our own rightness. There is a hearty faith in "intelligence." We consider our social attitudes and program a vital constituent in our modern life. "Principles" are in bad repute and are forsaken for compass points such as a "feeling" of right, etc. . . . There is a growing emphasis upon life, color, movement. And finally, there is the eternal conflict of ideals against the working out of detail.

Far from infallible these findings are yet a rather interesting and important barometer of what the college campi of the country believe and want to believe.—R. W. B.

The Church Under Fire

"What's the matter with religion that it has had to resort to" establishing gymnasiums, social rooms, and giving dances and bridges in order to induce people to the services? Don't we have time for it? Are we less religious?" These questions appeared in an editorial in Tuesday's issue of this paper, by which it was attempted to prove that people of today are losing interest in religion and leaning toward the worship of "Lucre."

The establishment of these gymnasiums etc., is not as the editorial points out to induce persons to attend the services, but, instead, is for the purpose of helping people socially. The old plan of "thou shalt not" is passing and in its stead is coming the idea of showing through service. Today one of the church's chief aims is not only conversion of non-believers, but also social betterment. Uplifting of the public welfare is now one of the goals towards which the church is striving.



Another purpose for which these entertainments serve is to erase the idea that religious persons must wear long faces and never take part in anything merry. Some seem to have gotten the opinion from the Puritans and Quakers that religion is a sad institution in which people must be melancholy. This false belief is destroyed by these amusements, and in its place the people are able to see that religion makes for a well-rounded life and not one of entirely religious affairs.

In regard to the leaning toward the worship of Lucre, there have always been a minority of the population who have carried their offerings to Lucre's altar. Some have always looked to him for their life; some have always worshiped him as their god; but there have been others who have not bowed their head under his yoke. This chanting of the editorial that Lucre is coming into power is merely a repetition of the same old story. From time immemorial this doctrine has been preached, and its mention now no longer holds any fear to the world.—C. G. R.

Fireman's College

The Chapel Hill firemen are all attending the Durham Fire College which is under the direction of Sherwood Brockwell, fire marshall who is assisted by leading firemen of this and other states.

The aim of this school is to educate the firemen of North Carolina for their line of duty so that they may be better able to protect the lives and property of the people.

I've always said that you couldn't depend on women and I'm ready to stand up for my position now. Four of our fairest promised to write this column for me this week and when I phone them what do they say? "We're sorry, but we just couldn't think of anything to write." All right. All right. But don't come telling me in the future that my column was bum.

This is really the second column that I have written this week. Last night I went around to the Beta house, and before the evening was over I had written a column. However, when I woke up this morning I was unable to decipher my masterpiece, so I'll have to do it all over again.

"Bobby" Carmichael, a member of the Deke tribe, reminds me of a Mellon's Food baby.

Closs Peace reminds me of Pollyanna.

Somehow, I always feel better when I pass Jim Magner on the campus. You somehow expect him to pull a wisecrack every time he speaks to you.

* * *

Has June Underwood turned sissy or is he really in training for spring football?

This business of writing a column is becoming a menace. Our former editor-in-chief, Will Yarborough, came through with one Thursday morning. Will certainly saved the situation at the meeting of the German Club. I thought that I would be able to pull a fast one over "Buck" Snow, but Will came to the rescue. All of which, means nothing to you if you weren't at the meeting.

* * *

The truth of the matter is that this column means nothing to the people who are not in on the know, anyway.

* * *

Not content with the self-acquired publicity they have already received, the Buttitta (I haven't time to see if the spelling is correct.) group is planning to publish a paper and open a book shop.

* * *

Well, the literary group on the campus must receive their correct amount of publicity, I suppose. The last issue of the Carolina Magazine is a perfect example of one way to obtain it. I really didn't realize that J. C. Williams was "the most illustrious debater of the present student generation" until he told me in the last issue of that campus organ which "requires the most brains and ability to edit." And, by the way, did you read the poem to the river? That is another one of those things that can't be commented upon properly.

Ruth Ellen Williams had a date with her uncle on Tuesday night.

The co-ed who wrote the reply to the Nashist poem which Wex had in his column Sunday was the very clever Miss Elizabeth Nunn.

* * *

To the devil with all columns, I'm going to pay another visit to the old "oken" bottle and then go to the tennis matches.

A Correction

The Daily Tar Heel wishes to make a correction in an article appearing in Thursday's issue to the effect that Theta Phi and not Theta Chi was second in the list of fraternity averages for the winter quarter.

A NASH-NOTE TO MASTER MALONE AND DOT PARKER

By Ezra Eliot Pound Hoffenstein Homer, the Sweet Singer of Pittsboro Road

To Mr. Malone, the Chapel Hill free verse dammit-er,
And to the lady who answered him in iambic pentammiter,
I address this free verse poem to end free verse poems,
To protect our culture, our firesides, our hoems.
Here is the end of our double standard's security
When man and woman alike forsake demurity
To break into public print to champion a cawse,
And maul our classic verse with irreverent pawse.
Men dance about like marionettes,
And women sing brazenly without hairio nettes.
Maybe the movies are causing all the trouble,
Making fame a racket and happiness a bouble.

So I, (a great big I, like Walt Whitman,
Who was transcendental, according to the American Lit. man)
Put in my plea for fewer and shorter verses,
Doing my bit to free the world from this most awful of cerses.

A REPLY TO END REPLIES

And Make the World Safe for Versocracy

By Seamus McQueen

It is with great regret that I observe the passion
—You must admit, the thing has reached to more than just a fassion—
Of lousy poets, male and femme, to do some Ogden Nassion.

It started in the colyum of Sechsy-wecks Maloney,
Who wrote a paean in praise of that foul substance known as money,
And swore he'd never snub a dime, unless the thing was phoney.

In answer then, a damsel fair of poverty made eulogy,
With arguments for humble life that sounded Calvin Culogy;
And followed her another bard, to make the thing a trulogy.

I'd like to stop this sort of thing before it gets much worse,
Because I really much prefer another kind of vorse;
And yet, if they all write like this, I haven't any chorse.

To write an epic, lyric, ballad, triolet, or sonnet
Is quite enough, my poet friends, let's make a bargain onnet.
For if we don't, I'm quite afraid into the ground we'll ronnet.

WARD STRESSES USEFULNESS OF SMALL COLLEGES

learning, including the junior colleges. There are some 800 four-year colleges. Of this 800 there are ten institutions that have a total endowment fund of four hundred million dollars. The next ninety have endowments totalling only three hundred millions, and the next three hundred have endowments totalling only one hundred and fifty millions. Those first ten institutions have enrolled only seventy five thousand students, while the first one hundred have enrolled two hundred and fifty thousand. In other words, ten institutions in the country have one half of the total endowment, while the first one hundred have only three-fourths of the total endowment."

Dr. Ward said the Liberal Arts College Movement aimed to set up endowments of ten million dollars in each of 500 institutions.

Earl Reed Silvers, of Rutgers University, president of the association, presided over the opening session. Robert W. Madry, director of the University News Bureau, gave the address of welcome. Reports of the President Silvers and of Don Cresswell, secretary-treasurer, showed the past year had been the greatest in the growth of the association. Sixty new members had joined, making the total membership now 225. A record number of more than seventy-five were present today.

Harold Ellis, publicity director of the University of California, another speaker, deplored the use of freak stories, especially those of an aimless type, by college publicity men, as he declared that he didn't believe such stories "attract students of the right kind." "Athletics have a popular and powerful appeal, however," he declared, "because some students like to attend an institution where they can cheer a winning team and crow about its victories, and consequently athletic progress is the basis of a legitimate appeal for some institutions."

Round table discussions in the afternoon were conducted by Frank R. Elliott, of the University of Indiana; Miss Katherine Rockmis, of Hunter College, New York City; and Jos. F. Wright, of the University of Illinois.

Several entertainment features followed, including afternoon bus trips over the Carolina and Duke campi, a barbecue and brunswick stew supper at Duke, with Henry R. Dwire, director of public relations at Duke presiding, and a movie show at the Carolina Theatre, where coffee was served by the Friendly Cafeteria.

The convention will begin its second day this morning with talks by J. P. McDonald, general manager of the Nation-Wide Press Clipping Service; Miss Lillian Gardner, New Jersey College for Women; and James E. Pollard, Ohio State University.

This afternoon there will be talks by Hector Parrier, New York University; Frank R. Elliott, University of Indiana; Miss Alena Horner, University of Pittsburgh; and Robert H. McNeil, Virginia Polytechnic Institute.

The highlight of the convention is expected to be the dance and banquet at the Carolina Inn tonight. Banquet speakers will be Josephus Daniels, publisher of the Raleigh News and Observer, and President Frank P. Graham of the University. Robert W. Madry, director of the University News Bureau, will be toastmaster.

Carolina Places Five In Quarter Finals Of Collegiate Net Tourney

Grant, Hines, Yeomans, Hendlin, Wright Reach Quarter-Finals; Hines Eliminates Captain Graham.

QUARTER-FINALS TODAY

Quarter-Finals Play Starts at Eleven, with Semi-Finals This Afternoon; Finals Tomorrow.

The Carolina Tar Heel netmen had a banner day in the annual state collegiate tennis tournament yesterday afternoon.

Coach Kenfield, Tar Heel mentor, entered six men in the tourney, and out of the six men entered, five reached the quarter-finals round of the singles matches. Grant, Hines, Yeomans, Hendlin, and Wright each won their matches by top heavy scores, Hendlin's match with Fletcher of Wake Forest and Hines' match with Captain Sonny Graham of Carolina were the only matches in which a member of the Carolina team participated that the full distance of three sets was required. Hendlin defeated Fletcher, 6-4, 4-6, 6-0, while Hines defeated the Tar Heel captain after a hard fight, 6-4, 2-6, 6-3.

In the first round all seeded players advanced, Grant, seeded No. 1, defeating Garber of Duke; Hendlin, seeded No. 4, defeated Fletcher of Wake Forest, 6-4, 4-6, 6-0; Hines, seeded No. 2, defeated Griffin of Wake Forest, 6-2, 6-2; Yeomans, seeded No. 3, advanced by default over Winton of Wake Forest; and Rogers of Duke, seeded No. 5, defeated Barly of State, 6-2, 6-0.

In the second round of the singles matches Hines defeated Graham in an all Carolina match; Wright of Carolina advanced defeating Myers of Duke, 6-0, 6-1; Rogers of Duke defeated I. C. Vipond of State, 6-0, 6-3; Grant won over Myers of Davidson, 6-0, 6-2; Hendlin won over Fulp of Duke, 6-1, 6-1; Yeomans defeated Colder of Davidson, 6-1, 6-1 and again the seeded players advanced.

McLean of Davidson with a win over Roddy of Davidson and DuBose of Davidson, with a win over Poe of Davidson, advanced to the quarter-final round also.

In the first round doubles Grant and Hines advanced by default over Winton and Smith of Wake Forest; Hendlin and Graham advanced winning over Carrol and Green of Wake Forest.

In the afternoon's play Hendlin and Graham defeated Garber and Peake of Duke; Myers and Rogers of Duke defeated McLean and Myers of Davidson; Clarke and Fulp of Duke won over Kirchbeiman and Early of State; and Yeomans and Wright of Carolina defeated DuBose and Colder of Davidson.

The quarter-finals of the tournament will be held this morning at 11:00 o'clock with Hines of Carolina meeting Wright of Carolina; Yeomans of Carolina meeting Dubose of Davidson; Grant of Carolina meeting McLean of Davidson; and Hendlin of Carolina meeting Rogers of Duke.

Play-offs in the doubles have not been announced.

Sidelights

By Phil Alston

Add Warren, the former Carolina pugilist who battered Jack Parker into complete submission in Charlotte last week, is going to get another shot at Dewey Kimrey, the North Carolina heavyweight champ, Monday night. Kimrey took the title from Add some months ago, and Warren is out to get it back. Add was his old tigerish self against Parker, and his chances of winning over Kimrey look particularly good.

At least, we have to give Kimrey credit for one thing. Most of the champions we can call to mind spend their time looking for set-ups, while Kimrey steps out and signs to meet the toughest man in the section. A few more champions of the Kimrey type, who are willing to risk their hard won laurels against their most logical contenders, would do a lot to put the ring game back where it was before depression and funny looking fights put it on the rocks.

Coach Bob Fetzer's track men seem to be the recipients of every kind of hard luck possible. They have lost men this year through every method from charley horses to marriage licenses. Dave Neiman, the Charlotte boy who happened to be the best thing on the Hill in the broad jump and wasn't exactly of negative value in the pole vault, went out by the marriage license route. Several other stars from last year's squad failed to return to school this year, and that didn't help matters any, but that's not all. Quite a few unfortunate things have happened to the cindermen since the beginning of the present season. First it was Charley Farmer, who went out with a pulled ligament in his leg. Farmer's loss was not just an ordinary one, for Charley happens to be one of the best sprinters in the South, if not the best. Then Clarence Jensen, star miler, was lost and that was another hard blow. Other injuries and sicknesses have popped up all the season to make life just one more worry after another for the Carolina coaches.

A fair example of this would be what happened here last week. George Bagby sprained his ankle in practice just before the V. P. I. meet, and Cliff Baucom developed measles. Just as if this wasn't enough, Lionel Weil and Ken Marland, running in the 440, got in some sort of mix-up and both were spiked with the Duke meet only four days off. The remarkable thing about it all is the Carolina continues to win track meets by tremendous margins in spite of the fact that several of the most dependable point winners are out of competition. Every time one of the stars goes down with a new ailment, someone else generally turns in a good enough performance to win the event anyhow. Isn't that pretty good proof that the Carolina coaches are developing track squads and not just a group of individual stars?

The Tar Heel tennis team has been attracting quite a bit of attention around these parts during its early season matches, and stands a fine chance of earning national recognition before the season is over. So far, the Tar Heels have met with little or no opposition from the other members of the Big Five, but they will have a real test when they leave here next week on their northern trip.

The matches to date have been drawing good crowds all season, and with the State Tournament in progress this week end a new high mark for attendance may easily be reached

Hinkey Hendlin and Ed Yeomans have both won the State singles title. Yeomans won the crown in 1929 but did not defend it last year, and Hendlin came through to replace him. This year Hendlin and Yeomans will have their championships threatened by two sophomores, Bryan Grant and Wilmer Hines, who, incidentally, rank number 1 and 2 respectively on the Tar Heel squad.

THE W PLAN

CAROLINA-CADETS MEET TODAY IN DOUBLE-HEADER

Last Meeting Went Eleven Innings; Shields or Hinton to Pitch for Heels.

V. M. I.'s hard-hitting Cadets come to Chapel Hill to battle the Carolina Tar Heels in a double-header on their own Emerson field this afternoon, and from all indications there should be a pair of good scraps. The 9-inning game will start at 2:30 o'clock, and the abbreviated 7-inning contest at 4:30.

The last time the old rivals met, it took darkness to settle the issue, and after 11 innings, the score was still deadlocked 5-5. Noble and Williams split mound duty for V. M. I., and Griffith and Edwards for Carolina. It looks as if Noble and Williams, who incidentally is a pitcher who bats in a clean-up position, may pitch again for V. M. I., but George Hinton and Jim Shields are the most logical pitchers for Carolina.

Shields, whose victories include a 2-0 win from Pennsylvania, just set Wake Forest down 3-2 on Tuesday, and Hinton has turned in several good games this spring.

The Tar Heels, with a season record of eight victories, two losses, and two ties, will be fighting to jump into the lead in the Tri-State league. This year's team has been one of the most successful in years.

Little Smoky Ferebee, shortstop, has hit homers in each of the last four games, and leads the Tar Heels' heavy wallopers with Paul Dunlap, fiirst baseman, and Blythe, outfielder. Both Ferebee and Blythe hit homers in Carolina's ten-inning 3-2 win over Wake Forest Tuesday.

Carolina's probable lineup will be: Croom, cf; Ferebee, ss; House, lf; Dunlap, 1b; Blythe, rf; Potter, c; Wyrick, 2b; and Powell, 3b.

V. M. I.'s lineup will probably show Waite, rf; Outen, cf; Laughorn, ss; Williams, Cutchin, 1b; Edmunds, 2b; Britton, 3b; Blocker, c; and Noble, lf.

Heels Defeat Wildcats In Fifth Straight Win

Davidson Gets Short End of 8-0 Victory; Yeomans' Play Features Tie Match.

The Tar Heel tennis team continued its unbroken string of shutout victories over collegiate rivals with an 8-0 win over the Davidson Wildcats Wednesday afternoon. The Carolina netmen have a season record of five straight victories by shutout scores, defeating Clemson, Duke, Davidson once and Wake Forest twice.

The Blue and White team had very little trouble in taming the Wildcats although Grant was carried sixteen games by Dubose

FROSH TO MEET GREENSBORO HIGH

Yearling Trackmen Boast Perfect Record for Season; After Fifth Victory Tomorrow.

The undefeated Tar Baby track team will be after its fifth consecutive win of the season when it meets the strong Greensboro high school team on Emerson field tomorrow morning at eleven o'clock. The Tar Babies have scored a win over Charlotte and Raleigh high schools in a triangle meet, and defeated State once and Duke twice in dual meets. Greensboro placed third in the state high school meet with twenty-two points.

Greensboro will present its greatest strength in the dashes, hurdles, and pole vault. Gunter took first place in the 100 and took second in the 220 yard dash. Norman set a new high school record in the pole vault here last week when he cleared the bar at eleven feet one and three-quarter inches. Norman also took fourth place in the discus. Sockwell and Abernathy placed second and third respectively in the high hurdles in the State meet while Kennerly won fourth in the lows.

The Tar Babies will probably have Ashkenas, Higby, Nicholson, McGlinn, Peacock, Vitz, and Little in the 100, 220, and 440. Weisker, one of the Tar Babies most outstanding sprinters, will probably be kept out of competition with a bad knee. In the 880 and the mile Carolina will present the Sullivan brothers, Louis and Henry, Mead, Groover, Farr, Cameron, Hinson, and McRae. Meade placed first in both the mile and 880 against the Duke freshmen Wednesday,

General Electric Contributions to Health

Sunlamps are a popular feature of the swimming pool at Hotel St. George, Brooklyn, N. Y.

COLLEGE-TRAINED electrical engineers coöperated with the medical profession in developing G-E products that safeguard health. Notable among these are the x-ray tube, the G-E refrigerator, and the G-E Sunlamp. Of these three, the Sunlamp is the latest development, but it has already been acclaimed for its service in helping build that vitality which maintains the happiness of good health.

At Cornell University, members of "cold-prevention classes" (under daily, brief, ultra-violet-ray lamp treatments) reported 40 per cent less colds than were reported by classmates in a group without this treatment. Beyond home and college, the use of Sunlamps has extended to swimming pools and indoor golf courses. In the future, you may enjoy the Sunlamp as a standard fixture in offices, trains, clubs, and many other places where people gather.

And you may continue to expect new, unusual, and useful developments from G-E engineering and research. Among such products, there will doubtless be further contributions to personal health, comfort, and convenience, as well as to the promotion of industrial efficiency.

gard to color and variety of mixture will be utilized by Professor Kennedy in this number.

Selections from the music of England and America will be made manifest in the remainder of the program. One interesting composition which has recently been cast for the organ is Vermeland by the rapidly rising young Danish-American composer, Howard Hanson, dean of the Eastman School of Music at Rochester, New York.

The program in order of performance is as follows: Concert Overture by Faulkes; In Springtime by Kinder; Howard Hanson's Vermeland; Allegretto Espressivo by Bartlett; and Guilmant's Sonata, number one.

The department of music again wishes to announce that concerts and recitals rendered in Music hall are always open to the public without admission. With the possible exception of a benefit performance by the community chorus given during December each year for the poor of Orange County, all occasions are free. Numerous inquiries as to the amount of admission charged for these concerts are received from time to time. The answer is always the same: "There is no admission charge."

just concluded a highly successful folk music festival in Virginia.

The last composer, Lee Briggs, is a youngster of much promise, graduate of the public school music system of Asheville, and composer of "The Hill-Billy", a suite which won the medal for the best composition by a student at the national high school orchestra camp at Interlachen and which was played at the recent Southern Conference on Musical Education in Memphis.

The first part of the program will be given over to Mozarts' "Quartet in D Major", to be played with flute, violin, viola, and 'cello. Stringfield's "Mountain Sketches"—"Morning" and "In a Log Cabin"—to be played with flute, 'cello and piano, will make up the second part. The third part will include a group of numbers for flute and piano —Bove's "Melodie," Barrere's "Nocturne" and Stringfield's "A Doll's Lullaby." After a brief intermission will come the second half of the program, in which the full Faculty Chamber Orchestra will play Hadley's "Herod Overture," Powell's "Hoochee-Coochee Dance", and Briggs' "The Hill-Billy."

In this final concert of the home season Mr. Stringfield will be assisted by Adeline McCall, pianist; D. A. McPherson, violinist; Hugo Giduz, violist; Wilbur Royster, 'cellist; and the faculty chamber orchestra, of which Stringfield is director.

Horney will be the outstanding entrant in the weight events. He tossed the shot exactly forty-one feet against the Blue Imps, and followed this up by taking thirds in the javelin and discus. Mullis will also be entered in the shot and discus, while McBraire will enter the discus, and LeGore and Brandt the javelin.

Other Carolina entrants will probably be: Higby and Nicholson in the broad jump; Dockery, Phipps, Reid, Bullock, and Ashe in the high jump; and Gold, Blount, Efland, and McDowell in the pole vault.

to win the second and deciding set of their match. DuBose dropped the first set to the diminutive Carolina star, 6-0, but came back strong in the second set to hold Grant to a 9-7 victory. This was the second time this year that Grant has received serious competition to any great extent, Rogers' match last Monday afternoon going three sets before the Carolina ace was finally credited with his third straight victory of the season.

In the remainder of the singles matches Hines allowed his opponent two games in the second set to win, 6-0, 6-2. Yeomans and Hendlin scored 6-0, 6-0 victories over their opponents, while Captain Graham allowed his opponent one game in the two sets and Wright was harder pressed, winning 6-3, 6-4.

Hendlin's victory over Colder was his second in as many days by shutout scores while Captain Graham has a record of two games countered against him in his three matches of the week up to date.

In the doubles matches the Tar Heel netmen had little trouble winning their first two matches but in the third were harder pressed. Davidson dropped the first set to Yeomans and Draper by a score of 6-3 but in the second set came back strong to get a 6-4 victory.

Yeomans' play was outstanding in this match. Although suffering from an ankle injury the former state champion played a bang up game to hold off the Wildcat doubles team time after time. Again and again set point was reached by the Davidson netmen but Yeomans managed to bring the score back to deuce each time. In the end however the Presbyterians managed to win the set and the match was tied at one set each.

The third and deciding set was postponed on account of the approaching darkness.

The Heel netmen meet Sewanee here Monday in their final match before the Northern trip which starts next Friday.

be able to enter the entire team as was at one time hoped, and Ruble and Arnold will be the only Tar Heels to enter the competition.

Both Ruble and Arnold have been doing unusually fine work all season and rank at the top of the Southern Conference vaulting heap. Arnold's best height was made last season when he cleared thirteen feet in a dual meet. Ruble is only a quarter of an inch behind him, having cleared twelve feet eleven and three-quarters inches. He holds the Southern Conference indoor record with this mark which is almost five inches better than the previous record.

Neither Ruble nor Arnold has been able to repeat their record making performances but have been taking first places in all dual meets this year without much difficulty. They have tied at twelve feet six inches on several occasions this year, and at no time have both failed to clear this height.

Against V. P. I. here last Saturday both Ruble and Arnold cleared their usual height of twelve feet six, and had the bar moved up to thirteen feet one inch in an effort to break Arnold's school record. Neither was successful, although both came very near setting a new record on each of their three attempts.

Ruble and Arnold will be accompanied at the Relay by Coach Bob Fetzer. Coach Fetzer left Chapel Hill yesterday afternoon to attend the National Collegiate and Olympic Boxing committee's conference which will meet in Philadelphia Friday morning.

Dr. S. A. Nathan, health officer, has been called out of town for the past few days because of the death of his wife's father.

VOLUME XXXIX | CHAPEL HILL, N. C., SATURDAY, APRIL 25, 1931 | NUMBER 154

EXHIBITIONS OF NORTH CAROLINA ARTISTS VIEWED

First Annual Art Exhibition Opens in University Music Hall.

The first exhibition of works by professional artists of North Carolina was opened Thursday in the music building. The exhibit will be on view for ten days, ending May 3, every morning from 11:00 until 1:00 o'clock, every afternoon from 2:30 until 5:30 o'clock, and every evening from 7:30 until 9:00 o'clock.

Modernists are in the majority among the artists whose work is on display. Opposite the entrance are two large canvasses of Francis Speight of Windsor, now a teacher in the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts; one is a snow scene and the other shows two workmen returning home at the end of their day's labor. Mr. Speight, who is a winner of prizes in northern exhibitions, is also represented by several smaller pictures.

Other pictures on both the first and second floors are gay and modern in treatment. Louis Vorhees of High Point strikes an impressionistic note in his works, most of them small. One is a portrait of himself surrounded by the tools of his craft.

James McLean of Raleigh and Mabel Pugh of New York show a tendency to the simple treatment and clean color of the mod-

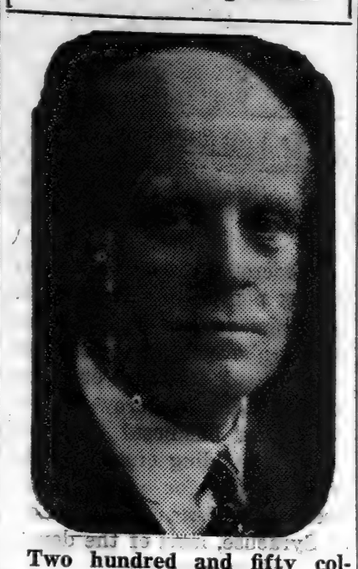
STRINGFIELD TO APPEAR IN LAST FLUTE CONCERT

Director of Faculty Chamber Orchestra Will Present Music of Contemporary Composers.

Lamar Stringfield, flutist-composer, conductor, and former Pulitzer prize winner, will make his last home appearance of the season tonight at 8:30 in the Playmakers Theatre, when he and the faculty chamber orchestra well present a concert.



The program will feature compositions based on native folklore. All the composers, whose compositions are to be presented, are living, with the exception of Mozart. Four of the composers are Americans: Lamar Stringfield, Henry Hadley, John Powell, and Lee Briggs. Three of the composers are flutists, including Georges Barrere, and his pupils, J. Henry Bove, and Stringfield.

Hadley needs no introduction in American music circles, and John Powell, one of the most outstanding concert pianists in the country, is also an artist and scholar of American folk music and its development. He has recently concluded a highly successful folk music festival in Virginia. He will attend the concert.

Lee Briggs, the last composer, a graduate of the public school music system of Asheville, is a young man of great promise. He is the composer of The Hill-Billy, a suite that won the medal for the best composition by a student at the national high school orchestra camp at Interlachen, and which was played at the recent Southern Conference on Musical Education in Memphis.

Convention Speaker

Two hundred and fifty colleges and universities are now enrolled in the liberal arts college movement, President A. N. Ward, of Western Maryland college, who is chairman of the movement, declared in an address Thursday before the American College Publicity Association, which is now in annual convention at the University.

COLLEGE FUNDS ATTRIBUTED TO NEWSPAPER AID

Huge Capital Investments In Higher Education Secured Through Aid of Press.

The stupendous sum of six hundred millions in capital investments toward American higher education has been built up largely through the cooperation of the American press and other agencies of organized educational publicity, according to estimates from a nationwide survey which Frank R. Elliott, of Indiana university, announced at yesterday afternoon's session of the American College Publicity Association convention, meeting at the University.

The figures from Elliott's survey made up the bulk of one of the most impressive features of the whole convention to date, although the meeting reached another climax with last night's banquet at which speakers President Frank P. Graham, and Josephus Daniels, prominent publisher and former Secretary of the Navy, both expressed themselves fearlessly as being in favor of non-censorship of news.

Elliott's survey, covering forty-four representative institutions of higher learning scattered throughout the United States, netted figures showing that more than ninety-six millions in buildings, endowment funds and other permanent assets have been raised recently with the aid of special and organized publicity, and led to the estimate that twenty percent of the total permanent resources of America's universities and colleges, of 600 million dollars, have been accumulated through the aid of newspapers and other media of publicity.

Unqualified credit was given the country's newspapers for playing the biggest single part in the enormous expansion of the country's resources for higher learning, Elliott declaring that "Our millions for education are not coming out of a clear sky, but largely as the result of a continuous and consistent education of the American public to a true appreciation of the value of the teaching, research and direct service pro-

Dr. Gustav Plessow Contrasts German Life With That Here

By Otto S. Steinreich

"America is leading the world in the writing and development of short stories," stated Dr. Gustav Plessow yesterday. The American short story, according to the German professor, is the most popular of all the types of American writing read in Germany.

Since 1900, the visiting scholar said, the style of American writing has become independent of the English style in the matter of language and choice of theme.

The realism of the American novel is greatly appreciated by German readers and the drama, as developed in America, has been the cause of much interest on the part of audiences in that country. Eugene O'Neill's Strange Interlude was staged with great success and the works of Paul Green have created a good deal of comment among foreign readers. Some of the American novelists who have been widely read are: Theodore Dreiser, H. L. Mencken, Booth Tarkington, and Sinclair Lewis.

It was interesting to learn that Negro dialect stories are not greatly enjoyed in Germany. Dr. Plessow explained this by the fact that there are practically no Negroes in the country, and that it is difficult enough for Germans to understand correct English without struggling with corruptions of the language.

The three phases of American life in which the Germans are mainly interested are: neogothic architecture, jazz music, and drama. The great interest in jazz music is not occasioned merely by a desire for an accompaniment to dancing, but also by a sincere interest in this new type of music which especially accentuates rhythm.

In speaking of the points of difference and similarity between American and German universities, Dr. Plessow explained that all students at German universities are graduates and that there is less of the classroom method of teaching, practically all the instruction being given in lectures. The students in Germany do much more individual work and are anxious to acquire small personal liberties.

There is no proselytizing of athletes in German universities, but this is probably due to the fact that there are no intercollegiate athletics engaged in there.

The largest of the universities is the University of Berlin which has an enrollment of about ten thousand students. The smallest university, the University of Erlangen, has about three thousand students enrolled. The university buildings in Germany are usually situated in former palaces or castles.

Dr. Plessow found that American newspapers were very different from those of his Fatherland. Our newspapers, he said, are much more dependent on their advertisers than are German papers. The German editor prints what he thinks, regardless of whether it is disparaging to any advertiser or not. There are no tabloids or chain newspapers in Germany. The supposition advanced by Dr. Plessow, in explanation of this was that the Germans are a race more intent on their own affairs than in the affairs of their neighbors. Papers in the United States place greater stress on the news than do the papers in the lecturer's native land, but there are more feature stories and columns in a German daily. The largest newspaper in Germany has only a circulation of approximately 100,000.

The efficiency of the libraries in America probably impressed Dr. Plessow more than any other feature that came to his notice. "In our country we say that the attendants in the British Museum are the most accommodating in the world, but I know that the library attendants in this country are just as accommodating." In explaining his astonishment at the high efficiency of our libraries Dr. Plessow explained that in practically all the libraries of Europe one has to find the book that he wishes for himself without much help from the attendants, while in the United States the desired book is procured in five minutes or one is told how soon one may get it.

The visiting scholar was convinced that the University was the greatest university in the South. As he naively expressed it, "That's why I came here."

Dr. Plessow will return to his country in June, but before leaving the United States he will visit several friends at Harvard and Yale.

Bradshaw Finds Fraternities Do Not Affect Scholarship Of Members

By Vass Shepherd

Every year thousands of fathers, Uncle Henry, or Aunt Minnies warn their respectively attached prodigies of the evil effects of fraternity life at college upon academic work. Every year as many of these prodigies as can calmly thumb their noses at their respective fathers, Uncle Henrys, or Aunt Minnies and join the best fraternities available.

At some institutions, the effect of these fraternities upon the students they pledge is detrimental to their scholastic work; consequently, several colleges have sought to ban such organizations from their campi. At the University of North Carolina, however, no such problem has presented itself. The whole situation is nothing to be concerned over, according to Francis F. Bradshaw, dean of students, who states, "From tests made here on the campus, we have found that fraternities have no effect whatsoever upon the scholastic work of their members.

"The detrimental effect imputed to fraternities at some colleges seems to be reversed here. The general fraternity average on the campus is approximately "C," while the general academic average is one fourth of the difference between "C" and "D," below the fraternity average. However, this fact is accounted for as being the result of the fraternities taking in students with a higher general intelligence than those not taken in. Seventy-five percent of the freshmen taken in by fraternities are above the general average of the campus."

Winston Threatens Tar Heel With Suit

Chapel Hill, N. C.
April 22, 1931

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

With respect to a news item appearing in the April 22 issue of the Daily Tar Heel entitled "Lawyers Round Up Cowboy Professor" in which it was falsely stated that Mr. P. H. Winston "clattered up to the steps of Manning hall in a dilapidated old buggy drawn by a mangy pony . . ." which statement constitutes a libel against Mr. Winston and the above described property. Wherefore it is hereby demanded that the aforesaid statement be retracted by the admission of the falsity of said statement, which shall be given the same publicity in your paper which was allotted to the said item, within five days persuant to Section 2429 of the North Carolina Consolidated Statutes.

Yours very truly,

TAYLOR SOCIETY HEARS TALK ON RETAIL PROBLEM

Professor Taylor Addresses Commerce Group on Condition Of Chain Stores.

Professor Malcom D. Taylor, of the commerce school addressed the Taylor society at its first meeting for the spring quarter Thursday night at 7:30, on "Recent Developments of Significance in Retailing." Mr. Taylor recently had an article dealing with certain controversial phases of retail distribution in the Hardvard Business Review and was witness for the state at the superior court when North Carolina's first law taxing chain stores was being tried before Judge Cranmer.

Dr. Taylor says in "The Progressive Retailer," regarding the fight between the independent and chain stores: An independent grocer must decide whether he wishes to compete with chain stores primarily on a service basis or on a price basis. Many make the mistake of attempting to do both. If he decides to compete on a price basis, it would be well for him either to buy cooperatively with other local retailers or to join a strong and well managed voluntary chain organization. The efficiently operated voluntary chains doing a cash and carry business have demonstrated their ability to compete with chain stores on a price basis.

"Progressive independent grocers who decide to operate full service stores need have no immediate fear of being forced out of business. Many consumers will continue to demand the services they render. . . . In his effort to build customer goodwill for his store, the progressive independent grocer has a distinct advantage over the chain which must depend entirely upon hired employees to establish personal contact with customers."

SOFT LIGHTS AND RHYTHMIC MUSIC DELIGHT DANCERS

Highly Successful Junior Prom Will Be Followed by Senior Ball Tonight.

A varied and glittering throng of dancers attending the Junior Prom, first of the Junior-Senior dance set, found themselves last night in a transformed Tin Can —a veritable Arabian Nights world of soft, subdued lights and orchestral harmonies.

One acquainted with the Tin Can as a bare and unornamental building, suitable only for athletic events, would have experienced no little difficulty in recognizing it beneath its festive garb, donned for this occasion.

Guests entering by the main doorway were greeted by an atmosphere heavy with the scent of pine trees, as the entrance was flanked by tall pines. After passing through a long tunnel-like walkway, lined with closely-woven evergreens of a height of ten feet, they emerged upon the dance floor.

The ballroom measures 120 feet in length and sixty in width. This space was enclosed on two sides by vertical walls of paper streamers, arranged in alternate black and white stripes. From overhead lights filtered through a solid mass of paper streamers, designed in a manner similar to that of the walls. This illumination furnished a soft glow upon the floor.

At each end of the floor barriers of pines were erected, on

STUHLMAN WILL READ PAPERS TO PHYSICS SOCIETY

Lecture Will Include Work On Efferrescence and Electrodelis.

Dr. Otto Stuhlman, Jr., of the department of physics here, will leave for Washington to attend the meeting of the American physical society and the National Academy of Science on May 1 and 2. Dr. Stuhlman's contribution to the program will be in the form of two papers, one in conjunction with one of his seniors on the "Mechanics of Efferrescence." Work on this problem has been underway for several years and many interesting results have recently been obtained. The results show how bubbles, rising through liquids bursts into many fragments and how the theory obtained from the results can be applied to the rate at which storage batteries may be charged as limited by the splashing of liquids. Other applications of this theory have been found as, for instance, in the bubbling of air in the aeration of drinking water.

The second paper was written in connection with Mr. Henry ZurBurg, teaching fellow in the physics department, and is titled, "Electrodelis Discharge and Characteristics of Hydrogen and Nitrogen."

Dr. Stuhlman recalls that in 1911, when he first presented a paper at the society meeting, there were only eleven papers. At the forthcoming gathering 159 papers will be read. This is only one example of the progress of physics in recent years.

The University of North Carolina will be the only southern university to present any papers at the convention.

Campaign Promises

In his inaugural speech in Memorial hall during the installation ceremonies, President Mayne Albright made the statement that it was his plan to call regular monthly student body meetings for the purpose of students getting together and talking over mutual questions. This suggestion is one of the best we have heard since the coming-in of the new officers.

Such a move will cause the members of the study body to know each other better. As it is now, it is a rare case if a man knows as many as four or five hundred of his fellow students. The usual list of associates of an average student is approximately one hundred. But were this plan of monthly "bull sessions" instigated, the students would feel a personal responsibility toward the University, and in this way would be closer bound to each other. A man can not expect to meet and become acquainted with his fellows within the meeting, but he will have a chance to see who his comrades are, and by having come together with them in the furtherance of the same end will be able to have something in common when they meet again.

One of the main objections to the larger universities is that the students are not able to feel any personal responsibility in the affairs of the student body itself. They seem to have the idea that there are 2500 other students besides themselves, and because of this fact tend to leave the responsibility to the others. If everyone were to do this, as is usually the case with a big majority of the students, there is left only a small group to carry on the problems of the school. But were all called together in one big meeting with each fellow having the same duty to perform, there would be more cooperation among the group as a whole. They would begin to feel that it is their University as well as the other 2500, and in this way would come to take more interest in its workings.

A pep meeting immediately before a big football game draws the students closer together for the carrying out of the same goal — victory. Were these monthly meetings established, the same end would be accomplished.

But what has happened to Mr. Albright's good intention?—C. G. R.

With Contemporaries

Expelling Students Who Drink

The University of Minnesota suspends 17 students for drinking. Five Michigan fraternity houses are padlocked, with students suspended. Two co-eds and three men students were expelled from Oregon for drinking.

What we can't understand is, why discriminate against students? Most young people between 19 and 22 drink at parties in the more civilized parts of the country. That can't be denied. Clerks and salesgirls aren't fired on Monday because they imbibe at Saturday night parties. They're fired if they don't report on Monday. But students are expelled and deprived of training for a livelihood just because they drink—whether they are good students or not. How ridiculous!

Political bigwigs want to frighten students into being good drys. They don't know the American undergraduate. Canning a student for drinking will drive others to it, just to show everyone what a bunch of hell-raisers they are. That's human nature, something prohibition never took into consideration.

Students show that. In Kentucky, a state university student was expelled from his frat because he threatened to turn dry informer. That's expected. Fraternities would end if brothers couldn't mix ginger ale with the what-have-you without another brother rushing to the telephone to notify the flatfooted bluenoses. In the past generation, a needy student was helped by jobs as waiters, tutors, et cetera. Now, they patronize you as bootleggers to help you through college.

The most sensible view from a college professor we've heard came from President Ernest M. Hopkins of Dartmouth. "They shouldn't raid college fraternities until they are going to raid country clubs," he said. And he is right!—Ka Le O—Hawaii.

What If—

It isn't often that a college professor calls down one of his students, but when it does happen the student grumbles to himself just as though the professor were at fault.

On the other hand, football coaches spend much of their time finding fault with their proteges in a verbal manner all their own. What if coaches were professors? If they were, perhaps the classroom dialogue would sound thus:

"What's the matter with you bunch of hoboes? I want you to put some pep into the recitation this morning. You're not at any pink tea. All you've done this year is stall around, and I'm one guy that won't stand for it, see? Yeah, I mean you Billings, and you too, Hart.

"There's one thing that I don't like about you, Hart, and that is that you are too d— cocky. Can you recite the lines of Shakespeare that I assigned for today? You can't do it? That's about the class of work that you've been doing all year.

"Hey, you dizzy blond in the front row, can you come out of the coma and give it? All right that's not bad. You're showing better form, blondie.

"Wake up, Smith, and tell me where Shakespeare was born. What? Why, you half-wit, you dumb cluck, gowan to the showers. I mean it, don't stand there with that far-away look in your eyes, git.

"I don't know what you'll do when you meet the semester exams. I can't drill any knowledge through your phony domes. I give up. Get out of here now and don't show up again until you study your lessons."—The Daily Iowan.

The Passing Of The Wrecks—

Dignity is fast taking the helm in the direction of college activities and undertakings. One of the most pertinent observations on modern trends was made recently in a current magazine: "Where has the college flivver gone?"

In the good old days, dignity was a thing to be acquired when one acquired long gray whiskers, and not before. Youth and carelessness were synonyms. No college student ever stood upon his dignity. It simply wasn't done.

Nowadays straight-eights are all the rage. Smoothly-lined roadsters are in vogue. The college wreck is a thing of the past. And it is, in many ways, too bad. Fine clothes are essential for the representative college man. And expense accounts, sad to relate, are following rapidly the trend of the times. Father is worried, and father should be. Son must keep up, at all costs, his newly acquired but very active dignity.

We are in favor of a return to the good old days, however brief the holiday might be.

Hence we contemplate a new annual tradition: The Old Car Derby. Races will be run off at the state fair grounds, and prizes given the winning drivers. No car will be allowed to enter the competition which is later than a '23 or a '25 model. Wrecks will be at a premium, since only college wrecks will be allowed in the running. No dignified person will be allowed upon the grounds, upon penalty of strict ostracism. A free and easy afternoon is our aim. It may work.

Before definite plans are arranged for such an Old Car Derby, we would like to know one thing. Are students interested?—Daily Nebraskan.

Suppose We Stop Being Model Losers

California has initiated a new honor for which one may become famous, namely, for being a good loser. With the regularity of our defeats, we have assumed a superiority complex in being the best of all defeated teams. And as yet we have found no rivals who rejoice in so successively coming out on the short end of the score.

It wasn't so long ago that we were humiliated by continual losses and we complained of the team, the coach and the rooters. But now that we are acclimated, we accept them as a matter of course and what's more, we seem to like it.

There is the Stanford track meet Saturday and most of us are unmoved by the prospects of being beaten. If we really want to be sincere with ourselves it is about time that we changed our complex and perhaps some one else will take our newly accepted crown.—Californian.

BRADSHAW FINDS FRATERNITIES DO NOT HURT GRADES

Bradshaw's supervision, a general survey was taken of the effect of fraternities upon the scholastic averages of their members. The general procedure was as follows. After the presentation of the college aptitude tests at the beginning of the year, the grades made on this test, together with the grades made throughout high schools of equal scholastic standards, were taken to form a representative group of one hundred students, fifty of this group having joined fraternities and fifty remaining unaligned to any such organizations. In this manner, the scholastic averages which should normally be made by these students could be predicted. When the scholastic records of these same students were studied later, the fraternity students were found to have lived up to their predicted standards as well as the non-fraternity students.

So, when a contemporary college of the same estimated size as this University recently sent the dean a report showing the detrimental effect of fraternities, etc., he just laughed and laughed and laughed. Maybe the fathers, Uncle Henrys, and Aunt Minnies are after them now! The real truth of the matter lies in the fact that the attitude towards studying here on the campus is superior to that in other institutions of learning where fraternities are criticized as being harmful, so states Dean Bradshaw. "Both the fraternities and the students at large are to be congratulated upon their attitude."

one hand to screen the entrance and on the other to enclose a tea-garden. In the tea-garden small black and white Japanese lanterns shone down upon the heads of those seeking refreshments. The refreshment booth was built in the form of a large semi-circle.

The chaperones attending the affair were seated in chairs placed in a booth forty-five feet long and parellel to the length of the floor. On the opposite side from this section was the orchestra, located upon a dais or platform at an elevation of several feet from the floor.

The orchestra for the occasion was Johnny Hamp and his Kentucky Serenaders. This band of musicians proved its popularity by rendering an excellent program of dance music.

Brilliant particles of light showered the moving forms of the guests as lights were reflected from the broken surface of a large crystal ball suspended from the ceiling. Five spotlights played on this globe as it revolved constantly, operated by a hidden mechanism. These spotlights were furnished with slides of various colors.

Directly beneath this sphere was a four-sided structure decorated in black and white which supported one of the spotlights. On its sides the words Junior and Senior appeared, together with the respective class numerals, in contrasting colors.

The plans for the decorations and designs were made entirely by Mayne Albright, R. C. Greene, and Sam Breen, who were engaged to decorate the building. These men arranged the decorations for the fall and mid-winter dances, as well as the Spring Festival.

TO THE SWEET SINGER OF PITTSBORO ROAD
(By the Bard of Franklin Street)

To the poet of yesterday
My thoughts unspoken must give way,
For his expression of Wex's theme
Was surely a disremembered dream.

That legal poet of the town
Deserves a gallant mamma's boy frown;
And a co-ed blurting forth in rhyme,
Should be waived adieu in shortest time.

Let's put a stop to this mushey verse,
Or else receive the "softie's" curse;
For its continuance, I have a hunch,
Will increase the freshman friendship bunch.

SYRACUSE PROFESSOR PREDICTS COLORFUL BUILDINGS IN FUTURE

"Skyscraper seasickness" causes many an exit from tall buildings swayed by the wind; offices above the twentieth floor are difficult to rent; our cities are becoming overcrowded with centralized business! And still the tall building craze probably will continue for quite a while, predicts Professor Fred R. Lear, of Syracuse, head of the department of architecture.

Reaching to the clouds with modern skyscrapers is merely a fad indulged in by cities trying to outdo each other, the actual demand for tall buildings steadily decreasing, Professor Lear believes. Nevertheless, the situation gives modern architects something to think about.

Less than half a century ago, the skyscraper movement began in New York City, the first steel frame having been used for a Chicago building about 1870, according to Professor Lear. This steel construction allowed the building, which was situated in a swampy area, to settle as a whole.

"In the beginning, a tall building was a series of low buildings put on top of each other, like the Flat Iron building in New York," he says. The column type with the decorative base, simple shaft, and decorated cap followed in the skyscraper movement. Finally the vertical treatment was applied to tall buildings to enhance their height, the Woolworth building being in this classification. Next the set-back type was introduced in conformance with the New York zoning laws.

There are too many tall buildings and too much centralization in our large cities today, Professor Lear believes. "If the roads in New York City were wide enough for all the people to come in to work, there wouldn't be enough space left for places in which to work," he points out. He suggests that the problem might be solved through decentralization with the development of community units as the first step. He expects that eventually, cities will become less important as centers of business.

"The architects of the near future must spend more time developing a lower and broader treatment of buildings such as the Lincoln Memorial in Washington," he says. "In comparison with the engineer, the architect will have to bear the brunt of this problem, since it is always his duty to deal with opinions on beauty and esthetic qualities, while the engineer works with facts concerning the economic side of the construction.

"In the future, we're not going to be satisfied with merely simplified architecture but will demand that it be beautiful as well as simple. Because of the character of new materials constantly being developed, the buildings in the years to come will be more colorful than ever," he predicts. —Syracuse Daily Orange.

Sunday Will Begin Light Saving Time

On Sunday, April 26, people in many cities of the North will set their clocks forward one hour for daylight saving time. Although Rhode Island and Massachusetts are the only two states that use daylight saving time by state legislation, many of the larger cities in the North have adopted the plan independently. New York, Philadelphia, and Chicago are among the cities that use the plan regularly each summer. In Mexico, daylight saving time is used the entire year.

This plan was originally devised as a means of conserving fuel. It was practiced in Europe during the World War, and was used by the United States in 1918. Daylight saving time has found much favor in the cities, because it provides the laborers with more hours for recreation. In the country, however, it has met general disapproval, because of the necessity of farmers arising an hour earlier.

Under the general plan of daylight saving time, clocks are set forward one hour on the last Sunday in April, and are turned back on the last Sunday in October.

Education Men Go To Raleigh Meeting

A number of the faculty of the school of education left Thursday for Raleigh to take part in the annual general assembly of state teachers. The assembly will convene in Raleigh until Saturday morning, presided over by the superintendent of the city schools. Several members of the education school of this University will deliver addresses on educational topics including statistics on the progress in teaching of certain subjects throughout the state. Dr. Groves of the University will talk on "Child Care from the Psychological Side and Family Relations," and Professor H. F. Munch will deliver an address on "The Present Status of Geometry Teaching in North Carolina."

Representatives from all cities and counties in the state will be present at the assemblage. Among the representatives from the University are Dean Walker, Dr. Ernest Groves, Mr. I. C. Griffin, Miss Marks, Mr. and Mrs. C. E. McIntosh, Mr. H. F. Munch, and Mr. A. K. King.

Tar Heels Take Twin Bill From V. M. I. Cadets

Carolina Wins, 3-2, 6-2; Hinton And Shields Hurl Good Ball; House Gets Five Hits.

Carolina jumped into second place in the Tri-State League standings by taking both ends of a double-header from V. M. I. yesterday at Emerson field. The scores were 3-2 and 6-2.

George Hinton pitched the first game for the Tar Heels and allowed but six hits. Hank Noble was on the slab for the losers and was shelled for nine safe bingles including doubles by Ferebee and two by Henry House.

John Shields worked the second game for Carolina, which was cut to seven innings by agreement, and allowed three scattered blows. Hank Noble tried to do an "iron man" act for the visitors but was sent to the showers in the fourth frame when the Tar Heels scored three runs. Shomo finished the game for the visitors, allowing but one hit in two innings.

The Tar Heels scored two runs in the second inning of the opener on three hits. Hinton walked but was picked off first by Noble. Peacock singled through the third baseman and scored on House's double to center. House tallied when Edmunds, second baseman for the Cadets, let Dunlap's roller go through his legs.

With the score three to one, V. M. I. staged a rally which netted them one run. Edmunds, leading off, tripled to center. Britton doubled to right, scoring Edmunds. Hinton got out of the hole by retiring the next three batters.

The feature of the second game was a home run by Dunlap with House on base in the third inning. In the next frame the Tar Heels made ample use of two hits and the same number of walks to score three runs and put the game on ice. Pattisall walked and scored on Croom's single to center. When Williams let the ball roll through his legs, the speed boy continued on to third. Ferebee walked and House's fifth hit of the day scored Croom and Ferebee.

Briefs

House led the attack for the Tar Heels with three hits for four times at bat in the first game and two for three in the nightcap.

It's a pleasure to watch Bill Croom run the bases. Bill is fast enough to carry the mail in any league.

Paul Dunlap, the slugging first baseman, got a break in the second inning of the final game. Paul slugged a fast one to right field, which only appeared to be a single, but when the apple hopped over the fielder's head, Dunlap continued around the bases.

The Tar Heels took advantage of Turner's poor arm. Four men stole second in the first game, and seven did the trick in the nightcap.

Duke today. Batteries: for Duke: Coombs and Voorhees. For Carolina: Longest and Potter.

Phi Schedules Dance

At a called meeting of the Phi assembly held yesterday at 10:30 o'clock, in the Phi assembly hall, the members decided that the Phi would have a dance on May 2 between the hours of 6:00 and 9:00 o'clock.

The final arrangements for the orchestra have not yet been made. This feature of the dance will be decided at a later date by the dance committee.

Fanning and Panning

By Billy Arthur

(Setting in the tennis tournament. Wilmer Hines and Captain "Sonny" Graham are playing tennis. To be sure!)

Referee: Score is 30-15.

Hines: O. K. Colonel.

Graham: Serve.

Hines: Well I'm a œ$%&¼!!

Graham: Tough luck, Wilmer.

Referee: Hines' advantage.

Hines: No, only deuce.

R: (Insisting.) It was to your advantage. This game is too fast for me.

H: Is that sarcasm? (Serving) Was that out?

G: Good shot. It was in.

R: Out. Fault.

G: It was good. Your game, Wilmer.

R: This game is too fast for me. Put some men on those lines. I can't see them from here.

Voice from stands: Can you see at all?

G: (Serving his second ball.) Was that good?

H: Yes.

R: Hey boy, how was that shot?

G: Never mind; what's the score?

R: Deuce.

V. F. S.: Are you sure?

R: I think I am. This game is too fast for me.

G: This game is too fast for me!

H: This game is too fast for me, too.

G: We should have a couple of detectives to keep tract of the score.

H: Hinkey, you be the police dog.

G: And Bryan, you be a rat terrier.

V. F. S.: And you, Mr. Referee, be a beer hound.

R: THIS GAME IS TOO FAST FOR ME!

In the first day's matches, Wilmer Hines was far off his game in the tilt with Sunny Graham. Although Graham played the best game he has exhibited this season, he was unable to beat Hines. Just another case where experience rules, for Sunny would blow up in the pinches. Graham had many things his way, for Hines' backhand was lacking.

In the quarter-finals Hinkey Hendlin was pushed by Rogers but came out on the top side after the match had gone three sets. Hendlin's volley was off. That coupled with Rogers' almost perfect placements enabled him to take the second set from Hendlin and make him work hard to take the deciding set.

Rogers is a fine example of how to play hot and keep cool. Yet he has a footfault that is very noticeable. His foot is over the line on the first ball; and on the second serve Rogers looks as if he purposely steps over the line before serving.

No mention has been made of John Warren's debut in the pro ring, although he was beaten in his first appearance. Judging from Jake Wade's write-up in the Charlotte Observer, Warren made a very good show against a battered, seasoned, professional named Rowsey.

Jake Wade says: "He presented an outside picture of coolness and calm as he stepped against the veteran. . . . He won the first round and even floored the West Virginian for a short count, but it was too quickly observable that he was no match for the rugged gladiator confronting him. . . . Crossing him with rights and lefts he (Rowsey) finally sent one of his rights to the solar plexus. A beautiful tanned body, as pretty a fighting chasis as anyone would want to see, crumpled to the floor; and for once a fight gallery sighed in pity at the distressful figure."

This fellow that Warren fought was far too good for him to be matched with in his first appearance. But Add's manager thought different. And another time a fight manager was wrong!

TAR HEEL-DEVIL CLASH FEATURES BIG FIVE SEASON

Edwards or Longest to Pitch for Heels; Coombs to Get Call For Duke.

Carolina and Duke baseball teams, both undefeated in the Big Five, will meet here this afternoon at 3:00 o'clock, and the dopesters are saying that the 1931 Big Five champs are going to be seen in action this afternoon.

Not since 1927 have the Tar Heels defeated Duke in a baseball game. That year the Heels won the first contest and the Devils took the second. In 1928, '29 and '30 Duke won both games each year. In the past two years Duke has held the state title.

Duke has won four of four starts in Big Five play this season, trimming Davidson 4-1 in its last triumph on Wednesday. Carolina has played but one game in the Big Five, that netting a 3-2 win over Wake Forest, but the scrappy Tar Heel club has an impressive season record of 9 wins to 2 losses and 2 ties.

A victory for the Devils would almost give them the state title, It would be their fifth victory with only three more games to play.

Coach Jim Ashmore of Carolina has already announced that he has saved his two right-hand aces, Paul Edwards and Cecil Longest, and the Devils on their side are known to be out for the Tar Heels.

To Bobby Coombs, sophomore righthander, goes the task tomorrow of attempting to turn back the Tar Heels, thereby enabling the Devils to continue their drive for their third straight Big Five championship and to win their eighth consecutive victory over Carolina.

The young nephew of the Duke coach has a great pitching record to date and in addition to that has been turning in his part of the hitting. In ten times at bat he has garnered five hits for a .500 average, the best mark on the team.

Both clubs are comparatively teams of youngsters this year, but that seems all the more reason for a tough scrap. In other years of late, Duke has held a decided jinx for Carolina nines, Lefty Jenkins, graduated last year, having beaten Carolina every game for three seasons.

The Tar Heels will be out to break the streak Saturday, and with a team of heavy hitters like Dunlap, Blythe, House and Ferebee, have turned out to be, the feature game of the Big Five season should result.

Duke Will Sponsor Glee Club Concert

Approximately forty men selected from the ranks of the Maennerchor will offer a full concert as the last of a series of musical events sponsored by the Duke university Y. M. C. A. council. The concert will be presented next Tuesday evening at 8:15 in Page auditorium.

Harry Lee Knox, accompanist for the Glee club, will present two groups of piano solos, and Arthur H. Fleming, Jr., baritone, will feature several numbers as soloist. Following the concert, the members of the Glee club will be the guests of the Social committee of the Y. M. C. A. at a reception and dance in the Students' union.

Batteries: McBryde and Pegram; Jenrette and Budd.

GOLFERS ENTER STATE TOURNEY

Yesterday the golf team went to Sedgefield to play the Davidson golfers. The twosomes were played in the morning and the foursomes in the afternoon. The Carolina team will present a new lineup with Bev Mason playing number one by virtue of his win Thursday over Ben Goodes. Goodes, Brown and Laxton in order finished out the finest four.

Davidson pulled the major upset in the state golf world by downing the highly touted Duke team by the score of 10½ to 7½ on the Hillandale course Thursday. The match yesterday was therefore a close one and although the outcome was not known at the time of this writing, it is sure to be close.

Bev Mason has been playing sensational golf lately and has moved from a lowly fourth place on the team up to the No. 1 position. Ben Goodes, who has been playing the first man, was trounced by Mason at Hope Valley by a score of 5 and 3. Joe Adams, who has been low scorer in the two matches played to date and who has been playing number two regularly, seems to have lost his stride and has dropped out of the first four. His slump is only temporary and Joe is due to hit his stride in the individual state tournament at Sedgefield Saturday.

After playing the Wildcats yesterday, the Tar Heels will tee off this morning in the State Intercollegiate Tournament. The first four men will represent Carolina in the team scores and then four others, Adams, Brooks, O'Brien, and Carter are entered in the individual score.

All-Carolina Final Results as Hines Beats Yeomans and Grant Wins over Hendlin.

By Billy Arthur

Bryan Grant and Wilmer Hines waded through the semi-finals to meet each other for the state tennis championship, which will be played this afternoon at 3 p. m.

Early in the afternoon, Grant defeated McLean of Davidson, 6-0, 6-0; and later defeated Hinkey Hendlin, by the scores of 6-3, 6-4, 6-4. This was a semi-finals match and gave Grant of the upper bracket the right to meet Hines, in the lower bracket, in the finals.

Hines defeated Yeomans in the semi-finals with a score of 6-4, 8-6, 6-2.

To reach the semi-finals, Ed Yeomans defeated DuBose of Davidson, in the quarter finals yesterday morning. The scores were 6-1, 6-1. Also in the morning affair, Hines defeated Lenoir Wright, Carolina, 6-2, 6-2. Hinkey Hendlin took Rogers of Duke into camp after being forced to play three sets. Rogers took the second set 4-6, while Hendlin won the other two 6-3, 6-3.

The semi-finals were late getting started, but Hines and Grant hooked up to beat Fletcher and Griffin of Wake Forest, 6-0, 6-2. Carolina scored another victory in Yeomans and Wright who defeated Perry and Crow of State 8-6, 6-3. The remainder of the semi-finals doubles matches will be played off this morning at ten-thirty, finals beginning at 4:30.

Grant's play with Hendlin was the feature of the afternoon. He was not working fast. He couldn't afford to. He had already played McLean of Davidson, was playing Hendlin, and had a doubles match staring him right in the face. Yet his play was slow, smooth, and consistent. His placements were good, and many times he out-guessed Hendlin.

Grant would hit the ball in the wrong place at the right time but inside the court. Some of his volleys were as inappropriate as the cover of the latest issue of the Carolina Magazine. (Oughta make a talkie of that!)

Yeomans gave Hines many good balls to play. They came as free as book matches. (There he goes again.) Hines laid low and took advantage of everything Yeomans had to offer, and finally came out on the top side of the score. Had Yeomans not been so inconsistent in his play, the set scores might have been different.

Morning matches:

Yeomans (C) defeated DuBose, (Dav.), 6-1, 6-1; Hines (C) defeated Wright (C), 6-2, 6-2; Hendlin (C) defeated Rogers (Duke), 6-3, 4-6, 6-3.

Afternoon matches:

Hines (C) defeated Yeomans (C), 6-4, 8-6, 6-2; Grant (C) defeated McLean (Dav.), 6-0, 6-0; Grant (C) defeated Hendlin (C), 6-3, 6-4, 6-4.

In the Doubles

Yeomans and Wright (C) defeated Perry and Crow (State), 8-6, 6-3; Hines and Grant (C) defeated Griffin and Fletcher (W.F.), 6-0, 6-2; Hendlin and Graham over Glenn and Carrol (W.F.), by a default.

FROSH TRACKMEN MEET HIGH TEAM

Tar Babies Will Be Out for Fifth Victory of Season; Greensboro Strong in Dashes.

Carolina's high scoring Tar Baby track men will meet their fifth opponent of the season this morning at eleven o'clock when they face the strong Greensboro high school team on Emerson field. The Tar Babies are yet to be defeated this season and have won all their meets by tremendous margins, while Greensboro took their place in the state high school meet here last week.

LeGore and Horney, who will lead the Carolina weight heavers, have been turning in exceptionally fine performances all season. LeGore has won first place in the javelin in every meet he has entered this season. He was kept out of the opening meet with a hand injury, but has won his event easily in the last three meets. His best single performance was in the first meet against the Duke freshmen when he tossed the spear 178 feet eight inches. He also won against the State frosh with a distance of 175 feet one inch. Horney won the shot against Duke here Wednesday with a heave of forty-one feet, the best he has done this season.

In the dashes, Carolina's main strength will be in Ashkenas, Higby, and Nicholson, all three of whom have been showing consistently good form all year. Weisker, another star dash man, will probably be kept out of competition with a bad knee. Greensboro will have Gunter in the 100 and 220. Gunter won the 100 in the State meet and took second in the 220.

The Tar Baby hurdlers, Goodwin, Bonner, and Glenn, have been running wild in every meet this season. Goodwin won the high hurdles against the Blue Imps with a time of sixteen seconds flat. He is yet to be defeated in the low hurdles and has been beaten only once in the highs, placing second to Glenn in the first Duke meet.

Greensboro will present Norman in the pole vault against Carolina's Gold, Blount, and Efland. Gold holds the record in this event for Carolina freshmen with a heighth of eleven feet eight and one-quarter inches while Norman set a new state high school record last week when he cleared the bar at eleven feet one and three-quarters inches.

Hal Meade, who turned in times of 2:05.2 and 4:55.6 in the 880 and mile respectively Wednesday, will lead the Tar Baby distance runners.

THE W PLAN

TAX-PAYERS TICKET

At a meeting in the Pickwick Theatre, held Thursday night at 8:00 o'clock, a number of the leading business men of Chapel Hill called a caucus for the purpose of endorsing a ticket that would represent the best interest of the University of North Carolina and the citizens of the town of Chapel Hill.

Mr. Ralph Weaver was elected chairman of the meeting and Alex. H. Koonce, secretary. Mr. J. A. Giles stated the purpose of the meeting. To carry out this purpose, Mr. Zeb V. Council was endorsed as candidate for Mayor and the following named gentlemen were endorsed as candidates to serve on the Board of Aldermen for the period of years set opposite their respective names:

I. W. Pritchard for 2 years; J. T. Durham for 4 years; Eugene Andrews for 4 years; E. J. Woodhouse for 4 years.

RALPH WEAVER,
Chairman.
Alex. H. Koonce, Secretary.

CALL IS ISSUED FOR NEW MEN ON TAR HEEL STAFF

Students Who Are Interested Are Asked to Attend Sunday Night Meeting.

Despite the fact that the staff of the Daily Tar Heel has recently been augmented by six new editorial writers and eight reporters, there still remains places open for any person desiring those positions.

For membership on the editorial board the applicant must know how to express his opinion in an editorial in a reasonable and sane way, and he should be ever watchful for an item on which to write an editorial. Previous experience is not required, but anyone who has had experience in this line will be welcomed.

Those desiring places on the reportorial staff need only to be able to recognize a well written article which more than any thing else includes style. Having once attained a fair knowledge of news writing, rapid development as a rule soon follows and the reporters will be entrusted to write the most outstanding articles. "A nose for news" will help one greatly as a reporter.

There is one thing that is required of every member of the staff and that is loyalty. Each day the reporter is required to cover the beat assigned to him and to get all the news possible from that source. If, occasionally, there is no news on his beat he is to report at the office during the afternoon where he will be assigned a special story.

All would-be reporters or editorial writers are requested to attend the staff meeting Sunday night at 7:00 o'clock in room 104 of the Alumni building where they will be given a trial.

KENNEDY TO PLAY VESPER PROGRAM

At 4:00 o'clock Sunday afternoon, Professor Nelson O. Kennedy will offer the fifth vesper organ concert to be given since the dedication of the organ in the music auditorium. The hour has been changed from 4:45, which was previously announced, to 4:00 o'clock.

The numbers on the program are as follows: Concert Overture by Faulkes; In Springtime by Kinder; Howard Hanson's Vermeland; Bartlett's Allegretto Espressivo; and Guilmant's First Sonata. In the last piece, Mr. Kennedy will be assisted by twenty-five musicians selected from the ranks of the University Symphony orchestra, who will be conducted by Professor Harold S. Dyer, with Professor T. Smith McCorkle occupying the concertmeister's chair.

Cooper Will Head Next Interfraternity Council

At the combined meeting of the old and new interfraternity council at the Coop Thursday night, the main business was the election of officers for the new council. John Phil Cooper, Sigma Nu, was elected president and Haywood Weeks, Theta Chi, secretary.

Following this the council decided that the annual banquet would be given next Thursday night at 8:15 in the private dining room of the Carolina Inn.

Barwick Is Recovering

Allen J. Barwick, class of 1900, attorney in Raleigh, and chairman of the Alumni Loyalty Fund Council, was injured by an automobile accident early this month while returning home from a business trip in Richmond. He is now in Maria Parham Hospital, Henderson, where he is on the road to recovery after having had a relapse.

ern school, without freakish exaggerations. Isabelle Bowen of Raleigh is represented by several old paintings and three line drawings; one of her canvasses is an appealing portrait of her small niece, "Sugar." Nearby hangs a portrait of Mrs. Kluttz by Mary deB. Graves, and other of her portraits are oils of Mrs. Cornelia Roberson and Roscoe Fisher, and pastels of Isaac Manning, Jr., Pembroke Rees, Nancy, Murchison, and Dorothy Dashiell.

Clement Strudwick of Hillsboro is represented by a virile portrait of his brother Shep in one of his stage roles; Mrs. Strudwick in both oil and pastel; a portrait of himself in oil; and Gene Erwin in charcoal.

Charles Baskerville, a native of Chapel Hill, now dwelling in New York, has on display two water colors and one oil. The oil is done on a silver panel and shows two monkies and a queer bird regarding one another solemnly. This is an example of modern decorative design which is Mr. Baskerville's forte. He paints screens and murals, and is particularly fond of the monkey in his designs. He painted a pair of them for the apartment of Glenn Anders in New York. His work, characterized by dash and modernity, is popular with the fashionable and artistic set of the metropolis.

William Steene's portrait of E. C. Branson is one of the exhibits. A spring landscape is by Mary Tillery of Meredith, and she also has water colors and black-and-whites. Mrs. Mary Hunt of Oxford shows a lady in blue velvet. William Pfohl of Winston-Salem, a new member of the association, has several paintings of old Salem in water colors, and one large oil of his favorite subject with figures in historic costumes, this canvas having been loaned for the exhibition by Mrs. R. W. Reynolds.

Perhaps the most talked-of picture in the show is Elliott Daingerfield's "Carolina Mountain Country," which he painted at Blowing Rock where he had a studio for thirty-five years. Mr. Daingerfield is an internationally famous artist who likes to claim North Carolina as his home.

In the last few years there have been several exhibitions by North Carolina artists of varying experience and ability. This show is the first put on by an organization composed entirely of men and women who work at painting and drawing for a living. Only members of the association may exhibit, and new members are chosen on the basis of work submitted to a jury. Every member must be either a worker in North Carolina or a native of the state. The Association, having been organized only last year, is merely a nucleus of what it will come to be in the future.

Penick Will Preach At Chapel of Cross

Sunday morning at 11:00 o'clock, the Rt. Rev. Edwin A. Penick, bishop coadjutor of North Carolina, will preach and administer the Rite of Confirmation at the Chapel of the Cross. Bishop Penick is well known as an interesting and forceful speaker. He is a graduate of Sewanee and the Virginia seminary. He began his ministry in South Carolina, and served as chaplain at Camp Jackson during the war. Shortly after he became rector of St. Peter's, Charlotte, and in 1922 was made bishop.

Because of the bishop's visit, there will be no 8:00 a. m. service Sunday, and the Holy Communion will be celebrated at 11 o'clock.

CARR DORMITORY WORK PROGRESSES

Building Will Be Made Over into Club-Dormitory for Professional Students.

Work is rapidly progressing on Carr dormitory in renovating the entire structure and making it a thoroughly modern building. It is expected that work will be completed by June 10 and will be ready for occupancy during the summer quarter. Plans have been made to make the new building a club-dormitory, and it will be occupied starting next fall, most likely, by either medical or law students. Plastering, now being done within the building, will be finished in about ten days.

At the ends of each floor, suites of two rooms have been arranged. Each room in the building will have a separate lavatory and hot and cold water. The entire lighting facilities of the building have been changed and base plugs for reading lamps have been inserted into all rooms. In front of the building there will be a lounge room for the residents of the dormitory and for visitors. Separate showers have been planned on every floor and the upper floors of the building contain more rooms than they previously had. Throughout the entire structure, new floors have been built and drinking fountains will be added on each level. The entire inside will be painted, as will also be the woodwork on the outside. The rest of the outside will be cleaned up suitably.

University Women Gather in Durham

The North Carolina division of the American Association of University Women convenes for its fourth annual conference in Durham, today, the members of the Durham branch being hostesses. Headquarters will be at the Union on the Women's College of Duke University on the east campus and at the Washington Duke hotel.

Mrs. E. R. Mosher, state president, will preside over the sessions and the following delegates from Chapel Hill are expected to attend: Miss Katharine Jocher, president of the Chapel Hill branch, Mrs. D. L. Coney, Mrs. U. T. Holmes, Mrs. H. C. Nolen, Mrs. C. J. McHale, Mrs. N. B. Adams, Mrs. Clarence Heer, Mrs. A. C. Howell, Miss Mabel Bacon and Miss Mary Cobb. Alternates are Mrs. H. W. Odum, Mrs. G. R. McCarthy, Mrs. A. S. Wheeler, Mrs. G. T. Schwenning and Miss Sallie B. Marks.

The guest speakers are Dr. Kathryn McHale, executive and educational secretary of the National Association, who spoke at an open meeting last night at 8:30, and Dr. Winifred Cullis, president of the International Association, who will be the luncheon speaker today. Other special features include a sight-seeing trip of Durham and the new Duke Campus with a tour of the medical school; tea to the delegates and visitors with Mrs. William Few as hostess; and dinner at the Union to the delegates as the guests of Duke University. The business meeting this morning will include a special session on collegiate and vocational guidance of girls in the secondary schools. The luncheon, followed by an informal reception to Dr. Cullis, will bring the conference to a close.

Second Radio Talk

Ed Hazelwood, newly elected chief cheerleader, spoke over WPTF in Raleigh yesterday afternoon on "The History of Cheerleading at the University," in the second of a series of radio talks scheduled for this quarter.

The match is to be a thirty-six hole medal play tournament. The first four men on the teams of the different colleges will be entered in the individual tournament as well as in the race for team supremacy. After the showing of the Davidson boys against Duke this team seems favored to win the tournament. The best the Tar Heels could do was to gain a tie with the Dukemen. The whole thing hinges on the outcome of the match yesterday between the Tar Heels and the Wildcats.

As far as the chances of the Tar Heels to cop the individual title are concerned, Coach Kenfield says they are good. He thinks that this is going to be the best tournament that has ever been held in the state. He says that Joe Adams has a good chance to take it if he returns to form. The other members of the team are equally liable to come through and he thinks that the cup is open to anyone.

The first part of the program will be devoted to Mozart's Quartet in D Major, to be played with flute, violin, viola, and cello. The second part will consist of Stringfield's Mountain Sketches, Morning, and In a Log Cabin. These numbers will be played with flute, piano, and cello. The third group of numbers, to be played with flute and piano, include Bove's Melodie, Barrere's Nocturne, and Stringfield's A Doll's Lullaby.

After a brief intermission, the full faculty chamber orchestra will present the second half of the program. The numbers to be played are: Hadley's Herod Overture, Powell's Hoochee-Coochee Dance, and Brigg's The Hill-Billy.

In this final concert of the season, Mr. Stringfield will be assisted by Wilbur Royster, cellist; Hugo Giduz, violist; D. A. McPherson, violinist; Adeline McCall, pianist; and the faculty chamber orchestra, of which Stringfield is the conductor.

Now, if the fellow who invented unbreakable windshields will only try his talent on banks.—Roanoke World-News.

COLLEGE FUNDS ATTRIBUTED TO NEWSPAPER AID

vided by our national system of higher learning."

The survey, Elliott further pointed out, "took into account only those education assets which came with special publicity programs, and did not include the part played by the regular, day-by-day interpretation of higher learning which nearly every important university and college is now carrying on through its news bureau and other publicity activities."

What this work of the press means, Elliott went on, is understood only "when we consider that 1,216,811 students were enrolled in our colleges in 1928," that practically all institutions are overcrowded and turning away applicants even now, and that without this outlay of 100 millions secured since the war, thousands of America's young men and women "simply could not have had the cultural, professional and technical training they have been getting since the war."

There were several other interesting talks on this morning's program. Miss Lillian Gardner, Publicity Director at New Jersey College for Women, who declared that editors want "brightening" stories from girls' colleges, preferring a picture of a prettiest freshman to a list of Phi Beta Kappas, and who pointed out that the tough job of the publicity director is to satisfy both the press and the public, and also the professors, who often think such publicity cheap and unfavorable.

Louis C. Boochever, Cornell University, quoted figures showing the great scientific contributions of colleges, urging their superiority as publicity material, and declaring that American research, both fundamental and practical as it is, need not fear Soviet Russia's banning all but research as to practical matters.

That American radio stations give one-tenth of their time now to educational programs, was an interesting fact brought out by James E. Pollard, Ohio State University, who pointed out the great possibility for educational work and for publicity by way of the radio, while declaring that "the radio more nearly holds the solution for adult and alumni education than any other means available or in prospect." There was also an interesting description of the method of and difficulties faced by national press clipping services in helping publicity directors check up on the use of their stories, this given by J. P. McDonald, General Manager of a New York service.

Besides Mr. Elliott's feature address, this afternoon's session included a discussion of "Publicity Office Organization," by Hector Perrier, New York University, and Henry R. Dwire, Duke; and a special conference on college publications, led by William Morrell and Miss Alena Horner, University of Pittsburgh, and by Robert H. McNeil, V. P. I. A period of entertainment and relaxation followed at 4 o'clock, with the members choosing between playing tennis or golf, or attending a baseball game or an art exhibit, and then tonight came the Convention banquet and dance. President Frank P. Graham and Hon. Josephus Daniels were the banquet speakers, and Robert W. Madry, Publicity Director at the University of North Carolina and Convention Secretary, was toastmaster.

An athletic publicity session and a business session, both scheduled for this morning, will conclude the three-day convention. Margaret Ragsdale, University of Tennessee, Fred Turbyville, Pittsburgh University, and John Maxwell, Lehigh, will speak from the sports publicity writer's standpoint, and Coach Wallace Wade of Duke and Director of Athletics R. A. Fetzer of North Carolina will speak from the coaches' standpoint. Reports of committees and election of officers will feature the business session following.

There were but three confined to the infirmary yesterday. They were Samuel Selden, Arville Culpepper, and George Weaver.

HUMAN RELATIONS INSTITUTE MEETS HERE MAY 3-9

Norman Thomas, H. J. Laski, And General Summerall Are Among Prominent Speakers.

By Charles G. Rose, Jr.

With Norman Thomas, Dr. H. J. Laski, and General Charles P. Summerall heading its list of speakers, the second quadrennial Institute of Human Relations gets under way here, Sunday night, May 3, with a mass meeting in Memorial hall. Dean Shailer Matthews of Chicago University has been secured to deliver the opening address.

The program of the Institute will unofficially open Sunday morning when the pulpits of the five local churches will be filled by visiting speakers. During the week, the class room seminars and conferences will be conducted in those whose subject matter pertains to the line of interest of the different specialists.

The climax of the week will come in the last three days when Dr. H. J. Laski, the British economist and 1930-31 Weil lecturer, will deliver a series of evening addresses.

Dr. Mordecai Johnson, president of Howard University, Washington, D. C., is to be one of the chief speakers in the inter-racial division of the institute, while Benjamin Greer, of Greenville, South Carolina, prominent cotton mill owner and operator, will be outstanding in the industrial section.

The Institute is divided into three separate groups with national figures appearing on the programs of each. Several of the men are scheduled to speak in more than one department, but those men who will be the leaders of the international division will be Professor C. B. Hoover, of Duke University, and General Charles P. Sumerall, ex-chief of staff of the United States Army. Dr. Hoover is nationally known as an authority on the Russian question, and his speeches will deal more with the social conditions in the country than any other phase. General Summerall, president of the Citadel at Charleston, South Carolina, is to discuss the topic of the National Defense Policy and how it affects foreign trade. He is to be assisted in his series of lectures by General Albert Cox of Raleigh.

Publix-Kincey Chain

The Carolina Theatre, formerly a part of the Publix chain of nation-wide theatres, has now become one of the recently created Publix-Kincey Theatres.

This new company, with its headquarters in Greensboro, has motion picture houses in Greensboro, Durham, Fayetteville, Raleigh, Wilson, Rocky Mount, Goldsboro, Hendersonville, High Point and Chapel Hill. The majority stock of the corporation is owned by R. Kincey, secretary-treasurer of the company, as well as the general manager. He was for a long period of time, an executive in the Publix chain of theatres, and now assumes control of the company, incorporated in this state. Although the national Publix theatres own but a minority of the stock, it assures the theatres of the Publix-Kincey chain the cooperation of the best in theatredom.

Staff Meetings

The members of the editorial board will meet with the editor in 104 Alumni building this afternoon at 5:00 o'clock. City editors, desk men, and members of the reportorial staff will meet in the same room at 7:00 this evening.

A final opportunity will be extended those wishing to try out for the Daily Tar Heel staff at this time. This will be the last opportunity for new men to get on the staff this quarter.

VAN HECKE WILL SPEAK ON TAFT

Second Address for Pre-Law Students Will Take Place Tuesday Night.

Professor M. T. Van Hecke, of the law school faculty, will present a lecture on "The Chief Justiceship of William Howard Taft," Tuesday night, at 7:30, in the first year room of the law building. While primarily planned for the law and pre-law students, the lecture will be of interest to all students of law, government, and history. Everyone interested is invited to attend.

This lecture is the second of a series being offered by the law school faculty this year for the benefit of all students planning to enter the law school. The first lecture given by Professor Albert Coates on "Crime and Punishment" was well attended, and many expressions of praise have been heard by the law school for the excellence of this lecture.

The concluding lecture on "Science in the Court Room" will be given by Dean C. T. Mccormick about the middle of May.

Vesper Concert

At 4:00 o'clock this afternoon, Professor Nelson O. Kennedy will render the fifth vesper organ concert since the dedication of the organ in the music hall. Change of hour from 4:45 was effected so as not to conflict with the engagements of students and faculty members.

The program to be presented this afternoon consists of the following: Concert Overture by Faulkes; In Springtime by Kinder; Howard Hanson's Vermeland; Bartlett's Allegretto Espressivo; and Guilmant's First Sonata.

SPANISH CLUB MEETING HAS VARIED PROGRAM

At the meeting of the Spanish club, Friday evening in the Y. M. C. A., the following program was given: A. K. Shields spoke on "Espana"; Ray Madison, "El Club"; O. T. Slate, "La Historia Politic de Espana"; F. T. Dupree, "Unas Bromas"; and C. H. Cantrell gave "Los Bourbones."

The entire program was conducted in Spanish as usual. Membership in the club is constantly growing, and the Spanish department is watching the activities of the club with interest.

Sigma Xi Lectures

The Sigma Xi lectures will be delivered tomorrow and Tuesday in Phillips hall by Dr. Alfred N. Richards, head of the department of pharmacology, University of Pennsylvania.

Junior-Senior Dances Prove Highlight Of Social Season

Judging by the number of people on the floor and by the diversity of their affiliation with the University in general and with the junior and senior classes in particular, the Tin Can appeared to be a jolly gathering hall for freshmen, sophomores, engineering students, med students; law students, and even juniors and seniors this weekend at the Junior-Senior balls.

There has been nothing on the Hill in recent years to compare with the brilliance of this social event in magnitude and color, unless it be compared with the finals whose renown echoes throughout the South. It appears as though a new star has appeared in the firmament, or rather a new dance on the polished floor.

The decorations completely changed the rather battered Tin Can into a fairy-land of black and white crepe paper with dim lights around at convenient intervals. The entrance to the Tin Can was the same old place, but, once inside the doors, the hall was hardly recognizable. A row of stately pines bordered the walk that led to the ballroom. In the center of the room, like a whirling planet, hung a sparkling sphere of fire, reflecting colored lights of blue and yellow into tiny particles that ran here and there among the dancers.

Johnny Hamp and his Kentucky Serenaders furnished delightful music for the two dances. Soft melodious strains conveyed the students and their fair companions into a dreamland conjured up by the orchestra. Due to the immense crowd the stragglers on the outer edges of the floor had difficulty in hearing the music they were supposed to be dancing to.

One of the outstanding points of interest was the singing and handsomeness of the first violinist. "Love for Sale" again became a hit, and constant requests for this number led to its being played several times. "Trees," one of the outstanding contemporary poems by Joyce Kilmer set to music, came in for its just share of praise.

Rain spoiled any wandering about the campus during intermission Friday night and the Alpine refreshment garden was crowded to its capacity during this time. Also this was the only time that one got a chance to get a look at all the feminine pulchritude that really was present.

The size of the assemblage at the Junior Prom caused the dance and decoration committee to enlarge the floor by 600 square feet to take care of the still larger group that was on hand for the Senior ball. Many of the girls who were unable to get out of school on Friday came Saturday and swelled the attendance.

ALABAMA STUDENT UNION FILLS IMPORTANT POSITION ON CAMPUS

(The following article, represents the third of a series in the PRINCETONIAN describing the purposes, financing, and success of university centers, or their equivalents, at various universities throughout the country. It is reprinted through the courtesy of the Daily Nebraskan.)

The newest building on the campus of the University of Alabama is the Alabama Union building. The Union, which is unique in southern colleges, is designed to accommodate and to provide a gathering place for the students during their leisure hours.

The erection of this structure was made possible by funds raised in the 1922 "Million Dollar Campaign" during which alumni and friends of the university subscribed a substantial sum. It is one of the most completely equipped buildings on the campus, with the latest modern improvements and elaborate furnishings. Beautiful in its construction, it stands as a fitting memorial to the soldiers of Alabama who lost their lives in the cause of their country.

In addition to meeting rooms for all student organizations, it contains the university supply store, the postoffice, a large public dining room and a small auditorium. Separate reading rooms for men and women are kept by the Y. M. C. A. and the Y. W. C. A. while loggias, furnished in wicker furniture, open out from two sides of the building.

Meetings rooms for all groups in the university are located on the third floor, together with offices for the Alumni News, alumni secretary, Crimson-White (undergraduate newspaper), Corolla (annual yearbook), Rammer-Jammer (humorous magazine), the university news bureau, student government, glee club, and the Union director. There are also separate club rooms for the faculty and graduate students as well as for the various religious denominations on the third floor.

The Union has opened the eyes of people who have been accustomed to seeing student centers as bare as possible, with seats and tables but with no particular attention paid to the artistic perfection of the whole. The interior is tastefully and beautifully furnished, although no set scheme has been followed and every piece of furniture has been chosen with such care that it fits into the general plan admirably. The colorful draperies and coverings for chairs and sofas, the well-chosen pictures that adorn the walls, the rugs and other fittings create an air of beauty as well as of comfort.

President George H. Denny made the following reference to the Alabama Union and the purposes for which it stands:

"For what does the Alabama Union, built by the alumni and friends of the university, stand?

"It stands, and must forever stand, for the good, the beautiful and the true; for the building of character and personality; for the development, not merely of a small segment, but of the entire circumference, of one's possibilities.

"Our prayer is that thousands of young lives, on the journey to the sunset, may find this place, on the journey to be the very door of hope and the very gate to heaven."

Steele To Lecture

Wilbur Daniel Steele, noted short story writer, will lecture to Professor R. P. Bond's English 23 and 72 classes in Murphey hall at 5:00 o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

General Summerall

General Charles P. Summerall will be one of the chief speakers at the second quadrennial Institute on Human Relations, May 3-9, at the University. The ex-chief of staff is scheduled to speak on "The Nation's Defense Policy and How It Affects Foreign Trade."

GRAHAM'S SPEECH IS HIGH SPOT OF NEWS INSTITUTE

University President Stresses Importance of Well-Balanced Publicity Program.

"Colleges and universities of the country should stress the importance of having a well-balanced publicity program in which no one department or organization should be unduly emphasized to the disadvantage of another," asserted Dr. Frank P. Graham, who spoke Friday night at the annual banquet of the American College Publicity Association in the Carolina Inn.

"It is all right to play up sports for what they are worth," Dr. Graham declared, "for sports have a wholesome appeal for a large percent of our population, but the captain of the football team should not be given all the publicity and the president of Phi Beta Kappa nothing."

Admitting that some angles of college life, such as sports, dramatics, and contests of one sort or another lend themselves to publicity much better than other phases, Dr. Graham said that nevertheless the publicity director seeking a well balanced program could obtain a great deal more space than at present for such items as scientific contributions, attainments in scholarship, the achievement of home town boys for publication in their local papers, and the like.

Josephus Daniels, editor of the Raleigh News and Observer, the second speaker at the banquet, declared that journalism must have a baptism of crusaders at the helm if it is to return to its once proud position. "There are just three types of editors today," Mr. Daniels said, "the crusaders, the synics, and the steriles."

A record attendance of more than one hundred college publicity directors from every section of the country attended this thirteenth annual convention, the high spot of which was the banquet.

Several interesting talks were given during the morning program, among them one by Miss Lillian Gardner, publicity director at New Jersey College for Women, who declared that editors want "brightening stories from girls' colleges, preferring a picture of a prettiest freshman to a list of Phi Beta Kappas, and

SENATE REACHES COMPROMISE ON APPROPRIATIONS

Bill Giving University $759,000 Now Goes to House for Approval.

At the meeting of the state senate Friday morning, the bill was passed which gives the University an appropriation of $759,000 for the next biennium as compared to $724,000 granted in the bill passed by the house and $800,000 as allowed by the senate committee. This amount represents a compromise which was agreed to by friends of the University and on which it is believed the institution can comfortably operate.

N. C. C. W. at Greensboro was given an appropriation of $375,800, the same as was allowed by the house. Efforts were made by Senators Baggett and Burrus to increase this by $20,000, but they were entirely unsuccessful. Senator Blount's increase of $10,000 for Eastern Carolina Teachers college was allowed by the house. Western Carolina Teachers college received and increase of $5,000. Appalachian college's appropriation was raised to $88,000.

A. and T. college for Negroes at Greensboro, in an amendment offered by Senator Dunlap, received an increase of $10,000 for each year of the biennium.

All other appropriations for institutions remained the same as left by the house. The schools had been given generous increases in their appropriations by the committee of the whole, but a movement started yesterday by Senators Grier and Dunlap, the latter, chairman of the senate finance committee, who thought that the condition of the state's finances was sufficient to warrant retraction on the action of the committee of the whole. Although the senate did not cut as much as first suggested by Senators Grier and Dunlap, quite a saving was effected.

Revision of Freshman History Is Effected

In line with the English department's change in freshman English, the history department has decided to give history 1-2 for three quarters next year instead of the usual two.

Beginning next fall, classes in freshman English will meet three times a week and will continue during the entire year. There were several reasons for this change. New men will be given more time and opportunity to do good work, and will be under the supervision of the English department for a much longer period, thus enabling the teachers to help the student a great deal more. Instead of absorbing the whole course in three months and immediately forgetting most of it, the material will be kept fresh in his mind, and staying there for a longer period, will be less likely to be forgotten.

The history department has also changed the freshman history course to a corresponding length. It will run for the entire three quarters, meeting three times a week. The same amount of credit will be given.

The change was effected for practically the same reasons that caused a change by the English department, R. D. W. Connor, head of the history division, said yesterday.

Mr. Lucas' Sorry Plight

Mr. Robert H. Lucas, executive director of the Republican National Committee, found recently, according to press despatches, "that it is well-nigh impossible to make good traditional Republicans out of the young persons infested with the heresies of university theorists."

This statement is all too true, but whatever joy the seers of the Democratic party may have experienced upon reading of the public enunciation of Republican Mr. Lucas' sad regrets must have been soon dissipated. Upon short reflection, even Mr. Raskob and Co., knew that those sad conditions surrounding the proper education of young Republicans surrounds, with equal power, the up-bringing of stalwart young Democrats. Those "heresies" taught us by "university theorists" have shown us only too conclusively that to be a "good traditional Republican," or Democrat, is to discard that education, intelligence, and wisdom which is so essential to good and enlightened citizenship.

It would be well if we could joyously point with pride to most university graduates, and show that they are the best testimonial to the value of universities in training for citizenship because they are not "good traditional" this or thats, but in honesty, we can't. Most of them, in the long run, if they become interested in politics at all, are attracted to one party or the other, and adhere to that party blindly.

It would be well to see the day, when another Mr. Lucas will issue a statement to the newspapers, in which he will say that it is "well-nigh impossible to secure votes from educated men for the Republican party, infested as they are with a background of political history, and an understanding of the political needs of the country."—F.M.

The Little Elf

To those who attended the Junior-Senior dances this week-end and to those who have voted in any of the campus elections this past year, the little elf needs no introduction. But for those who might not come in these classes, the little fellow is a pensive looking chap with an open book before him. His picture was stamped on all of the tickets to the two dances this week-end, and also appeared on all of the ballots in the campus elections.

The cause behind his wide publicity is not so pleasant as is the face of the little dwarf. His continual appearance indicates a state of affairs which is not the best to be desired. It proves that there is a danger of someone duplicating tickets or ballots published.

So long as this condition exists the University is unable to claim itself to be run entirely on the honor system. Such actions of duplication are contrary to the rules and doctrines of the system. They show that in several places the honor system is falling down. Not that we do not favor this system of government to its fullest extent, but when a situation as this has existed and continues to exist, it signifies that the plan of placing the students on their honor is not having its needed effect.

The duty of seeing that this duplication does not continue and that the little dwarf is cast into the waste-basket lies in the hands of the new student-body officers. They have been elected to see that the honor system is carried out to its fullest extent. They have pledged not only to abide by the rules of the system themselves, but also to see that their fellow comrades did likewise. They have agreed to see that the system is upheld and continued as it was first proposed. Now that such a problem faces them, action must be taken—and that right soon.

The continuation of the little fellow to appear in public is a simple declaration of the officers that they have given up the attempt to clear the campus of its corruption. It might be easily compared to the raising of white flag—surrender.

Shall the new officers also take up this flag as their colors, or will they select "the red badge of courage" and see that the little elf is placed in his place, no longer to appear on the campus?—C. G. R.

The Luxury Of Digression

Hankins, the sociologist, once said, "Allow me the luxury of a digression." He had the right idea, for digressions are of value only insofar as they are illuminating and should be used as sparingly as luxuries of other sorts.

In some classes the students complain of excessive divagation on the part of their professors. For example, a student remarked that his German professor one day started with the study of the subjunctive and wound up in the World War. Another complained that his professor never did get around to a discussion of the text material.

Digressions are a fine thing in that they broaden our "experience by proxy" and serve sometimes to elucidate the subject in hand, but it is rather unfair of instructors to examine students on matters which have not been adequately discussed in class. This is especially true in freshman and sophomore courses where more attention is paid to the study of a particular text. A possible cure for the worst offenders would be to establish a school of thought in which instructors would start with a digression and bring in the subject matter in the form of a further divagation. This would insure copious treatment of the text.

Perhaps more instructors are guilty of not digressing enought and do not realize the value of comic relief in a dry lecture, or the possibility of illustrating with a personal experience. Digressions have a distinct value to us as students, if they are germane to the subject and are the exception rather than the rule.—A. J. S.

Values: Material And Spiritual

It is platitudinous to say that we are living today in a period of exaggerated materialism. We find manifestations of this spirit all around us—in the business world, in politics, on our campus. It is necessary but to look around us to see that the time is rapidly coming when material improvements and comforts will be a matter taken for granted. And not only taken for granted but largely controlled by factors over which we will have comparatively little control. It is difficult to predict what Americans will do when they become conscious of this situation. Our values today are based almost entirely upon a sense of proportion of things material. We are comparatively insensible to the finer values of the realm of spiritual things.

It is unfortunate that our college campi are not forward looking enough to prepare for that coming day. The day has arrived in Russia where material values for the individual are controlled almost completely by exterior factors. The day is just beyond the horizon for us. And yet here we are still holding ourselves incessantly sensitive to advantages of material offerings.

On the college campus we see the self-help student toiling away at making the dollars and cents that will enable him to stay in college. We see the fraternity man trying to take advantage of every opening which will make him appear more secure and more privileged materially. We see fancy fraternity houses going up and being adorned with many unnecessary appendages which are no more than gestures calculated to reflect their material superiority. We see countless other signs of this same spirit of emphasis upon things.

And throughout there is a comparative indefference to those spiritual values which will certainly be the most important factors of our lives in a short time. Cultivation of friendships which transcend all of the qualifying influences of backgrounds and money and advantages, appreciation of beauty, and an emphasis upon truth and the attractiveness of science with its broadest implications are not as highly respected today as they will be. College campi will show their forward looking and intelligent character if they can begin to see a glimmer of the future which is sure to come and prepare for its arrival.—R. W. B.

Local Chapter D. A. R. Will Meet Tuesday Afternoon

The April meeting of the Davie Poplar chapter, D. A. R., will take place in the Episcopal parish house Tuesday, at 3.30. Dr. M. B. Garrett will be the speaker for the afternoon. Following the meeting there will be a social hour at the residence of Mrs. I. H, Manning, 507 Rosemary Street. The General Davie chapter, of Durham, will be guests at this meeting.

Bootleg liquor isn't as hard to get as it is to get over.—Louisville Times.

With Contemporaries

If the Government Controlled Liquor It Would Save Capone Much Responsibility

The fact that prohibition is a great institution is no longer doubted by the more important figures in American life. The men who swing the votes and fix the judges, the beer "barons," realize that prohibition in its present form is a "God-send."

As a result, many call for repeal. Others, still hopeful for eventual success of the "great experiment," suggest modification. Still others point to the Canadian system of government control as the panacea for our ills.

There is no argument, we may presume, that the present state of affairs is intolerable. There is no appreciable difficulty in obtaining liquor. Indeed, the use of hard liquor in universities has admittedly increased. Those, who under the old system of state prohibition had no thought of drinking, now drink because they think it is the thing to do.

Where the government seems unable to prohibit, it should be given a chance to regulate. National regulation and control based on the Canadian system would be a refreshing improvement. We would personally prefer government control of liquor rather than Capone control of liquor, as well as politics and government.—Californian.

The House Mother

A new institution, the house mother, has gradually worked its way into many national fraternities throughout the country, and has taken a strong foothold in several colleges during the last three years. When a movement for the instigation of the house mother was in its infancy in 1929, a report from the Interfraternity conference defined such a matron as "a social mentor for a fraternity chapter who would help in the administration of its house and do such work about the house as the average mother of the members would do about the home."

Although advantages of the house mother are plain as far as improving the moral tone of fraternities, a single fault in the system may sweep aside every factor in its favor. All the advantages are dependent entirely on proper selection. A great deal of care must necessarily be taken before choosing a woman to take up a position within the walls of the modern fraternity house.

Now and then it may be possible to secure the services of a capable house mother at a nominal salary, but under ordinary circumstances it would be extremely difficult to obtain a woman of education and breeding at a cost within the range of the average fraternity. And certainly no other type of woman would be desirable for a position which would require tact and expert management. Many fraternities are operating at a close

By Wex Malone

Perhaps someday I will write a Pulitzer Prize Play, or be the sweet singer of our Southern mountains, or contribute to the Saturday Evening Post at several grand per shot. Then I can wear overalls or a velvet coat around the campus, and eat spaghetti on the floor, and if you don't like it I will be able to tell you where to go.

In the mean time I must be content with my lot, and wander around the village listening to tales about how the Wardlaw twins have never been kissed, since their mother told them it was unhealthy; or curse the unkind Gods who fail to fill the fountain on Franklin street dedicated in terms to keep fresh the memory of Susan Green Hill or somebody; or wonder why Parson Rozelle sees fit to advertise the Almighty on a sign board in front of his church. It's a great life!

Carolina will never be a really erudite institution until more members of the faculty start riding to class in pony carts or on bicycles. What we need is thicker ivy on the buildings and a German band to play in the streets.

Honest, no more poetry, I promise. I have only one further argument to advance against poverty . . . look what it has done to the Playmakers.

I have always suspected that the Carolina Magazine was the real humorous publication of the campus, but I didn't suspect that they would come out with a Buccaneer cover. How about that red hot mama standing on the peer, waving farewell to the boat that was coming into dock? Well, I suppose that even our esoteric editors have the privilege of getting things backwards every two weeks or so.

* * *

After promising that I would leave personalities out just this once I weaken and succumb to the temptation of telling this one on Adelaide Reed. Wishing to bestow some kind of honor on this young lady, I offered to make her official custodian of the royal chewing gum. To my astonishment she didn't seem to care for the idea. I tried to impress on her the real importance of being a custodian. "Oh, you can't fool me," retorts Adelaide. "I know what a custodian is. It's one of those brass things that tobacco chewers use." And think of it, folks, she's a twin!

Tar Heel Trackmen To Meet Generals Monday

Twenty-Four Entrain for W. & L. Meet; Arnold and Ruble to Join Team in Lexington.

Coach Dale Ranson with a squad of twenty-four track men, will leave Chapel Hill this afternoon for Lexington, Virginia, where Carolina will meet Washington and Lee tomorrow in their fifth Southern Conference meet of the season. Coach Bob Fetzer, with Ray Ruble and Brodie Arnold, who represented the Tar Heels in the Penn Relays in Philadelphia yesterday, will join the squad in Lexington.

Those making the trip are: Cliff Baucom, Theron Brown, Stuart Chandler, Wallace Case, Tom Cordle, Sandy Dameron, Archie Davis, Bob Drane, Charley Farmer, Dick Garrett, John Geiger, Red Hamlet, Harry Hodges, Bill Howard, Bob Hubbard, Ken Marland, Joe Pratt, Rip Slusser, J. K. Smith, Graham Stafford, George Thompson, Tom Watkins, Don Waugh, and Lionel Weil. Charley Farmer is still out with a leg injury and will not compete.

Last year the Tar Heels won over the Generals by a score of 78½ to 47½, but Washington and Lee has a still stronger team this year while the Tar Heels will be handicapped by the loss of several men through injuries. George Bagby, veteran high jumper, and Mark Jones, stellar miler, are being left behind to recover from sprained ankles. Both boys will be missed, and it looks as if the Generals will have a good chance to avenge last year's defeat.

With Finklestein and Speer running in the hurdles, Washington and Lee will be strong in both of these events, but they will find worthy competition in Rip Slusser and Archie Davis, in the low and high hurdles respectively. Slusser ran the lows in 24.6 seconds against V. P. I. and beat Brownlee of Duke on a wet track Wednesday in 24.8 seconds.

Carolina will probably enter Marland, Slusser, and Smith in the 100 yard dash; Smith, Drane, and Marland in the 220; Weil, Marland, and Smith in the 440; Watkins, Garrett, and Case in the 880; Cordle and Pratt in the mile; Baucom and Hubbard in the two mile; Slusser, Davis, and Geiger in the low hurdles; Davis, Waugh, and Geiger in the high hurdles; Hamlet and Stafford in the high jump; Brown and Hubbard in the broad jump; and Arnold and Ruble in the pole vault. In the weight events Carolina will have Brown, Dameron, Chandler, Hodges, and Thompson.

Game Postponed

The baseball game scheduled yesterday between Duke and Carolina was postponed on account of wet grounds. When the Tar Heel went to press, no arrangements had been made as to a replay.

The finals of the state collegiate tennis tournament was postponed for the same reason.

DOPING 'EM OUT

By

BOB BETTS

NORTH CAROLINA
WASHINGTON AND LEE
V. P. I.
MARYLAND
NORTH CAROLINA STATE
V. M. I.
VIRGINIA

The teams in the Tri-state baseball league are pretty evenly matched this season. North Carolina, Washington and Lee, Virginia Poly Institute, and Maryland all have good chances of copping the Tri-state championship. V. P. I., the present champions, are not as strong as they were last year. Reggie Mapp, last season's hurling ace, is out of the game at present, and the Gobblers' have a weakened pitching staff.

Coach Jim Ashmore's ball tossers appear to have the best chance to dethrone Virginia Tech. Carolina's rookie infield has performed well under fire. In Dunlap the Tar Heels have the best all round first sacker in the league. Dunlap is a terrific hitter, a fast fielder, and a fine base runner. Pete Wyrick has looked after the keystone sack in a very satisfactory manner. "Smoky" Ferebee, while not a Whitehead, has proved a sensation by his round trip blows and snappy fielding. Billy Powell has saved the day at the hot corner. John Peacock's fielding in center-field has been a sensation; the speedy fly chaser gets them everywhere and is the best gardner the Tar Heels have had in several seasons. Henry House has been hitting often this season and should have a high average. Tom Blythe and Croom have been batting and fielding very well. Carolina is fortunate in having two good catchers in Captain Potter and Pattisall. The catcher is the most important single factor in a team's success. Potter's batting has been improving; there was never any thing wrong with his catching and pegging. George Hinton, Shields, Paul Edwards, Longest, and Griffiith form a fair staff. It is no secret that this is the weakest department of the team. Hinton has hurled fine ball all season and is still undefeated.

Washington and Lee has a fine ball club. Fitzgerald, Cross, Ronton, and Burke make up a fast infield. Fitzgerald is a driving batter and flashy first sacker. E. Richardson, Thibodean, and J. Richardson are the outfielders. Mattox is the best catcher in the league. Leigh Williams is one of the really good flingers in the circuit. He held the Carolina nine hitless for six innings here earlier in the season. Jarrett has pitched great ball for the Generals in all of his starts.

Last year's champion, V. P. I., will have a hard time repeating this spring. The Gobblers have plenty of batting punch, but they lack the pitching. Of course, their slabmen may take a turn for the better; if they do, they will repeat. Sutton is a classy first baseman. The league seems full of good initial bag guardians. Bibb is one of the best if not the best second basemen in the organization. He is a brilliant fielder, and a slugging type of batter. Nicholas and Weede give the Techmen strength on the left side of the infield. Hardwick and Roy Barnard lead V. P. I.'s batters. Both of these players pound the ball hard and often. Palmer is the third member of the outfield patrol. Morgan takes care of catching. Murden, Billingsly, and Land are the Gobblers' best moundsmen. They struck a hard piece of luck when they lost their pitcher, Mapp, who won twelve straight games last year; he recently had to undergo an operation.

Maryland, from all accounts, has a fair baseball team. The infield is composed of Gorman, Derr, Chalmers, and Berger. "Bozzy" Berger, all Southern basketball guard, is just about the cream of the league's third sackers. He possesses a powerful throwing arm and a deadly batting eye. Maxwell, Cronin, and Wilson are the outfielders. Paul Cronin packs a big punch in his bat. Sterling and Jones are the receivers. Milburn, McIlwee, Hauner, and Baton are the slabmen. Like Virginia Poly, they have a weak pitching staff.

State College has a team composed largely of sophomores. Gerock, Wood, Wilkie, and Morris give the Wolfpack a pretty fair infield. Morris is exceptionally good at third; he is handy with the willow. Duke, heavy hitter, Gorman, Goodman, and Hargrave are the fly chasers. All of them are fast fielders who make it a practice to take balls on the run. John Lanning is the ace of N. C. State's chunkers. McLawhorn and Scott give the Techmen a fair trio of flingers.

Outside of a couple of good pitchers Virginia Military Institute hasn't much of a ball club. Cutchin, Edmunds, Langhorn, and Britton make a fair inner works. The Cadets have Waite, Outen, and Noble in the outfield. Blocker is the catcher; he has a poor throwing arm. Both Noble and Williams would be steady winners on a little better team.

It looks like Virginia will finish in the cellar. Virginia's teams have been exceptionally weak in every branch of sports for the last few years. Like State they have a team composed of new men. Sillpley, Steinberg, Dent, and Pinder, fill the infield posts. Dent and Pinder are two of the few veterans on the team. "Pug" Bryant, the four letter man, Lewis, Lee, and Dawson compose the outfield brigade. "Pug" Bryant is a hard and timely swatter. Weaver, Bill Thomas, and Gravatt give the Cavaliers a good trio of maskmen. Brewer, Fletcher, and McGuire form a fairly good hurling corps.

BARRISTERS WILL MEET DOCTORS IN EXHIBITION GAME

A very interesting contest will take place Sunday afternoon when the barristers of the law school meet the medical school nine. The game will be played on Emerson field at 3:00 o'clock.

Each team is made up of former players now entered in the respective professional schools. Johnson, star pitcher of the doctors, is a former Duke University pitcher and several others have performed on teams throughout this section.

Up to date each team is spotting the other ten runs, both expecting to win by at least that margin. Regardless of the final outcome a good ball game is expected.

The probable lineups:

Law school: Boucher, p; Gray, c; Craig, 1b; Adams, 2b; Marshall, ss; Merritt, 3b; Kellog, lf; Martin, cf; Campbell, rf.

The medical school lineup has not been definitely announced as yet but will be selected from the following: Benton, Avner, Whitaker, Scarborough, Moore, Hunsucker, and McLeod. The battery will be Johnson and Carr.

Chapel Hill High Wins

Chapel Hill high school defeated the Henderson high nine Friday afternoon on the University Freshmen field by a score of 8-7. Dashiell and Prouty led the local attack with three hits in five times at bat. Wright pitched a steady game for the local high.

Chapel Hill will meet either Wilton or Bethel Hill this week. A victory over either of these will put the Chapel Hill high nine in the semi-finals.

DUCKPIN TOURNEY DATE ANNOUNCED

The Durham City Duckpin Association will inaugurate its first tournament Monday, May 4, at the Durham Bowling Center. So much interest has been evinced in this sport that the officials of the center have decided to make this tourney an annual event.

There will be three classes—A, B, and C, in singles and doubles. Any person shooting over 100 will be ranked in class A; ninety to one hundred in class B, and below ninety in class C.

Contrary to usual procedure, the bowlers will make up their own prize list; that is, the money received in the class in which they are entered will be returned to that class, so that each division will bowl for its own self-made fund.

In all classes the entrance fee will be one dollar per man, and the same charge per man for each event. If a team is entered, the charge is five dollars per event, and for the doubles entries, there is a charge of two dollars.

The entries close Saturday, May 2, midnight, at the Durham Bowling Center. The grand opening of the tournament is scheduled at eight o'clock Monday.

Tar Babies Sweep Every First Place; Higby and Askenas Lead Scorers With Thirteen Points.

The Carolina freshmen track team ran away with their fifth consecutive win yesterday by the score of 102-15 against the strong Greensboro high school cinder men. Despite heavy tracks the Tar Babies showed many good performances and the outcome of the meet was never in doubt, the freshmen taking every first place.

Higby and Ashkenas, star dash men, were high point scorers with 13 points each. Higby copped firsts in the 100 and 220 and a second in the broad jump while Ashkenas turned in one of the best performances of the meet to take first place in the broad jump, leaping the remarkable distance of 21 feet, 11 and 1-4 inches. He also took a first place in the 440 and a second in the 100 yard dash.

Goodwin continued his consistent winning with first places in both hurdles to tally ten points. Glenn nosed out Abernathy of Greensboro to place second for Carolina in the high hurdles. Betts of Greensboro placed third in the lows.

Ashkenas, Higby, and Nicholson swept the broad jump. Ashkenas beating Higby 8 inches. Phipps, Tar Baby high jumper, took first in the high jump with a spring of 5 feet 7 inches. Abernathy came in second while third place was a three-way tie between Ashe and Horney of Carolina and Sockwell of Greensboro.

In the javelin, the Tar Babies swept all three places, Le Gore, Grandt, and Horney competing for Carolina. Le Gore was first with a throw of 174 feet 7 inches while Brandt and Horney both heaved the spear over 160 feet.

McBrair captured the discus after a hotly contested affair with his team-mates, Horney and Mullis. McBrair threw the discus 115 feet and nine inches to win.

The pole vault witnessed some fine work on the part of Gold, who soared to a height of 11 feet 2 inches to easily capture first place. Norman and Sockwell of Greensboro and Efland of Carolina were tied for second and third places.

In the long distance runs, Groover and L. Sullivan tied for first in the mile, while Meade outdistanced his competitors in the 880 yard race. Groover finished strongly in the mile and could have run a faster race if he had been pushed.

Gunter and Abernathy were the outstanding men for Greensboro with 4 points each. The other men who scored high for Carolina were Goodwin with ten points, Horney with nine points, Glenn with six points, and McBrair, Gold, Le Gore, Meade, and Phipps with five points each.

Summary:

100 yard dash—Higby (C), Ashkenas (C), Gunter, (Greensboro). Time 10 1-5.

220 yard dash—Higby (C), Gunter (Greensboro), McGlinn (C). Time 22 4-5.

440 yard dash — Ashkenas (C), Vitz (C), Montgomery (Greensboro). Time 53 4-5.

880 yard run—Meade (C), Kimrey (C), John Knight

ANNOUNCE DATE FOR INTRAMURAL BOXING TOURNEY

Tuesday, May 12, Set for Boxing Tournament; Most of 80 Entered Are Inexperienced.

The date of spring intramural boxing tournament has been tentatively set for Tuesday, May 12. The tournament will probably last two days with fights both afternoon and night depending on the number of contestants to enter. The finals will be run off Wednesday night when the new intramural champions will be crowned.

This tournament, the second run off this year, will count in the regular intramural scoring with points being awarded to the team winners as well as to the individual champions. The winning team will receive fifty points towards the intramural cup which is awarded at the end of the year, forty points will be given for second place, thirty points for third place, twenty for fourth, and ten for fifth place. The same system will be used in awarding points to the teams having the greatest number of men entered in the bouts.

The individual winners will receive twenty-five points while those who reach the finals in each class will be awarded fifteen points. In addition, the class winners will receive attractive medals in an effort to create individual interest.

Almost eighty men have registered for the tournament already and with the entry lists open for another week, a new record for the number of participants is expected. The entry list will probable be closed at the end of the week, due to the rule that a given number of workouts must be taken by every man before going into the ring.

Those entered in the tournament will be as a whole, inexperienced. Six champions from the winter tournament are ineligible and the seventh has not yet reported for practice. Cliff Glover, 119 pounds, Furchess Raymer, 129 pounds, Vernon Guthrie, 164 pounds, Peyton Brown 179, and Lacey Pace, heavyweight, all fought on the freshman team this year and are thus ineligible. Dail Holderness, who won the welterweight title, fought with the varsity and, under the ruling that no one who has participated in either varsity or freshmen bouts is eligible, will also be unable to defend his title. Bob Gold, winner of the 139 pound class title, is on the freshman track team,

One of the sensations of the year, taken from a book sensation of the past two years, "Trader Horn," comes to the theatre Monday and Tuesday under the same name. This feature was filmed with a degree of realism rarely obtained in productions of this nature, since the entire company, loaded with equipment, spent many months on location in the jungles, up the rivers, and over the mountains of Africa.

Edward Everett Horton leads a well chosen cast in the feature Wednesday. a hilarious comedy entitled "Lonely Wives." The picture deals with a scrambled plot woven around marriage, divorce, mother-in-laws, jealousy and all the attendant features of marriage as treated in comedies. The feminine members of the cast include the blonde Esther Ralston and Laura LaPlante and the brown haired Patsy Ruth Miller.

"Un Leon de Sociedad," an all-Spanish talkie filmed in Spain with a foreign cast, comes as the week's language feature on Wednesday at 11:00 p. m. The title means "The Society Lion."

A big scale historical production is the attraction Thursday, "Abraham Lincoln," which follows with historical accuracy the early life and career of this great president, bringing in a host of other characters and plot and action throughout of sustained interest. Walter Huston takes the title role, and is supported by Una Merkel as Anne Rutledge, Ina Keith as John Wilkes Booth, and Hobart Bosworth as Robert E. Lee.

Friday's feature is a picture of an entirely different nature, "Cracked Nuts," which brings that absurd pair of comedians Bert Wheeler and Robert Woosley to perform their antics against a series of lavish backgrounds ranging from a Louis XV gambling casino to an elaborate stateroom on an ocean liner. As usual Dorothy Lee is the feminine lead.

Lew Ayres is seen in a comedy, "Many A Slip," as the closing feature of the week, co-starring with Joan Bennett. The play deals with a couple who loved not wisely but too well and is modern in the extreme in its treatment of the theme of unconventional love.

Recorder's Court Tries Many Cases

The following cases were tried in the Chapel Hill court yesterday morning by Judge Hinshaw.

Wilbur Cotton, colored, found guilty of having intoxicating liquor in possession for sale. He was sentenced to four months in the Orange County jail and work on roads.

William Rouse, colored, was found guilty and paid costs for having violated town ordinance of speeding.

John Vance, colored, paid cost for appearing intoxicated on the streets of Chapel Hill.

Alexander Griswell, colored, paid costs for being guilty of being intoxicated.

William King, colored, paid costs and fine for having passed a bad check.

Robert Barnett, student, paid costs after being found guilty of passing a red light.

W. V. Shepherd, student, paid costs for speeding and reckless driving.

Fred Atiyeh, student, paid costs and two dollars fine for parking in a prohibited zone.

B. B. Norwood, colored, received four months in jail for having intoxicating liquor in possession for sale.

"Fish" Markham, colored, found innocent on charge of assault and attempt on life of colored girl.

who pointed out that the tough job of the publicity director is to satisfy both the press and the public and also the professors, who often think such publicity cheap and unfavorable.

Louis C. Boochever of Cornell University, quoted figures showing the great scientific contributions of colleges, urging their superiority as publicity material, and declaring that American research, both fundamental and practical as it is, need not fear Soviet Russia's banning all but research as to practical matters.

J. P. McDonald, general manager of the Nation-Wide Press Clipping Service in New York gave an interesting description of the methods and difficulties faced by the national press clipping service.

"Clipping papers, remembering thousands of individual clients and thousands of individual orders, and trying to fulfill all those clients' wishes while scanning and clipping 175 to 225 papers a day is no easy job, and because the human memory will retain just so much and no more, the average clipping service cannot generally be more than 50 to 60 percent efficient," he said.

He also stressed the need of publicity directors' securing "proof" of use of the stories in their campaigns through clipping services, and carried them interestingly through the routine in a big clipping bureau, explaining all the difficulties of "getting the clipping." "The business of securing clippings is improving with each year," he declared, while urging that "a cooperative attitude from clients will always make for better harmony and efficiency."

The tremendous way in which radio has opened up new avenues for education and for publicity, and the methods by which it can best be used formed the subject of an interesting discussion by James E. Pollard, of Ohio State University.

"Ten percent of the time of American radio stations is given over to education programs, according to Federal Radio Commission surveys." Mr. Pollard said, while expressing opinion that "the radio more nearly holds the solution for adult and alumni education than any other means available or in prospect."

In concluding, Mr. Pollard declared that "the radio offers one of the most valuable and effective means of reaching the public that a college has," and urged on the publicity directors the great possibilities and the great need of working this publicity source in the proper way, since the interests of the commercial radio stations is different from that of the colleges and universities whose primary function is education.

In the afternoon session Frank R. Elliott, of Indiana University told of the stupendous sum of six hundred millions in capital investments toward American higher education which has been built up largely through the cooperation of the American press and other agencies of organized educational publicity.

Mr. Elliott's survey, covering forty-four representative institutions of higher learning scattered throughout the United States, noted figures showing that more than ninety-six millions in buildings, endowment funds and other permanent assets have been raised recently with the aid of special and organized publicity, and led to the estimate that twenty percent of the total permanent resources of America's universities and colleges, of 600 million dollars, have been accumulated through the aid of newspapers and other media of publicity.

1. Resolved: That the Phi Assembly go on record as favoring the proposed consolidation of the counties in North Carolina.

2. Resolved: That the Phi Assembly go on record as approving the plan adopted by Cornell college, Iowa, of admitting unconditionally to the freshman class a small number of unusually capable students who have completed only three years of secondary school work.

3. Be it enacted that the Philanthropic Assembly of North Carolina approve that the civil and religious ceremonies in marriage be separated by statute law.

Guild Movie

An unusual picture, "The China Express," will be presented in the Carolina Theatre Sunday afternoon at 2:30 under the auspices of the Movie Guild. The selecton is a Russian film, concerned mainly with Chinese characters. It is the story of an express train flying across China with its many passengers, slaves, prostitutes, beggars, capitalists, bandits, and generals, almost a cross-section of life. The train is a symbol of the world and what happens on the train is an allegory of the world's events.

financial margin and the additional expense of a house mother might soon become a burden.

A common objection to the house mother is that the presence of a matron in a fraternity would tend to curb the natural expression of students who otherwise would unburden their minds in an unrestrained manner. Where the "house mothering" system has been in effect it has been commonly agreed that members of a fraternity have often concealed grudges out of deference to the house mother.

Proper conduct within a fraternity should be a problem to be worked out by the individual members. The presence of a house mother might raise the moral tone of a group, but only in a superficial and shallow manner.—Penn State Collegian.

On the industrial questions, Norman Thomas, Socialist candidate for the presidency in recent campaigns, will be one of the leaders, along with Francis Gorman of Danville, Virginia, and Benjamin Greer of Greenville, South Carolina, Mr. Thomas, director of the league for industrial democracy, is scheduled to appear on the program several times on Monday, May 4. During the morning he will conduct class-room lectures, and during the afternoon and night sessions he will present several addresses. Another of the speakers on the industrial topics will be Francis Gorman, who recently came into the public eye because of his part played in the settlement of the last Danville mill strike. Greer, prominent Southern cotton mill owner and operator, is to be a third figure on the program.

In the inter-racial department, Dr. Mordecai Johnson, president of Howard University, together with Dr. W. L. Poteat, president emeritus of Wake Forest College, and N. C. Newbold, superintendent of the state department of negro education, will hold the lime-light.

For some time this year it appeared as though the Institute would have to be postponed, but through the material aid of the senior class, the quadrennial plan was able to be continued. Other sources which contributed as much and more for the cause were the Phelps-Stokes Foundation and the Weil lecture fund. The latter not only contributed over five hundred dollars, but also sent Dr. Harold J. Laski, who has been secured to deliver the Weil lectures this year.

Other groups on the campus who have aided in making the Institute possible this year have been the University administration, departments of social science, economics and commerce, history and government, and rural social economics. These departments have consented to give several of their class periods to lectures by the speakers who will deal with topics relevant to the courses in these separate departments. The local Y. M. C. A. association, under whose auspices the speakers are being brought here, has also been one of the campus organizations which is lending its assistance to the Institute.

Following the plan which was used to great advantage in the 1927 meeting of the Institute, there will be an exhibit placed in the vestibule of Memorial hall, which will include books, literature, maps, charts, periodicals, bibliographies, etc., pertaining to the topics to be discussed by the speakers. This collection will be ready for the public on Sunday afternoon and is to be available during the entire period of the meetings.

Some of the other speakers in the order that they appear on the program are: Dr. Carl Taylor, dean of the graduate school of State College; James Myers, industrial research secretary of the Federal Council of Churches; Dr. W. C. Jackson, vice-president of N. C. C. W., and chairman of the North Carolina commission on inter-racial cooperation.

The committee which has been in charge of the Institute this year includes Beverly Moore, Greensboro, chairman; H. F. Comer, executive secretary; and from the University faculty: President Frank P. Graham, Dr. H. W. Odum, Dean D. D. Carroll, K. C. Frazer, T. J. Woofter, Jr., Dean F. F. Bradshaw, R. B. House, H. D. Meyer, and W. D. Moss. University students taking part are: Ed Hamer, Clyde Dunn, John Lang, H. N. Patterson, Mayne Albright, Joe Eagles, Noah Goodridge, Will Yarborough, Jack Dungan, and Red Greene.

The Institute was first presented in 1927 under the auspices of the local Y. M. C. A. and brought to the University campus some of the country's outstanding figures. In the international group, Kirby Page, editor of the World Tomorrow, with J. J. Cornelius, professor of philosophy at Lucknow University, India, were the chief speakers. A. W. Taylor, director of the board of social welfare in the Church of Christ, held the prominent place in the industrial matters, and W. W. Alexander, executive secretary of the inter-racial commission, and J. W. Johnson, secretary of the national society for promotion of colored people, were the leaders of the inter-racial group.

The meetings of the Institute brought several hundred people to Chapel Hill in 1927, and plans are being made for an even larger crowd this year. All sessions of the Institute are open to the public.

JUNIORS-SENIORS STAGE GREATEST DANCES HERE YET

Conduct, Music, Decorations, And Management Reach Highest Standard on Record.

The University prosaically yesterday went sweeping away the debris of the most elaborate and most democratic dance which it has ever been its privilege to enjoy. Johnny Hamp's music, Messrs. Greene, Albright and Breen's decorations, the Chapel Hill women's tea garden, to say nothing of the beautifully gowned women and smartly dressed men have now become a part of an epoch in social life at the University of North Carolina. The Junior-Senior dances proved the theory of some campus leaders that larger, and more elaborate dances to which all men of the classes sponsoring the affairs could come, were needed and would be successful.

Dr. W. S. Bernard, faculty manager of dances felt so enthusiastic over the success of the venture that he was heard to remark to Maestro Hamp that he felt that "no dance could have been as soberly and as efficiently managed anywhere in America."

Hamp himself was most grateful for the reception which he was accorded here saying that "this was the largest college crowd to which we had ever played and I am perfectly sincere in saying that it was the best managed and soberest dance which we have yet played to in the South. In fact, we are very much attached to Chapel Hill and the University of North Carolina."

If Hamp felt friendly toward University men and their partners, the feeling was all the more reciprocated on the part of the audience. For fully an hour before closing time each night hundreds of persons stopped dancing altogether in order to listen to the offerings of the "King of Polite Music" and his men. Carl Goerch and cherubic "Andy" who scored vocally were the admired center of attraction whenever they sang, which they cheerfully obliged by frequently doing.

Hamp ranks equal now in the minds of the student body with Guy Lombardo as one of the best two orchestras in America.

Some were concerned over possible misconduct on the part of such a large audience, but Carolina men responded so overwhelmingly that it appears that despite the fact that more than two thousand persons attended the set, that not a single person will be reported for misconduct.

SOPHOMORE HOP SET FOR FRIDAY

After the preliminary dance at the Junior-Senior ball, the sophomores will have their hop Friday evening in Bynum gymnasium between the hours of 9:30 and 1:00 o'clock. Jelly Leftwich and his University Club orchestra have been engaged to furnish the music for the affair.

The dance committee in charge of the arrangements for the hop is composed of: Shady Lane, chairman; John McCampbell, Dan McDuffie, and Tom Watkins.

The dance is to be strictly formal; no persons appearing in other than evening dress will be admitted.

Playmaker Tryout For 'Perfect Alibi'

Try-outs for The Perfect Alibi, the final Carolina Playmakers production of the season will be held in the Playmakers Theatre on Wednesday evening at 7:30.

The Playmakers give one full-length production each quarter along with their one-act offerings, and this A. A. Milne unusual mystery was chosen to round out the year after careful consideration of quite a number of prospective manuscripts. The previous three-acters have been The Importance of Being Earnest and East Lynne.

The Perfect Alibi differs from the ordinary detective drama in that the crime is committed right on the stage early in the evening, and the audience has the thrill of knowing who is guilty and watching the cast have all sorts of trouble trying to find out.

There are parts for three women and eight men.

Professor Samuel Selden, who will direct the play, has been sick for the past week, but he will get out of bed to conduct the try-outs, being released from the Infirmary for the purpose.

SEVEN SOCIETIES SPONSOR PLANS FOR MAY FROLIC

Set of Three Dances Planned For May the Eighth and Ninth.

An unusually brilliant social season at the University will be brought to a fitting climax with the presentation of the second annual May Frolic, May 8 and 9. The Frolic was inaugurated last year by a set of three dances presented in Bynum gymnasium and the Washington-Duke hotel with music by Jelly Leftwich and his orchestra.

This social event is sponsored by the D. K. E., Sigma Chi, Zeta Psi, Beta Theta Pi, Sigma Nu, S. A. E., and Kappa Sigma fraternities. The officers of the organization are: Arthur deL. Sickles, president; Willis Henderson, vice-president; and W. B. Snow, Jr., secretary-treasurer. Assisting them on the committee are: Dail Holderness, Clyde Dunn, Henry Anderson, and John Jemison, Jr. Dail Holderness will lead the figure.

Plans for this year's dances are on a much more elaborate scale than last year. Emerson Gill and his victor recording orchestra, which has recently completed a long engagement at the Bamboo Gardens, Cleveland, and which has been engaged to play for many of the leading colleges throughout the country, including the Universities of Pennsylvania, and West Virginia, Williams college, Auburn, and Virginia Military Institute, have been secured to play for the May Frolic.

Immediately after the annual Carolina-Virginia baseball game, the guests of the Frolic will be entertained at a twilight dance sponsored by the "13" Club at the Carolina Inn. The first formal dance of the set will take place Friday, May 8, in the Tin Can. The following day there will be a luncheon-dance at the Washington Duke hotel, Durham. A special program by Miss Sara Busbee and her terpischorean artists has been planned for this occasion. Festivities will be continued with a tea dan-

PUBLICITY GROUP NAMES MADRY AS VICE-PRESIDENT

Director of University News Bureau Will Head Research Program.

Robert W. Madry, director of the University News Bureau, was named first vice-president of the American College Publicity Association at its final business session Saturday. During the coming year Mr. Madry will head up the research program of the organization.

Louis C. Boochever, head of the Department of Public Information at Cornell university, was elected president. He succeeds Earl Reed Silvers, head of the Department of Public Information of Rutgers university, who had served during the past year.

Three other vice-presidents were elected: Frank R. Elliott of Indiana university, who is to be general director of regional conferences; Curtis Vinson of Texas A. and M. college, who is to be membership director, and George Shiebler of New York university, who is to head up the athletic publicity men.

Miss Edith C. Johnson of Wellesley College was elected secretary-treasurer and John De Camp of the University of Cincinnati was named editor of Ink Slings, the convention publication.

A final check showed that more than 50 delegates attended the three-day sessions, the largest enrollment in the thirteen years of the association. Resolutions adopted declared the convention, which was sponsored by the University News Bureau and Extension Division, of the most successful from every viewpoint ever held.

An entirely new constitution was adopted in which provision was made for holding regional conferences.

The University of California at Berkeley was selected for the next convention, to be held during the summer of 1932.

The convention heartily endorsed the program now being supported by the national committee on education by radio.

WADE OPPOSES SUPPRESSION OF LEGITIMATE COPY

Duke Coach Addresses Sports Session of Publicity Association.

Colleges and universities that expect increases in enrollments and endowments to follow naturally in the wake of championship football teams are making a great mistake, Wallace Wade, famous football coach and director of athletics at Duke University, declared here Saturday night in an address before the American College Publicity association at the session devoted to discussion of athletic publicity.

"Football is a fine thing for the development of the boys who participate; but contrary to the opinion in some quarters, winning teams and growth in student enrollment and endowment do not necessarily go hand in hand. My observations lead to the conclusion that colleges can best increase their endowments and enrollments by raising their academic standards, improving their equipment, and bringing to the faculty the best type of teachers."

Asked to discuss the question of sport emphasis, Coach Wade said: "This is not the proper season to discuss over-emphasis. That must be reserved for the dull season along in December and January when the athletics heads have a lean schedule and the papers need sports copy."

Wade expressed the view that athletic departments make a great mistake in suppressing legitimate news or sending out erroneous statements about weights, injuries, and the like.

"The publicity director can be of great assistance to the athletic department if he will interpret to the newspapers the institution's problems and policies," Coach Wade asserted.

He thought the chief functions of an athletic publicity bureau ought to be to interest the public in the institution and to advertise the events with the view to attracting spectators.

John Powell, Eminent Pianist, Has Interview With Reporter

"The besetting sin of America," said John Powell, pianist, to a member of the Daily Tar Heel staff in an interview recently, "is overspecialization." Mr. Powell comes to Chapel Hill as the guest of Lamar Stringfield from the University of Virginia where he has just finished aiding with a festival of folk music.

"Take now the field of education. The average student is content with a B. S., or at most a M. S., which requires only a great deal of knowledge in one field. Formerly, the college man wanted a broad and general culture. The matter has gone so far that even Columbia university, which has been the worst offender, and which even offers a course credit in dish washing, has established a chair for the coordination of knowledge.

"Coming nearer home, let's consider athletics. It used to be the case that boys went out and played a game for the pleasure and exercise that they got out of it. With the coming of specialization, however, the ordinary player didn't have a chance in competition with the player who had trained himself to play one position to the exclusion of all others. The ordinary member of a college team now is more professional in spirit, and makes more of a business out of his game than the old time prize fighters like Sullivan.

"In my own particular field, that of music, the United States may be said to take more interest than in any other, for more money is spent here on music today than on any other business in America. Yet the majority of people think that they have done their duty by attending an occasional concert, or by buying a radio or phonograph. The way to enjoy music is to play it. It is better appreciation of music to play, even poorly, than to go to hear every concert that a highly trained and paid foreign musician plays. The way to make people musical is to get them to play music—their own music, and that is the thing that Lamar (Mr. Stringfield was present at the interview) and I are trying to do. That was the

New Literary Organ Appears On Campus

Culminating the work of many weeks, a small group of literary-minded students yesterday distributed their magazine, Contempo, A Review of Ideas and Personalities. Heralded as a publication devoted to ideas and personalities of some significance, Contempo appears with a formidable array of talent among its first contributors.

Two poems, one by George O'Neil, and one by Lynn Riggs, and articles, one entitled "My Books and the Critics" by the noted socialist, Norman Thomas, and another by Russell Thorndike comprise the total of signed contributions. Numerous unsigned poems, notes, and reviews constitute the four page folio.

The editors are M. A. Abernethy, A. J. Buttita, S. R. Carter, V. N. Garoffolo and P. Liskin. The masthead states that "Contempo, Ltd. is a co-operative venture. It does not pay for contributions."

In conjunction with the magazine, the editors are operating a bookshop, called the "Intimate Bookshop" in one of the dormitory rooms.

EXTENSIVE PLANS MADE FOR FINALS

Guy Lombardo Signed for German Club Dances, June 10, 11, and 12.

Guy Lombardo and His Royal Canadians will play for the University Finals, June 9, 10, and 11, it was announced yesterday by Will Yarborough, treasurer of the German Club. Contracts signed by Lombardo and the Music Corporation of America have been received by the German Club.

At the same time he said that the executive committee of the club had ruled that all students interested in attending Finals who are not members of the club must make application to the treasurer before 7:00 o'clock Thursday night, April 30. Applications received later than that date will not be considered until the fall quarter. Due to the large number of freshmen who usually join at this time only a limited number of applications from upperclassmen will be considered. All applications in order to be considered must be accompanied by a check for ten dollars.

Lombardo played for the University Finals last year. The attendance at these dances was the largest in the history of the German Club. With reports from New York City, where Lombardo plays at the Roosevelt hotel, indicating that the orchestra is even more popular this year than before, the Club officials began negotiations early this quarter for its appearance here again in June.

The dances will take place in the Tin Can with decorations somewhat the same as last June. Six dances and a concert will be given. Assessments for Finals will be six dollars. The cost to freshman applicants will total sixteen dollars.

Senior Invitations

Senior invitations will be on sale today and tomorrow in the lobby of the Y and at Pritchard-Lloyd's during chapel period and between 3:00 and 5:00 o'clock. Tomorrow will be the last chance for seniors to secure orders for invitations.

GOLDEN FLEECE TAPPING TO TAKE PLACE TUESDAY

Judge John J. Parker Will Be The Speaker for the Ceremony In Memorial Hall.

The Order of the Golden Fleece has announced that its twenty-ninth annual tapping will take place in Memorial hall next Tuesday evening at 8:30 o'clock. The Human Relations Institute which will be in session next week has left Tuesday night open, so that there may be no conflict.

John J. Parker, judge of the fourth circuit court of appeals, will be the speaker for the occasion. Judge Parker is a member of the organization, and interested in its development. Ed Hamer, Jason of the order, will officiate, and Dr. Horace Williams, one of the Golden Fleece founders will introduce the speaker.

This will be the first tapping in the new Memorial hall. Last year because the old hall was condemned, the ceremony took place in the Methodist church. Dr. Harry Woodburn Chase, at that time president of the University and now president of the University of Illinois, delivered the main address.

The Order of the Golden Fleece is the oldest collegiate honorary order in the country next to the Yale Skull and Bones. It was founded in 1903 and takes in each year what is considered the most prominent men in the student body, those who have rendered the most service to the campus. Members of the rising senior class, the senior class, and other men who have been eligible during their senior year are eligible to membership. There is no set number of students taken into the order, but it is usually under a dozen. Last year nine men were tapped.

GLEE CLUB WILL SING FOR DUKE Y

The Glee Club will present its first concert for the spring quarter tonight at Duke university. The club will sing under the auspices of the Y. M. C. A. of Duke University as the last of a series of Tuesday night programs given for Duke university and the surrounding community.

During the past few weeks, the club, under the direction of Dr. Harold S. Dyer, has been diligently working to enlarge its repertoire. Several new selections have been added to the program, and will be sung for the first time tonight.

Harry L. Knox, the accompanist, who has won much praise this year from the critics, will offer two groups of piano solos. Mr. Knox has proved himself to be a pianist of rare ability in the interpretation of his selections both rhythmically and dynamically. Arthur H. Fleming, Jr., the baritone soloist, will also be featured in several selections.

After the program, the Glee club will be entertained at a reception and dance given by the social committee of the Y. M. C. A.

Dr. and Mrs. Bell Entertain

Dr. and Mrs. James M. Bell had as guests at their home on Rosemary street last Sunday, Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Spruill and daughter, Mrs. E. G. Muse of Rocky Mount, and Miss Mary Philips of Battleboro.

Brava!

The dryest and the most democratic set of dances to be offered the Hill in many moons have been written down in University history. To the members of the classes of 1931 and 1932, as well as those brazen and ambitious freshmen and sophomores who intrepidly stormed the gates of the Tin Can stimulating the appearance, knowledge and bearing of these upperclassmen, the committee in charge of the dances, The Daily Tar Heel, and the student government of the University say with immeasurable pride and a confidence in the future of such affairs born of actual experience that—each and every man who got by the doorkeepers, regardless of his class, showed himself to be a genuine thoroughbred. Carolina has been the proving ground of thoroughbreds before. Carolina men have yet to fail when confronted with large crises. The Junior-Senior ball was to prove the advisability of further events of this nature. The response was even more than expected.

Social life is a most legitimate part of every college man's life. What good does intellect surrounded by awkwardness? Commerce thrives upon friendship and social life. Love may be born without the conveniences of social life, but no one gainsays the efficacy of its powers in furthering rapidly a romance so engendered.

Young men came in formal dress who had never been so dressed before and felt a just pleasure and pride in another step which they had just taken. Others more sophisticated, forsook the jug, the jar, and bottle and marveled at the amount of amusement and fun which they were still able to obtain under the adequate stimuli of excellent music, the surroundings and the thrill of a large audience.

Without a single reservation we can say no other thing than —Brava!

Flying High

Youth is notoriously ungrateful, and editorial writers are notoriously youthful, but nevertheless, our request for the installation of window-screens in the reading rooms of the library has the support, not only of the entire editorial staff, but the reportorial and business staff as well. Perhaps the student body in all its unanimity stand behind the appeal, too.

To toil and labor over books during the balmy spring days is all too difficult, but to attempt the intelligent perusal of books, while sitting on hard, oaken chairs, approaches the impossible. And to try to do all that, to the accompaniment of a persistent and wondrously annoying buzzing and flitting of minute winged creatures of highly assorted genii becomes downright outside the scope and ken of man's abilities.

We know too well that the library, as all other departments, will suffer from the decreased appropriations, and we realize that screens would be quite an expense, but the idea of a fly-ridden reading room appeals to us. And furthermore, it shows that we are thinking constructively.—F. M.

Weakly Said

"Yarb"

Junior-Senior week-end passed off uneventful enough. The Tin Can was decorated to a degree of perfection seldom attained hereabouts and freshmen and sophomores monopolized the dance. From officials in charge the information comes that for the size of the party it was the most orderly affair ever given here. Co-eds competed more than successfully with visiting girls, and Sunday afternoon found the usual quota of boys down at the "Shack."

The following notice has been received: "The very clever Miss Elizabeth Nunn" sorrowfully announces that her conscience forbids her taking the credit which Mr. Bryson kindly gave her for writing the poem in Tuesday's Tar Heel, and regretfully adds that the sentiments expressed in that poem are not even hers.

With Contemporaries

College: An Enigma

The men wear twenty-two inch bottoms, drink liquor straight, score touchdowns in the afternoon, sing at musical comedies in the evenings, and visit the widow after the show. The women go around in a minimum of clothes, with a maximum of brass, smoke two packs a day, and are willing victims of a petting party with the approach of every sunrise. There is only one respectable man in college and he is the hero of the football team and the musical comedy. The only decent woman in college falls in love with the hero. The rest of the women fall into the category of "rubs," "bags," "broads," and "gold-diggers." All other men students are "easy marks," "tight wads," "soft soaps," "dead dates," "poor neckers," "impossibilities," and "misfits."

That is true college life to many high school students; a distorted viewpoint gained from the movies, magazines and other publications which treat college as a four-year world of fast, inane life. According to this view, studies to the high school student must surely mean something foreign to college activity. To him it must seem, studies must not interfere with a college education. The books are side issues. He who studies too diligently will flunk his social exam, and goodness! This catastrophe must never befall the up-and-going student.

Yes, college to many high school students as an enigma. The unsolved riddle: How can the large number of college students participate in such activity with such a small number of nervous breakdowns?—Daily Kansan.

The New Haverford

Coincident with the speech of President Lowell at Haverford, was the announcement of one more experiment in American education. The plan to be attempted at the Pennsylvania college is not only interesting as another example of the foment of revolt against the present system. The ways and means it is taking to assure the permanence of its century of distinction are indicative of an entirely new approach, insofar as undergraduate institutions are concerned, to cultural knowledge.

Haverford, says its president, is to be limited to three hundred students, who will reside in an atmosphere congenial to intellectual stimulus. The students will be cautiously selected before entrance. The efficiency of this plan is not, as it would first appear doubtful because of the frailness of any such human institution as an arbitrary group of examiners. An efficient precedent can be found in the Harvard Medical School which chooses its entrants by means of a definite and exhaustive research into the abilities of the candidates. The remarkably small percentage of future failures, as contrasted with the "weeding-out" process of the Law School which is not handicapped in its large attendance because of the nature of its curriculum, is concrete proof of the saneness of a prematriculation selection. In this case, Haverford is reasonably confident of a large degree of success.

The remainder of the plan, aside from the athletic changes, can be compared favorably to a single unit of the Harvard House Plan. The cultural approach is greatly dependent on the attitude of the students and the atmosphere in which they must work. Haverford is admittedly dismissing vocational education from its curriculum, and in concentrating on the non-professional, has taken the small college's advantage of personal contact between teacher and pupil.

Although a small proportion of the contemplated changes, the compulsory athletic policy is provoking its far-reaching revolt. Every undergraduate must take part in three sports, one of which can be used permanently after graduation. In making sure of the return of athletics to the students, and in demanding contact with at least one sport which will have other than a college value, the Haverford authorities deserve praise for their idealism. It is the assumption that athletics should be made compulsory for four years that seems incongruous with the rest of the plan. In contrast with the autonomous study, offered to every individual during the Junior and Senior years, this policy of standardized athletics must prove somewhat irking to the selected group.—Harvard Crimson.

Gandhi May Learn From Dr. Einstein

We are in hearty accord with the Christian Century in its recommendation that Mahatma Gandhi should not accept the invitation tendered him to visit the United States. Despite the fact that a visit from the great Indian leader might "do much to interpret and commend to this nation a philosophy of life which western materialism needs to take into account," and that he might secure contacts here beneficial to his cause, we feel that America is not prepared for a man of Gandhi's spiritual magnanimity. We can scarcely appreciate an emaciated, toothless, and sparsely-clad figure preaching a gospel of love and non-cooperation. We are a people of action, action!

"Whatever may be the good intentions of his hosts, the magazine continues, "we do not believe that it would be possible for Gandhi to make an informal visit to this country without having that visit converted into a hippodrome. The very attempt of the mahatma to hold his own self-imposed regime would contribute to the unfortunate nature of the outcome."

Gandhi, far away, stands out as the embodiment of a great ideal to those capable of appreciating his aims and aspirations but to the majority of the people he looms large simply because he has compelled Great Britain to stop and listen (and there are those who experience a sense of delight from seeing England embarrassed). Brought right into the midst of Americans, with their barrage of news-photographers, their columnists, their souvenir hunters, and their radio promoters, the mahatma may easily sicken at the whole "show" business, and even to his hosts he might appear much less of the great soul that he is.

The man who recently said to his opponents, "I shall not complain if you beat me. I have no weapon against you except love," stands for something "too noble to subject him to the circus performance which press and pulpit demand of visiting celebrities." For the sake of his health he should be spared the trip, and for the sake of his international influence he will do well not to visit America until "he has a distinct mission here, grave enough to protect him from the silly and insolent habits of a public which so easily turns heroes into curiosities."—Daily Cardinal.

A New Scholarship—

A scholarship carrying the stipend of $200 is to be awarded annually to a first-year male student in journalism by the Indiana chapter of Sigma Delta Chi, national professional journalistic fraternity. The award has been established by the organization to further student interest in courses in journalism and to aid worthy freshman students who expect to engage in newspaper work upon leaving college.

The freshman student who is selected as the recipient of the prize on completing his third semester in the University and his first semester in the journalism department automatically will receive $100 as the first payment on the scholarship. The second payment of $100 will be made at the completion of the student's second month in the second semester of his work in the journalism department, providing he is carrying work in that department and is a member of the staff of the Daily Student.

The scholarship will, it is hoped, be of financial value to students of the University who need such assistance. More important, however, is the stimulation of interest it should arouse among prospective journalism students. Freshmen have had, in the past, little connection with the journalism department. The scholarship should result in greater interest being taken by these students in the preparatory school for the Fourth Estate.—Indian Daily Student.

Salem Plans Annual May Day Festivities

One of the outstanding social events of the season in North Carolina college circles is the approaching May Day pageant at Salem college. This presentation, which will occur, Saturday, May 2, is considered the most brilliant function of the institution's social year. The most coveted title which may be won by a student is that of may queen. Miss Elizabeth Allen of Weldon has been chosen as queen for this occasion with Miss Millicent Ward of Concord as maid of honor.

Ladies of the court are: Misses Alice Caldwell, High Point; Beatrice Hyde, Buchanan, Va.; Eva Hackney, Washington; Patsy McMullan, Washington; Mildred Hanes, Pine Hall; Mary Virginia Dunn, Raleigh; Julia Wiggins, Tarboro; Annie Koonce Sutton, Richlands; Margaret Davis, Farmville; Sue Jane Mauney, Lincolnton; Irene McAnally, High Point; and Frances Fletcher, Winston-Salem.

Characters of the pageant are: Misses Edith Kirkland, Durham; Josephine Walker, Winston-Salem; Mary Elizabeth Holcomb, Winston-Salem; Adelaide Silversteen, Brevard; Lucy Martin Currie, Davidson; Adelaide Winston, Big Stone Gap, Virginia; Anna Preston, Charlotte; Mary Virginia Pendergraph, Mount Airy; Thelma Stortz, Emaus, Penna.

Graves Will Head Interoceanic Board

Colonel Ernest Graves, native of Chapel Hill and alumnus of the University in the class of 1900, has been elected chairman of the Interoceanic Canal Board to succeed the late Lieutenant-General Edgar Jadwin. The despatches from Washington say that this election is for the period from now until the next formal meeting of the board when a permanent chairman will be chosen.

As a student here Colonel Graves was a celebrated athlete and later he captained the Army football team. Commissioned a lieutenant of engineers in 1905, he served in the Philippines and Cuba; took part in the expedition into Mexico under General Pershing in 1916; was selected by General Pershing as one of the officers to accompany him to Europe in the A. E. F.; won the Distinguished Service Medal in the World War; was retired in 1921; and was brought back into the service and appointed by President Hoover as a member of the Mississippi River Commission. His principal activity in recent years has been in connection with Mississippi River flood control.

Sewanee Netmen Fall Before Play Of Heels

Grant Defeats Burwell Easily In Feature Match as Tennis Stars Sweep Contest.

The University of North Carolina tennis team continued its rampage through opponents by defeating the University of the South in a shutout match here yesterday.

Bryan Grant, ranking No. 1, on the Carolina team defeated Teddy Burwell, who is No. 1 man for Sewanee, in two straight sets. The scores were 6-2, 6-2. This was the sixth time that the two have met, and in no matches has Burwell taken a set from Grant. Burwell's service was far from being of any service to him. He double faulted more than seven times during the afternoon. Grant appeared to be back in his old form, for his chop shots and volleys were much better than they have been during the past week.

Wilmer Hines, ranking No. 2, defeated Hatch in an easy match with scores of 6-1, 6-2. Hines continued his consistent play and was just too much for the No. 2 man from the University of the South.

Ed Yeomans defeated Dave Yates in two love sets, while Sonny Graham bested Hare, 6-1, 6-0.

There were only four singles matches played, because Sewanee brought only four men.

Carolina was also victorious in the two doubles matches that followed. Hines and Grant coupled to defeat Burwell and Hare, 6-1, 6-4, and Yeomans and Wright defeated Yates and Hatch, 6-1, 6-3.

Today the Sewanee team plays Duke in Durham, while here at the Hill, Bryan Grant and Wilmer Hines battle for the State tennis singles title at 3 o'clock. Also at 4:30 this afternoon Yeomans and Wright play Hendlin and Graham in the doubles semi-finals for the State championship. And tomorrow at 11 a. m. Grant and Hines will play Rogers and Myers for the same title.

64 HIGH SCHOOLS ENTER MATH EXAM

One thousand nine hundred and twenty-one students in sixty-four high schools distributed throughout the state took the specified exam for the annual mathematics contest sponsored by the mathematics department of the University, last Friday.

The best papers in each school will be sent in to the University, where they will be graded by a committee selected from the mathematics department, comprising Dr. Archibald Henderson, Dr. J. W. Lasley, and Dr. A. W. Hobbs. This committee will also award the prizes.

Class Officers Are Abolished at Purdue

All class offices have been abolished by action of the student council of Purdue University. Duties which are usually designated to men holding these offices have been placed in the hands of various other groups, with the sole exception of the office of freshman class treasurer. According to the new custom the treasurer will serve for four years.

Another change brought about by the new system was an action that committees which up to the present have been appointive will be selected in the future.

The action of the student council came after discussion lasting all this past year.

Di and Phi Bills

Tonight at 7:15 o'clock in the Di and Phi meetings, the following bills will be discussed.

Di Senate: (1) Resolved: That the North Carolina legislature should adjourn without passing a revenue bill and return within two weeks in a special session; (2) Resolved: That all candidates for degrees at the University be made to qualify according to a certain fixed standard in at least four sports.

Phi Assembly: (1) Resolved: That the Phi Assembly go on record as favoring the proposed consolidation of counties in North Carolina; (2) Resolved: That the Phi Assembly go on record as approving the plan adopted by Cornell College, Iowa, of admitting unconditionally to the freshman class a small number of unusually capable students who have completed only three years of secondary school work.

BASEBALL TEAM MEETS DEACONS HERE TOMORROW

First Place in Big Five Race Hinges on Tar Heel Victory.

The Tar Heels will play their second Big Five game of the season tomorrow, meeting the Wake Forest nine at Emerson field.

Last week, Carolina met the Deacons at Wake Forest and emerged victorious, 3-2, after a stirring ten-inning battle. The Tar Heel margin of victory was supplied by Smokey Ferebee when he blasted one of Lanning's fast ones far and wide for a home run.

Since then the Tar Heels have taken a double header from V. M. I. by 3-2 and 6-2 scores. A game was scheduled with Duke but was postponed on account of wet grounds.

By virtue of their double victory over the Cadets Saturday and Maryland's double win over V. P. I. the same day, the Tar Heels forged to the front in the Tri-State League standings with six wins against two losses closely followed by N. C. State.

Either Longest or Edwards, both veterans, will face the Deacons tomorrow. Shields and Hinton pitched in the V. M. I. games and it is unlikely that they will be used in the starting roles, although they may see service as relief pitchers.

The visitors will probably start Lanning, also a veteran, who went the route against the Tar Heels last week and who held them in check throughout the game except for the tenth inning lapse while pitching to Ferebee.

The probable lineup for Carolina: Johnny Peacock, cf; Smokey Ferebee, ss; Henry House, lf; Paul Dunlap, 1b; Cloyd Blythe, rf; Captain Piggy Potter, c; Peter Wyrick, 2b; Willie Powell, 3b; and John Shields or Cecil Longest, p.

Debate With Virginia Over Radio Planned

Plans for the annual radio debate over the Richmond station with the University of Virginia are under way. The question, suggested by Virginia, is Resolved: That talking movies in this country during the next ten years will promote the general welfare more than they will retard it. The definite date for the contest has not yet been set, but will probably be about the middle of May. Discussion of the question in preparation for the debate will start at the regular meeting of the squad Thursday night.

A meeting of both the old and new debate councils will precede the squad meeting, at which time officers for the ensuing year will be elected.

Debaters Schedule Meet With N. C. C. W.

Arrangements for the last home debate of the present season have been completed with N. C. C. W. The women's college will send a team of two here for a discussion of unemployment insurance Saturday, May 2. This will be a "split team" meet, with an N. C. C. W. representative and a University representative supporting each side of the question.

Mr. George McKie, debate coach, has received a letter from Western Reserve college, informing him that a recount of the audience's ballots in the debate with that institution shows that Carolina won by 290 to 201 votes.

Ruble Ties For Second Place In Relay Vault

COLLEGIANA

By THOMAS H. BROUGHTON

If Albie Booth is elected captain of the 1932 varsity baseball nine he will be the first Yale athlete to hold captaincies in three major sports. At present Booth is captain of the 1931 varsity football team, captain of the 1932 varsity basketball team, and has made two varsity baseball letters.

As a freshman he was elected captain of the football, baseball, and basketbal teams, and practically all the men who elected him as baseball captain when he was a freshman are still playing baseball at Yale.

No Yale athlete has ever held three varsity captaincies, though several have been both football and baseball captain.

Here's one almost good enough for "Believe It or Not." The Opeya girls' baseball team defeated the Beta Sigma Omicron team 70-1 last week in an intramural game at Washburn College.

Barney Berlinger, Pennsylvania's one-man track team, turned in the most brilliant allround performance of his career to outdistance a small field of six rivals and capture the decathlon for the third straight year, leading his nearest rival, Fred Klauer of Colgate, by more than 800 points. Berlinger shattered his former high mark by a wide margin but failed to break the American record by less than fifty points.

The Penn captain finished the ten events with a total of 7735.6135. His former carnival record, set a year ago, was 7460.308. The American record is 7784.68 while the world's record is 8053.29.

Jim Thorpe, famous Indian athlete, is to return to his native state as director of athletics for a consolidated rural high school near Oklahoma City. Thorpe's salary was not revealed.

Poor Franky! The fleet Southern California sprinter has to break a world's record in order to get an even decent writeup anymore. Wykoff runs both the 100 and the 220 in times that would win any meet in the world, and then the only place his name is mentioned is in the summary—or in a paragraph telling how some "sprint flash" pushed Wykoff in the 100 by finishing five yards behind him.

And now they've put the skids on boxing!

Without any warning of any sort the faculty committee of the University of Washington ruled thumbs down on collegiate boxing. From now on, it held, all personal hatred must be settled in the home ring and no boxer will be allowed to smite any other pugilist from other campi. The "tint of professionalism" was given as one of the reasons.

Ellsworth Vines, star Southern California tennis player, may win a place on the Davis Cup team. Current rumors had it that the Trojan ace was under consideration. Vines is only a freshman but already he is considered as one of the greatest players in the country.

Already Vines has been named an alternate for the international matches with Mexico. Recently he won the Houston tournament with such stars as Sutter, Barnes, and Lott entered.

The U. S. Naval Academy has named its football stadium in honor of Colonel Robert M. Thompson.

Tar Heel Vaults 12'6" to Place; Pennsylvania and Ohio State Split Honors.

With a steady rain falling on Franklin Field Saturday the relay teams of Ohio State University and Pennsylvania won the major events of the Penn Relay Carnival as three new records were set and another tied. Ray Ruble, veteran Carolina star, tied for second in the pole vault as Theodore Lee of Yale won the event with a height of thirteen feet.

Ruble cleared the bar at twelve feet six inches to tie with Colyer of Cornell for second place and then won the toss of the coin to be awarded the second place medal. Brodie Arnold, Carolina's only other entrant, failed to place in the event.

Fulmer, Duke broad jumper, took third in his event with a leap of twenty-two feet eleven and three-quarters inches. First place went to Eberle of Penn who went twenty-three feet eleven inches, and Peacock of Temple placed second with a jump of twenty-three feet eight inches.

Penn furnished the most outstanding performance of the day when its brilliant one mile relay team, composed of Carr, Edwards, Steel, and Healy, broke the sixteen year old record for this event with a time of three minutes and eighteen seconds. Penn also won the four mile relay by nosing out Cornell by inches in one of the most thrilling events of the day. Cornell made a determined rally in the last two miles, but Coan won by a few yards with a final sprint after almost being beaten by Cornell's anchor man who ran one of the best miles of the afternoon.

In the 480 yard hurdle race Yale broke another record by nosing out Ohio State in another thrilling race. The Yale team with Berereton, Tritle, Lockwood, and DeVoe running, stepped out to an early lead, but the Buckeyes rallied in the last two legs of the race only to lose by a step when DeVoe broke the tape in 1:03.5.

George Williams of Hampton College set a new record in the javelin with a throw of 197 feet 1½ inches. Crawford Dyer, William and Mary, placed second with a throw of 189 feet 8 1-8 inches. Clarence Munn, another unknown, won first place in the shot put for Minnesota with a heave of 48 feet 7 5-8 inches to break the old record by over five inches.

Lamb of Lehigh placed first in the 100 yard dash with a time of ten seconds flat. Hutson of Denison was second, Kelly of Georgetown third, and Sterling of Morgan fourth.

Barney Berlinger, Penn's veteran all-round star won the decathlon again over a small field of competitors by piling up the highest score he has ever made. Berlinger's 7753.6135 was the second highest score ever made by an American and the third highest among world records.

State Y. M. C. A. Plans To Reorganize Soon

"Pardner" James, Ed Hamer, and H. F. Comer journeyed to Raleigh Sunday night, April 26, in order to attend the first meeting of the new Y. M. C. A. cabinets of State college.

Mr. Comer outlined the work of the Y on this campus, and afterwards the group held discussion for about 30 minutes. As plans are being made at State for a general reorganization of the Y. M. C. A., Mr. Comer's talk was of great benefit to the new members of the cabinets. Over fifty students attended.

TAR HEELS LEAD TRI-STATE LOOP

Baseball Team Jumps Into First Place When V. P. I. Drops Twin Bill to Maryland.

North Carolina went into the lead in the tri-state intercollegiate baseball league last week as result of a doubleheader victory over Virginia Military Institute Friday. The Tar Heels were aided in their advance by the two defeats administered to Virginia Polytechnic Institute Saturday at College Park, Maryland.

Second place in the league was left in a double tie between North Carolina State and Maryland. The Wolfpack won from V. M. I. Saturday afternoon to make it three in a row for Carolina teams over the Cadets. Virginia Tech, leaders of the league until yesterday, sank to fourth place.

This week North Carolina State is to furnish most of the competition. The Wolfpack starts off against Maryland in College Park on Monday and plays on Old Dominion soil the next four days against Virginia, V. M. I., Washington and Lee, and V. P. I. in that order. The nine from Raleigh has a tie with the Gobblers on its record and may play two games at Blacksburg.

THIRTY TO ENTER BASEBALL RACE

Thirty high schools throughout the state have joined the baseball contest for class B high schools, comprising all but the seven largest schools in the western part of the state and the eight largest in the eastern part.

In the eastern division of the class B contest, the high schools of Chapel Hill, Bethehill, and Wilton are contesting honors for the first district. Hertford, Seaboard, West Edgecombe, and Roanoke Rapids are still in the running in the second division. Erwin, Trenton, and Pollocksvills are all that remain to dispute the title of the third district. Roland defeated Hamlet 5-4 to win honors in the fourth district.

In the western division of the contest, Bessemer high school has already won the title for the first district. Thomasville, Mt. Airy, and China Grove are still contesting for the second. Cherryville, Mt. Holly and Blacksburg, in the third, and Shelby and Forest City in the fourth, have still to play off their deadlocks for the titles of their respective districts. Shelby high school was winner of the Class B contest last year.

William T. Tilden 2d and Vincent Richards will meet in one of their series matches for the world's professional tennis championship at the Chicago Stadium May 17.

CAROLINA'S ANNUAL DOG SHOW OPENS IN BLAZE OF SPRINGTIME

(By Joe Jones)

Beyond the Golden Horn of Constantinople lies a bit of land called Island of Dogs because the city's homeless dogs are exiled there; and at this season of the year one is reminded that Chapel Hill could make use of such an island.

For the dogs have returned with spring to Chapel Hill, and they are running in packs again. Only last week a scattered, unhurried band of eleven nondescripts was seen moving westward across the campus toward the boarding-house district, their happiest hunting ground.

Why they annually accompany spring to the village, and where they come from, nobody seems to know; but there will be nothing magical about their disappearance. For in a few weeks, when garbage-can raids have grown into nocturnal forays on porches and pantries, and when the scared-whisper fear of rabies begins to go up and down the village streets with the first hot days, the local police force will suddenly turn into an outfit of dogcatchers. The town dogs will be muzzled for awhile, and the wanderers will vanish.

But just now Chapel Hill and the University campus are unconcerned in their roles as hosts to this annual and extremely informal dog show. Companies of homeless mongrels, no longer furtive and afraid, make merry on the open swards, while the most wistful-eyed of all lost hounds is undisturbed in his eternal siesta against the sunny base of a dormitory wall.

Here are dogs of all blends and denominations: lazy, fat, thin, old, proud; mastiff-like animals who nonchantly take candy out of honor boxes; a poodle whose long, unkept bangs make her appear to be peeping from behind a bush; gangling, flop-eared houn'-dawgs, humble and apologetic in their every move; inpudent terriers; dogs with quarter-strains and halves and eighth-parts of a dozen breeds, airedale, collie, shepherd, setter; and a shifty-eyed crowd of scraggly, unlovely creatures whose ancestry is as inscrutable as a Hatteras fog.

Lulled to a feeling of security by the quietness and easy-going ways of the old university town these canine vagabonds probably know their happiest, most carefree days in Chapel Hill. The broad, open lawns of the campus furnish room and to spare for the nimblest, most far-flung game of tag ever played by a foot-loose, lighthearted pack; while the innumerable squirrels which inhabit the arboretum and Battle Park and the campus are always willing to be chased and to vanish up tree-trunks with tantalizing flickers of their silver tails. For those more adventurous spirits who prefer an occasional wilder jaunt the lonely, Orange county oak-and-pine wilderness is forever available at the town's edge. Best of all, that part of Chapel Hill adjacent to the campus is essentially a community of boarding houses, and where there are boarding houses there also will be found an abundance of garbage cans, the stray dog's most cherished birthright.

There are always interesting individuals in these companies of four-footed hoboes. Of this season's pack perhaps none is better known among the students of the University than a quick-witted little terrier who is forever on the alert to gain entrance into a classroom building. Once inside, her chief delight is to gnaw off and eat the leathery plugs of chewing gum which countless generations of bored collegians have left sticking to the underside of desks and benches. Predictions from many persons have foretold for her a score of unhappy ends, including slow, lingering mange and a sudden stroke of apoplexy; but she is still in possession of a buoyant spirit and all the outward signs of health.

The campus also has a genuine, old-fashioned automobile chaser, a mother collie who is haggard with running after cars. No beagle on a warm rabbit trail ever gave tongue more joyously than does this collie as she keeps abreast of a moving vehicle. With her, car-chasing is no transient fancy; it is an obsession, a hobby, every trick of which she has mastered. All day long she alternately lies in wait and pursues her quarry on Cameron Avenue, and it is doubtful if any car has passed through the campus on this street twice during the last six months without encountering her. She has no malice toward the cars; it is easy to see that she considers them merely playfellows who come to run with her in fun.

Visiting motorists turn aside for her, but the local drivers go straight ahead, having learned that she never quite gets in front of the wheels of any automobile, slow or fast. In Venice, where vast flocks of tame pigeons settle on St. Mark's Square, visitors may be distinguished from natives in a like manner. Strangers walk carefully when they cross the Square, for fear of treading on the birds that swarm about their feet, but the Venitian strides boldly through, well knowing that every pigeon moves aside just in the nick of time.

There are some interesting personalities among the town dogs too. Probably none is admired more than Nancy, Dr. Charley Mangum's magnificent German police dog, who goes walking with her master every afternoon. The two are a familiar sight in Battle Woods; the splendid dog, and the white-haired medical professor who played end for Carolina 40 years ago, but who still walks with a livelier stride than that of most young athletes.

If you stop and talk with him he may tell you that Nancy's pedigree runs back to the best canine aristocracy of Europe, that both of them believe in keeping physically fit, and that they enjoy nothing more than these daily walks together. Nancy is locally famous for her extraordinary intelligence.

But of all dogs who frequent the University campus none is more affectionately regarded by the students than "Jim Magner," the dimunitive, black-and-white fox terrier whose master is Ellis Fysal, the football player. These two are inseparable, for between them there exists that love which passeth understanding. On a bitter January night the writer has seen Fysal remove his warm scarf to wrap it carefully about the tiny, shivering, Jim. And last fall when the football team returned from out-of-town games no player was greeted more joyously than was the dauntless all-state guard welcomed home by his little barking dog.

Pre-Law Lecture

Professor M. T. Van Hecke will give a talk at 7:30 tonight in the first year room of the law building on the "Chief Justiceship of William Howard Taft." All pre-law students are urged to attend, as the talk will be of especial interest for men who have not yet taken up the study of law.

GRUMMAN HEADS COMMISSION ON ADULT COURSES

Director of University Extension Division Permanent Head of North Carolina Committee.

Mr. R. M. Grumman, head of the University extension division, was elected permanent chairman of the North Carolina Extension Commission, at a meeting of the representatives of the constituent institutions in Raleigh, Saturday evening, April 26.

The commission was not made permanent until this meeting, although it had been in a stage of temporary existence ever since last September. Imbibed in the program, adopted along with the measure for the continuance of the organization, is a policy of renewed endeavors in the field of adult education.

The extension directors of the state, anxious to improve the standards of extension work, issued a questionaire to all the respective heads of extension departments at member institutions. In return, they have formulated a plan for adapting extension standards to the standards of work in the residences of the member institutions.

The University has already formulated a plan to expand adult education by means of four agencies: lecture courses, radio, home-study courses, and extension library service.

The member institutions of the commission are: the University of North Carolina, N. C. C. W., North Carolina State college, Catawba college, High Point college, Salem college, Lenoir-Rhyne, and Davidson.

sant in the Tin Can. Saturday night the Final Ball will bring the set to a close. Immediately after the dance the week-end will formally be brought to a close with the serving of a buffet supper at the houses of the various fraternities.

The Tin Can was secured in order to accommodate the large number of guests that are expected. Decorations and accessories to the dances will be elaborate and unique. Prominent among these is a tea garden where refreshments will be served by the Women's auxiliary of Chapel Hill. Individual booths for the different fraternities will line the floor facing the orchestra. A crystal ball suspended from the center of the ceiling will break up the rays from colored spot lights into tiny fragments. Invitations, bound in leather and bearing the coat-of-arms of the fraternity by whom it was extended, have been sent to debutantes throughout the country. Additional entertainment will be provided by different fraternities and social orders on the Hill. The orders of Sheiks and Minotaurs, and the "13" Club will entertain at formal dinners while the Sigma Chi, Beta Theta Pi, and Sigma Nu fraternities will have house parties.

Heading the list of chaperons are Governor and Mrs. O. Max Gardner and President Frank Graham. They will be assisted by Dr. and Mrs. W. S. Bernard, Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Slade, Dr. and Mrs. C. S. Mangum, Dr. and Mrs. George Howe, Dr. and Mrs. H. G. Baity, Dr. and Mrs. J. W. Lasley, Mrs. G. C. Sprague, Dr. and Mrs. W. M. Dey, Mr. and Mrs. John H. Anderson, Mr. and Mrs. C. T. JUNIORS-SENIORS STAGE GREATEST DANCES HERE YET

Patrolmen Rackley of the local police force complimented those who attended the affair because of their attitude.

President Frank Graham attended both nights telling the committee Saturday night "It was great fun. There is no reason why we can't keep all of our dances on this same level. Large dances have been looked askance at, but this one proves that it can be done."

There will be other great social week-ends, but the Junior-Senior Ball of 1931 will be a criterion for college generations to come.

Natural History School In N. Y. Opens July 8

The fifth season of the Alleghany school of natural history will open July 8 and extends through August 27. The school was established in Alleghany state park in western New York to meet the need for outdoor experience and training in the study of natural history, and is conducted by the Buffalo Museum of Science in cooperation with the New York state museum. The University of Buffalo is also affiliated with the school and gives credit for courses taken there.

SCHOLARSHIP IN MEDICAL SCHOOL LATELY ENDOWED

James Henry Parker Scholarship Given by Widow of Confederate Surgeon.

Mrs. James Henry Parker, of New York and North Carolina and donor of the Augustus H. Jones scholarship to the University, has endowed a new scholarship to the value of $3000 in the University Medical school to be known as the James Henry Parker scholarship. It is to exist in perpetuity as a memorial to her husband, a surgeon in the Confederate army and a distinguished physician in civil life for many years.

John Dougherty of Asheville is to receive the scholarship for the year 1931-1932.

Awarded annually upon the recommendation of Mrs. Parker during the term of her natural life and thereafter upon recommendation of the James Henry Parker chapter of the United Daughters of the Confederacy, the annual value of the scholarship will be at least $180. In default of other recommendations the scholarship may be awarded by the president of the University. This and the Wood scholarship constitute the only scholarships in the professional schools of the University.

In accepting the scholarship, President Graham said in a letter to Mrs. Parker: "We deeply appreciate the spirit of your beautiful memorial to your husband and the fine way in which you therewith meet the needs of the worthy students in the Medical school. We wish to cooperate with you in every way possible in keeping fresh and permanently useful to mankind the memory of your distinguished and devoted husband."

SECOND HALF OF BOOK EXHIBIT IN LOBBY OF LIBRARY

The second half of the exhibit of fifty outstanding books of 1930 loaned to the University by the American Institute of Graphic Arts is now being displayed in the main lobby of the library building.

This display represents the second section of the fifty beautifully designed books selected from more than five hundred submitted to the American Institute of Graphic Arts by leading publishers and printers. These books display all types of printing and book designing as practiced in the United States in 1930. The books range from the ordinary trade editions of the regular $2.50 novel to the large and expensive limited editions of classical literature.

A.B. Sophomores

Dean A. W. Hobbs of the college of liberal arts, requests that all sophomores in that school report to him in his office sometime in the near future in order to confer on the subjects in which they intend to major. This will avoid the customary confusion at registration next year.

WADE OPPOSES SUPPRESSION OF LEGITIMATE COPY

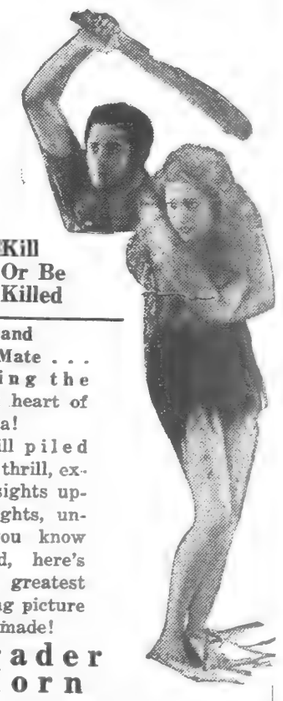
The athletic publicity session was the feature of Saturday's program. William H. Wrank, Jr., of the University of Virginia presided. There were other addresses by Fred Turbyville, formerly athletic publicity director at Duke and Pittsburgh universities, who outlined a program for large universities; Margaret Welles Ragsdale, editor of the News Bureau of the University of Tennessee, who gave an interesting account of how a woman handles sports publicity; and John Maxwell of Lehigh University, who outlined a publicity program for smaller colleges.

R. A. Fetzer, University athletic director, also scheduled for an address, was unable to attend on account of the Penn Relays.



Turbyville's observation was that too much news might be worse than too little. He said that he was unqualifiedly opposed to suppression.

Maxwell thought that sports publicity did little toward increasing an enrollment but that it was justified on the ground of alumni and public interest in the institution.

Another kind of intelligence test is what we do with our leisure.—Toledo Blade.

WILBUR STEELE AT LAST SPEAKS BEFORE AUDIENCE

Most Renowned Contemporary Author of Short Stories Says Success in Writing Not Taught.

By Jack Dungan

Wilbur Daniel Steele, who dislikes speeches if he be the principal, stood up Monday afternoon in Murphey hall before thirty of forty students interested in short-story writing and literature in general to conduct a forum on the manner of procedure and the experiences of a short story writer.

There is no one who has been in Chapel Hill long who does not know that Mr. Steele is considered by many to be the writer of the best contemporary short stories in the English language, and that he spends hours upon each paragraph and manuscript, writing very slowly.

Unlike Harold Bell Wright or other writers (my comparison not Mr. Steele's), Steele does not turn out a short story a week, averaging only seven or so a year. Neither does he find his plots in newspapers or in life. He feels urged to write in order to meet the obligations he has assumed in being the parent of two healthy boys, at present enrolled in the Chapel Hill school, and has never been able to write a story because of inspiration. Plots come to him through thought, and invariable are centered around theses which he sets out to demonstrate or prove.

Characters unfold themselves as the force of the thesis reacts upon them, the characters themselves being the agents necessary for successful proof, and yet Steele's stories are not didactic. As a matter of fact and affording some amusement on

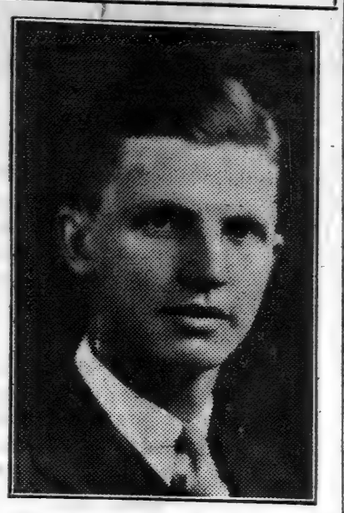
WILLIAM HARPER HAS RESIGNED AS ELON PRESIDENT

Well Known Scholar Has Been Head of Institution for Twenty Years.



Dr. William Allen Harper, president of Elon college, and for six years prior to that a professor in the college, tendered his resignation to the board of trustees, Monday, effective with the close of the present academic year. Although those most intimate with President Harper had known that he contemplated such an action, the announcement came as a distinct surprise.

Dr. Harper is quoted as saying: "Whoever my successor may be, he will have my heartiest support. In my judgement, a bright future awaits the new administration."

Dr. Harper has not during his twenty years as president, given up his intellectual interests. For all but two years, he taught one or more courses in the college regularly. He is recognized as an authority on religious education, in which field he has written no less than ten books which have been extensively used as college texts in religious education.

President Harper has had a rare ability to know persons individually. Every one of Elon's 852 graduates is personally known to him, and he can always address any student of the college by his or her name.

Beverly Moore

The purpose and program of the quadrennial Human Relations Institute, which will open at the University next Sunday, May 3, and continue for one week, are to be outlined by Beverly Moore, of Greensboro, student chairman of the Institute, who will speak over Station WPTF this afternoon from 3:30 to 3:45 o'clock.

Y Deputation Team Goes To Rocky Mount

A Y. M. C. A. deputation team composed of Edwin Lanier, chairman; Frank Hawley, Graham McLeod, and Jack Hamer, speakers; and Brooks Fryer, piano entertainer, journeyed to Rocky Mount, Monday night immediately following the adjournment of the Y cabinet meetings.

The team made a first appearance yesterday morning at 8:30 o'clock at the Rocky Mount high school and repeated the program throughout the day in the various schools of the city. At 4:30 o'clock in the afternoon the group spoke before the Parent-Teacher's Association and at 6:30 entertained the Hi-Y club at a supper-meeting.

Sociology Professor Makes Lecture Tour

Dr. Ernest R. Groves, professor of sociology at the University, will deliver a series of addresses in New Hampshire and Maryland, beginning the latter part of April and continuing through the early part of May. His first address will be delivered April 30 at the New Hampshire conference on the child's health and protection. This conference is sponsored by Governor John W. Winant. Dr. Groves' subject will be: "Family and Parent Education."

Dr. Groves will speak May 1 at a state educational conference at Manchester, New Hampshire. His topic for this address will be: "Education for Social Efficiency." He will conclude his addresses with a lecture at Baltimore, Maryland, May 4, giving the introductory lecture of a course on mental hygiene of everyday life. His subject will be: "Mental Hygiene and the Home."

Sophomore Y Hears Professor Noble

Dr. M. C. S. Noble, dean of the school of education, spoke to the new sophomore Y cabinet Monday night at their first meeting. The talk was concerned with the first educators of this state.

After Dr. Noble's speech, discussion followed on the annual banquet of the council. The members were notified that a special meeting would be called sometime during the week at which time the banquet committee would give its report.

ARTICLE WRITTEN BY COKER IS IN NATURE MAGAZINE

May Issue of Publication Is Entirely Devoted to North and South Carolina.

In the May issue of the Nature Magazine, which is devoted entirely to the natural phenomena of North and South Carolina, there is found an article by Professor W. C. Coker, of the botany department of the University, entitled: "What Nature Gave to Carolina" and concerns plants of coast, sand hill, piedmont, and peak.

Evergreen comes in for its share of glory in this well illustrated article. In the coastal regions there grows a variety of broad-leaved evergreen trees which reach to tremendous heights. Farther north, however, the tall variety disappears and the dwarf form appears and extends inland over the littoral half of the coastal plain. On Smith Island, North Carolina off the mouth of Cape Fear River, the sub-tropical flora reappears and palmettos tall as in Florida grow along the beach. It is for this reason that the Indians used to say that Smith Island was a part of the Everglade state broken off and floated up to North Carolina. Many other interesting facts about North and South Carolina are given in this article by Professor Coker.

Governor Gardner of North Carolina and Governor Blackwood of South Carolina also have contributed to the issue. The Nature Magazine is published monthly, but is not always given over to any special state or states. Interesting facts and illustrations on plant and animal life are to be found in every issue of this publication.

RICHARDS SPEAKS TO SIGMA XI ON KIDNEY FUNCTIONS

Distinguished Pharmacologist Delivers Annual Lectures Sponsored by Scientific Society.

Dr. Alfred N. Richards, head of the department of pharmacology in the University of Pennsylvania, and at present visiting professor at Harvard university, presented two addresses on the kidney, under the auspices of the Sigma Xi society, Monday and Tuesday nights of this week in Phillips hall.

Dr. Richards spoke before the University chapter of Sigma Xi, national scientific society, and members of the society from other universities who attended. He was introduced by Dr. Otto Stuhlman, head of the University's department of physics, as one of the most prominent kidney specialists in the country.

On Monday in discussing "The Function of the Glomerulus," Dr. Richards explained the old and new experimental processes concerning the nature of the process of which fluid is separated from the blood in its passage through the renal corpuscles. Factors which enter into the regulation of this process were also discussed. Dr. Richards explained that the kidney has "an elasticity of function which is amazing," and pointed out that "this organ retains valuable substances as well as excreting worthless ones, and that as a part of the living body it is as necessary and vital and complicated as the heart." He said that kidney specialists are continually learning how better to work with the living kidney and in so doing they are solving many questions hitherto

Paper Now Known As "Syracuse Daily Orange" Came Out In 1872

Journalistic activity at Syracuse University has been continuous since the days immediately following the Civil War. Over half a dozen sheets have flourished and waned at that campus while the permanent organ of student expression was forming its policies and learning the ropes of college journalism which are fully as complicated as those of city newspapers.

On June 22, 1872, the first issue of the University Herald was published. There was no indication that this paper was to be exceedingly long lived when the board of editors started what the students considered just another sheet. However, that paper continued under the same name for thirty-four years, and is the same paper that exists today as the Syracuse Daily Orange. The history of the Herald project dates back to the first year of the existence of Syracuse university as a chartered institution.

In the beginning of the life of the publication, it was a three column, sixteen page paper, and the aim seems to have been to give news and literary effort equal prominence. Irving Templeton edited the first issue of The Syracuse Daily Orange under its new name in 1903. It was at that time a four column, four page sheet with news as its standby and an occasional poem or story to add variety. It was not until January, 1922 that the paper came to have seven columns as it does today.

The Herald had plenty of competition, and one of its first rivals and contemporaries was The Syracusean begun in June, 1878. Nine years after the coming of the first rival, another appeared in The University News, a bi-weekly, with eight three column pages. This new entrant in the field ran in active competition to the other two which were already in existence. Early in the twentieth century two other journals, The University Forum, and The Syracuse University Weekly were published.

Until 1921, the papers had been dependent for support on the subscription of the students. Campaigns were conducted twice each year to secure subscribers, and this method must have been successful since the publication came out uninterrupted through its long career.

A crisis was reached and the board was faced with the alternative of either securing more funds or of suspending publication entirely. The undergraduate body voted by a large majority for a subscription tax of $2.50 to be collected by the administration at the time of registration.

Men, who have been editors of the sheet in their college days, are now engaged in almost every profession, inquiries have shown. Williard R. Jillson, '12,

Golden Fleece Possibilities Selected By Daily Tar Heel

FRESHMEN HEAR CONNOR RELATE OLD TRADITIONS

Reverend Alfred S. Lawrence, rector of the Episcopal church, opened Freshman chapel yesterday with a scripture reading and led the group in the Lord's Prayer.

Professor R. D. W. Connor, head of the history department, spoke on the early history of the University. The main gist of his speech was: "We are all individuals, but also members of society. We come into the world as a member of the family, then become a member of the school, and later go out into the world. Try to understand conditions in order to adapt your life to them, and absorb the best of life that is possible. All great influences have come down from the past."

Continuing his talk Dr. Connor stated the University of North Carolina is the oldest state university in America, having been chartered by the legislature in 1789 and the cornerstone of Old East building being laid on October 12, 1793. The most active man in the founding of the University was General William Richardson Davie. The Old East building was finished in 1795 and then the board of trustees hired two professors. For two weeks no students appeared, until Hinton James, of Wilmington, walked and rode horseback from his home to the newly-founded University. Jones was the only student for five weeks, when several other boys entered the school. The University has honored many prominent North Carolinians by naming buildings on the campus for them, such as Davie hall, Aycock dormitory, and Phillips hall.

Booloo Club Selects Next Year's Members

The membership of the 1931 Booloo club will be posted in the window of the Pritchard-Lloyd drug store at chapel period this morning. This club will function throughout the next year and will, in turn, elect the members for the ensuing year.

The election of new members took place in the D. K. E. house last night at 7:00 o'clock. There was considerable strife in respect to the more important positions, each member seeking to win the most outstanding post for his particular "pals."

There was also a motion to more closely organize the club, which has been heretofore operating solely for the purpose of electing the members for the next year. No definite plan of action was adopted, but a meeting of some of the various "teams" was suggested. Of these teams, the "tank team" will probably be the most active.

For many years the Booloo club has been a great campus institution, becoming one of the greatest objects of interest of the spring. Its members are chosen from all types of students, and its democracy and sincerity rivals only the Order of the Grail.

Absentee Votes

All those who expect to be out of town or will not be able to attend the Chapel Hill elections for some other reason should be sure to see the registrar for an absentee ballot.

SUMMARY MADE OF OUTSTANDING CAMPUS LEADERS

Judge Parker Will Speak at Annual Tapping Next Tuesday Night.

By Bill McKee

Less than a week away is the annual tapping ceremony of the Order of Golden Fleece, and the question again comes before the campus as to whom is to be tapped? The Gloden Fleece is considered by many to be the highest honor which can be accorded a student in the University.

Each year the order selects ten or a dozen men, mostly rising seniors, who have distinguinshed themselves in some way during their stay here. One of the bases on which students are chosen is character. Men of sterling character, who are forecful, honest, and straightforward are desired. Power and influence on the campus and the way this power and influence is used is another factor in choosing its membership. Then lastly, men are considered for services rendered the University.

The tapping ceremony is considered very impressive, in which two black robed, hooded figures, fleeces across their shoulders slowly walk through the aisles of the hall suddenly to pounce upon the selected men. This year will be the first time that the ceremony has taken place in the new Memorial hall.

Judge John J. Parker, of the fourth circuit court of appeals, has been chosen as the main speaker of the occasion. Dr. Horace Williams, of the University, and one of the founders of the order will introduce the speaker.

As has been customary in the past the Daily Tar Heel again offers a list of those men whom it considers worthy of the honor. In surveying the campus this year there appears to be a lack

Violin and Piano Recital Will Be Presented Today

The pupils of Professors Nelson O. Kennedy and T. S. McCorkle will present a general student recital this afternoon at four o'clock in the music building. The program is the following:

Katherine Wheaton, of Ogdensburg, New York, will present a violin solo of Potsock's Rondo Fantastico. The second number of the recital will be a piano selection, Soiree de Vienne, by Listz, to be played by Harold Cone, of Greensboro. A bassoon solo of Wieschendorff's Thema mit Variationen und Tempo de Polonaise, to be presented by Walter Prescott, of Asheville will follow.

The fourth selection will be a violin solo of Potstock's Souvenir de Sarasate. Then a piano selection will be presented by Harry Lee Knox, of Statesville. The number will be Schumann's Vienna Carnival Scene. After this number, Thor Johnson, of Winston-Salem, will present Sarasate's Les Adieux. The last selection on the program will be The Island Spell, by Ireland. This number will be presented by T. Hays Barker, of Leaksville.

A Lesson From Confucius

Those of us who feel constrained to quibble about spiritual and religious matters might do well to take a lesson from the example of Confucius, the patron saint of China, who was wise enough to put religion on a sociological rather than a spiritual basis.

Confucius did not claim to have the ability to make divine revelations. He concerned himself merely with man and his duties to society, and was very vague about any omniscient Being. He believed that evil would be punished in future generations and not necessarily in an after world.

The teachings of Confucius amounted to nothing more than secularism. He believed in man, was interested in his life on earth, and in the reformation of society and government. He taught that a bad man was not fit to rule, and made no allusion to the joys of Heaven or the terrors of Hell.

Although this patron saint performed his ancestor worship to the letter he did not say that man must do that; he said that man should respect the spirit of the departed, but should keep aloof from spiritual matters. In regard to death and the hereafter Confucius said, "While you do not know life, what can you know about death?"

We spend too much time arguing about conceptions of an after life and too little in living the life we now have. It is better to improve our lives on earth and live them to the fullest extent than to spend our life here in worrying about another one which is purely hypothetical. Confucius may have been a "heathen Chinee," but he had more common sense about religion than we have.—A. J. S.

Picking a Vocation

A large majority of college students today have no idea as to what they will do when they leave college. They know that they "would like" to do this or "wouldn't mind" doing that, but few have definitely decided upon the field they will enter. To alleviate this situation vocational guidance courses have been established, and a great deal of material has been published on the subject. But the old saying that "experience is the best teacher" is one which can be used to great advantage in this case. The coming summer vacation affords an opportunity for students to clear up the doubt in their minds as to what vocation they will take up after leaving here.

Many students do not seem to realize the benefits that these summer trainings afford. They merely drift into their vacation jobs not taking any thought of whether they would like to continue or not in that field when graduated. They secure jobs for wages, they bring rather than the actual experience which they might offer.

To those students who have not yet chosen their life work, the summer affords a laboratory in which to test the fields into which the collegian plans to enter. By working a few weeks or more in each branch, at the end of two or three summers the student is able to decide definitely upon his vocation. Every student has at least a hazy idea of what he desires to do, and during the summer he can finally make up his mind.

Numerous graduates go into the different professions merely because their fathers before them were engaged in that business. In few cases such a choice turns out to be the one for which the man is best fitted, but those persons who decide for themselves by having had actual experience in the different fields are the ones who get more pleasure from their work.—C. G. R.

With Contemporaries

Heil Hitler!

One of the nice things about this world is the way the actors get by. Their business is concerned mostly with holding themselves at arm's length and donning other people's destinies instead of shaping their own. And here is the difference between Herr Adolf Hitler and Il Duce Benito Mussolini: Hitler is only a ham'n egg imitation of the real thing.

In '22, Mussolini and his Black Shirts marched on Rome and took over the reins of government just at the moment that the dray-horse of industry started to balk in the shafts of the Italian applecart. In '23 Hitler made his bid in Munich for a march on Berlin. After an ignominious street fight with the police, his cohorts were either slaughtered off or dispelled and he was sent to jail like a common felon. Since then, by dint of unabashed demagogy, talking on the assumption that if he talked loudly enough people would listen, he has gotten together the second strongest party in the Reich: the Nationalists.

The thing that has aided Hitler most materially is the slough of economic despond which Germany has been traversing for the last decade or so. With five million unemployed in a nation with one-half the population of the United States and not one-fifth of the wealth, it is small wonder that bluster against the political status quo finds an audience. But instead of founding his solutions for the salvation of Germany on the bedrock of economics, Hitler has inflated them with the hot air of prejudice and pre-war militarism and is flying them like a bologna sausage from Germany's masthead, one notch lower than the national flag.

Time has compared Hitler with Sir Oswald (Manifesto) Mosley. He is no more like that keen young statesman than Heflin is like Owen D. Young. Mosley has advanced a constructive economic program for England. Hitler wants to pull the whole German card castle of capitalism down about his ears as soon as ever he can persuade the electorate to let him. His wants to discontinue reparations, put a death penalty on usury, disenfranchise or deport the Jews, restore the former military pomp and power of Germany and remodel the business of getting a living on a socialistic scale.

Day and night, Hitler has toiled to broadcast and bolster the impression that he is Nietzschean superman come home to roose, the Nordaic Mussolini. He has studied his role well. He knows all the more effective gestures of Il Duce as well as the blunt, fiat-handed Fascist salute. He owns three cars which he drives very fast between his town and country houses. (Before he took up politics, Herr Hitler was a man of the people.) In contrast to this, there is a lush assortment of perfumes on his boudoir table, and when he appears to give a speech, he arranges beforehand for a huge bunch of flowers to be presented to him upon his arrival.

He reminds us of Don Manuel, whose mother had him promise her to make himself a fine figure of a man. Try as he would, Manuel could never get his figures to come out right. Hitler has specialized on one earthen figures with no greater measure of success.—The Dartmouth,

Dr. Flexner And the Ph.D.

"The graduate student in an American university," the New York Herald-Tribune declares, "is like the apprentice in a printing shop serving a prescribed term before he will be allowed to earn the full union scale. He may know as much as a full-fledged Ph.D., he may be a better teacher, but until he gets his degree, he cannot have his full title or salary."

It is interesting to contrast this view with that of Dr. Flexner, whose criticism of American and English universities has drawn so much attention. Dr. Flexner is planning a sort of university research institution, to begin work in about three years under his direction, which will be "primarily a place of distinguished scholars who will be able to study there and at the same time teach disciples." He points to the German, Althoff, one of his particular idols in the German universities whose work he admires so much more than that of any English-speaking schools, as an example of the sort of synthesis he hopes to achieve with his own institute of higher learning. Althoff, Dr. Flexner says, "perceived that even under university conditions a small number of rare geniuses might squander in teaching or administration rare abilities that ought to be concentrated upon research."

Dr. Flexner's institute is not in any sense a model for the average college; its principles are avowedly different, and its purposes are in almost exact contradistinction to those of the ordinary college or university. That fact need not detract from its more direct service to American colleges; if his institute can provide a place in which that "small number of rare geniuses" can devote its entire time to research and the training of an equally small number of devotees, presumably potential rare geniuses, the rest of the universities of the country could return to the older ideals of teaching and cease to place quite so heavy an emphasis on the value of the Ph.D. degree.

Most research done in the colleges, particularly in the "humanistic" studies, is of very doubtful value. The studies of minor poets can in no way be compared to the studies of obscure algae; scientific studies, even of the most grubbing sort, fit into a large scheme which is of undoubted human importance, but 95 per cent of the meticulous examinations of the metrics of Chatterson, the relations of Jakob Boehme to Milton and Blake, the novels of Mrs. Aphra Behn, are not and never will be of any real significance to society as a whole. They are like the ornamental flowers which an apprentice stonecutter is forced to chip out. Unfortunately, in the usual scheme of things, they become an end in themselves, are assumed to be of real and permanent value and jobs are given on the strength of them.

That such studies are detrimental to teaching we do not argue, nor do we believe, with many critics of the American universities, that the discipline is valueless and a breeder of grubs. We do however believe, with the Herald-Tribune, that the Ph.D. degree, as the hallmark testifying the completion of such hack work, is much overemphasized as a criterion of the individual's value to the university.

The arguments of those who say that the university teacher should be free from the painstaking responsibilities of research, should, in a word, be an "inspiring" teacher — although without the information which only painstaking work can give —are not more silly than the arguments of those who believe that a minute knowledge of some obscure corner of research is a guarantee of that information, and that information implies understanding and ability to impart.

The conflict between these two schools, in its more obvious ramifications, is that recently italicized by Prof. Grant Showerman and Prof. Joseph K. Hart. In less melodramatic hands, there is no conflict: no sane person could maintain that inspiration without informaton is anything but vicious, nor than information, particularly of obscure and insignificant corners of knowledge is, without understanding, more than useless.—Daily Cardinal.

Golden Fleece Possibilities Selected By The Daily Tar Heel

of men who are really outstanding, but there are nevertheless a score or more possibilities.

Mayne Albright, the new president of the student union, certainly deserves recognition. As secretary of the student council this year, as varisty wrestler for three years, as associate editor of the Yackety Yack, as speaker of the Phi Assembly, as treasurer of the North Carolina State Student Federation, and as a member of the interfraternity council, Monogram club, Sheiks, Grail, Tau Kappa Alpha, and Phi Beta Kappa, Mayne Albright justly deserves the honor.

Another man whom we believe would be a deserved choice is Jack Dungan, present editor of the Daily Tar Heel. He has been connected with many varied student activities, being managing editor, city-editor, and associate editor of the Daily Tar Heel; editor of the Carolina Handbook for two years, secretary of the Publications Union Board, former president of the sophomore Y cabinet; treasurer of the Freshman Friendship Council, treasurer of the Di Senate, president of the Polity Forum, and a member of the Central Administrative Council.

Hamilton Hobgood, president of next years senior class, is another man whom we would choose if we were voting. Hobgood was president of the summer session student body in 1930, a prominent debater, having won the Mary D. Wright debate medal. He is a member of the debate council, Phi Assembly, Tau Kappa Alpha, and Grail.

Holmes Davis, editor of the Yackety Yack for next year, member of the Yackety Yack for three years, member of the Tar Heel staff his freshman year, member of the Publication Union Board this year and also of the Sheiks, and the Coop, is also a good bet for tapping.

Then we come to the very popular "Pardner" James, president of the Y. M. C. A. James has been treasurer of the Y, secretary of the sophomore cabinet, member of the Freshman Friendship council and various committees, and very active in Y work. He should stand a good chance.

K. C. Ramsay, retiring president of the Publications Union Board, sports editor, and city-editor of the Daily Tar Heel, president of the Dialectic Senate, and member of the Grail, Phi Beta Kappa, Bulls, Coop, and German Club, fits the qualification demanded by the Fleece.

Another man who should by all means be tapped for his service to the University is John Lang, although he is now a graduate student. He is secretary of the National Student Federation, president of the N. C. Student Federation, former vice-president of the Y. M. C. A., former president of the Phi Assembly, and intercollegiate debater, winner of the Mangum Medal, and a Phi Beta Kappa student.

Theron Brown is probably one of the most outstanding of the athletes who have taken part in activities, being president of the junior class, president of the athletic association for next year, a varisty football and track man, and member of the Grail and Glee club, Amphoterothen club, and German Club.

Another who has mixed the social and scholastic side of the campus with athletic side, a member of Phi Beta Kappa, Phi Zeta Nu, honorary engineering order, Minotaurs, Gimghouls, and a varsity football end is George Thompson.

These nine men seem to our mind the most logical candidates for this honor. More or less than this number may be picked, and the these aren't the only outstanding students, but those mentioned fill the necessary qualifications.

Haywood Weeks, secretary of the student council, assistant track manager and member of the Grail, McBride Fleming-Jones, senior member of the Publications Union Board, member of the debate council and intercollegiate debater, Henry House, varisty fullback, member of the Grail, and "13" club, Bill Speight, intercollegiate debater, J. L. Felton, president of Phi Beta Kappa, Ed French, managing editor of the Daily Tar Heel, Pete Gilchrist, editor of the Buccaneer next year, "Spec" McClure, editor of the Carolina Magazine, and Phi Beta Kappa student, are eight other men who are outstanding and stand chances of being elected.

Other students who could be considered are Art Sickles, "Red" Gilbreath, Harlan Jamison, "Buck" Snow, Tom Follin, "Strud" Nash, Peter Brown Ruffin, Joe Jones, and Beverly Moore.

Infirmary List

There were nine confined to the infirmary yesterday. They were: Arville Culpepper, Stephen H. Pitkin, Norman E. Wells, Stanley B. Abelson, John Shuford, Philip A. Klieger, Lauchlin W. McKinnon, Ertie B. Warren, and Herman Vinson.

Grant Defeats Hines To Win Singles Title

Hotly Contested Match Features All-Carolina Finals Of State Tourney

Diminutive Star Defeats Hines Three Sets to One to Win Collegiate Tennis Title.

Bryan Grant, National Clay-courts champion and ranking No. 10 in the country, added another title to his fast growing string yesterday afternoon on the varsity courts by defeating Wilmer Hines, National Junior Singles champion, 6-2, 6-4, 8-10, 6-4, to win the collegiate singles championship of North Carolina.

The match was hotly contested throughout with both players making seeming impossible shots. Although winning three sets to one, the Tar Heel ace received a much harder fight than the score would indicate. Each point was close and hard fought, with no quarter being given or asked for.

Grant took the first set rather easily but in the second set Hines started a comeback, but was unable to down the Carolina star, who won the set, 6-4.

In the third set Hines got off to a 3-1 lead but was unable to hold it. Grant tied the score at 3-3 but again Hines broke through his service to win the next two games, bringing the score to 5-3. At this stage Grant rallied to tie the score at five all but was unable to continue his advantage, Hines winning the next game. The lead seesawed back to Grant at 7-6, but Hines opened up to win the set at 10-8. This was the closest set of the afternoon and for a time it looked as if the referee would have to toss a coin to decide the winner but Hines rallied to win.

In the fourth and final set Grant took the first game on Hines' service but lost his own service to the Junior champion. Each broke through the other's service in the next two games but were unable to win their own service and the set was again tied, this time at three all. However Grant took the next two games and with the score 5-3 the crowd began to dwindle but were brought back when Hines took the next game. With the score at forty-love, Hines rallied to win the next two points. Here the crowd was brought to its feet by the fine playing of both men. The score seesawed from advantage to duece time after time. Grant was able to win the advantage but could not take the match point. However in the end the Tar Heel No. 1 took the point set and match on a beautiful shot down the side lines.

The match was marked by the good sportsmanship of both participants. Grant purposely served doubles once after the referee had called one in that appeared to be nearly six inches out, nevertheless Hines refused to take the point slamming the next one outside.

The referee came in for a good deal of panning by the spectators, most of which was justly. Several decisions brought forth outcries from the crowd and at one time the referee had to reprimand the spectators, announcing to the would be officials that he and he only was calling them, whether right or wrong.

The crowd was the largest to witness a tennis match in Chapel Hill this year, several hundred attending the match.

A growth on the ankle bone of Ralph Hewitt, Columbia football star, was removed recently.

WARREN REGAINS CAROLINA'S TITLE

Former Tar Heel Pugilist Gains Ten-Round Decision Over Dewey Kimrey.

Add Warren, former Tar Heel pugilist and newly appointed Duke coach, regained his heavyweight championship of the Carolinas in Charlotte Monday night by pounding out a ten round decision over Dewey Kimrey, the Norwood woodchopper.

Add won decisively from his heavier opponent, rocking him with hard right uppercuts and throwing his left to the body with great effectiveness. Kimrey was given credit for winning only one round, the sixth. The second and fifth rounds were scored even, and the rest were given to Warren who kept up a persistent hammering throughout the ten round battle.

Both fighters showed a complete reversal of form from that exhibited in their first meeting when Kimrey displaced Warren's crown some weeks ago. In the first battle Kimrey was cool and aggressive while Warren clinched and wrestled cautiously without doing a great deal of damage. Monday night, however, saw Warren giving one of his best exhibitions, hitting fast, hard, and often. On the other hand Kimrey did most of his fighting in the clinches and wrestled continually.

Kimrey landed only one solid blow during the encounter, a body blow, while Warren landed repeatedly with both hands. Add used his left hand to the body and on several occasions lifted Kimrey off his feet with a sweeping right uppercut that had the Norwood boy groggy and hanging on.

Warren failed to score a knockdown, but had his opponent on the verge of a knockout when the bell rang to end the final round. Warren weighed in at 186 pounds while Kimrey tipped the scales at 202.

TAR HEELS WILL MEET BAPTISTS IN BIG FIVE TILT

Edwards or Longest to Hurl; Tar Babies Meet State in Third Championship Game.

The Carolina nine, leading the Tri-State League of the Southern Conference with 6 wins and 2 losses, will turn its eyes to the Big Five titular race this week and play Wake Forest here Wednesday afternoon at 4 o'clock in its only game of the week.

Either Paul Edwards or Cecil Longest, the two righthand aces Coach Jim Ashmore saved for the rained-out Duke game last Saturday, will probably pitch for Carolina. Joe Meador, Deacon ace, is reported to be Wake Forest's most likely mound selection.

Meador is the boy who hurled the last 10-inning meeting between Carolina and Wake Forest, which was won by Carolina when Smoky Ferebee hit for the circuit with the score tied 2-2. If he pitches again, there is certain to be amound duel of interesting proportions.

Wake Forest is the only team the Tar Heels have previously met in the Big Five race, games with Davidson and Duke having been rained out. The Carolina club has been setting a fast pace in the Tri-State League, and will be out to boost its Big Five percentages.

The scrappy Tar Heels have won 10 games, while losing two and tieing two. Their fielding has been unsteady at times, but the pitching of Paul Edwards, Jim Shields, Cecil Longest and George Hinton has been of the first order consistently, while the whole team has been hitting hard and often. Paul Dunlap, first baseman; Henry House, left fielder, and Shortstop Ferebee have been leading the attack most of the way.

CAROLINA FROSH DEFEAT DANVILLE

McIver Hits Homer to Give Tar Babies 4-3 Win; Play State Today.

The Tar Babies defeated the strong Danville High School nine yesterday afternoon, 4-3, in a snappy eight-inning affair.

McIver broke a three-all tie which had lasted since the third inning, when a hard grounder in the eighth frame bounded over the right field fence.

Durham's walk followed by Henry's double in the first, gave Danville their initial tally. In the second Powell and Deboe got free passes and both scored on Durham's single.

The yearlings tallied once in each of the first three stanzas. Harry Phipps came home on a fielder's choice in the first, Brandt smacked one to deep center for the circuit in the second, and John Phipps scored in the third as Tatum grounded out.

John Phipps took pilfering honors with three stolen bases. Brandt collected a homer and single in three attempts to lead the Carolina hitters. Gosney got two singles and two walks in four tries to lead the visitors at bat.

The freshmen go to State today and will be hosts to the Baby Deacons here on Friday.

Score by innings:

Carolina Trackmen Nose Win Over W & L Generals

Howard and Brown Take Second And Third Places in Broad Jump to Win Meet.

For the second consecutive time this season Carolina's dual meet supremacy in the South was threatened Monday when the Tar Heels nosed out Washington and Lee at Lexington, Virginia by a score of 64 2-3 to 61 1-3. Last week the Tar Heels were pushed to the limit to win over the strong Duke Blue Devils.

Going into the final event of the afternoon, the broad jump, Carolina needed second place to win the meet while the Generals needed first and second. Leigh Williams, Washington and Lee's great four letter star, took first place, but Bill Howard and Theron Brown, the Tar Heel jumpers, came through with excellent performances to place second and third and clinch the meet.

Speer, General hurdler, set a new record when he negotiated the high hurdles in fifteen seconds flat. Finkelstein placed second and Waugh of Carolina third. In the low hurdles Finklestein stepped the distance in twenty-five seconds to win over Rip Slusser, who had previously won every low hurdle race this spring. Speer placed third in this event.

Washington and Lee had a distinct advantage in the matter of first places, taking eight to six for Carolina, but the Tar Heels took nine second places and seven thirds while the Generals were able to score only five seconds and six thirds. One third place ended in a triple tie between Hamlet and Waugh of Carolina and Curtis of Washington and Lee.

High scoring honors for the day were divided between Williams of Washington and Lee and Brown, Carolina. Williams scored ten points with a first in the quarter-mile and another first in the broad jump. Brown placed first in the javelin, second in the shot put, and third in the broad jump and discus for a total of ten points. Cliff Baucom placed first in the two-mile and second in the one mile run to account for eight points and

GOLFERS ENTER SOUTHERN MEET

Tulane Favored to Win Southern Crown; Duke, Georgia, Tech, Alabama, Kentucky, Florida Enter.

After having been conquered by the Davidson golfers in the annual State tournament at Sedgefield last Saturday, the Tar Heels left last night for Athens, Georgia where they are to take part in the annual Southern Intercollegiate Golf tournament which is to take place at the University of Georgia on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday.

Coach Kenfiield is putting all his hopes on five men to return with the title and these five are: Joe Adams, Bev Mason, Ben Goodes, Al Brown, and Fred Laxton. Four of these will represent the University in the team play and then the other extra man is to take part in the individual play. The four that will play on the team were to be decided by the showing that was made yesterday in practice.

Besides Carolina and Duke, there will be entrants from Georgia, Georgia Tech, Alabama, Kentucky, Tulane, and Florida. This is a large entry and there are some fine golfers among these entrants. On the strength of the season's record, Tulane seems to be the outstanding contender. They have two outstanding golfers, generally considered the best in the South and are the favorites to win the tournament. Carolina, if all their men are on their game should prove a great threat and they will be up with the leaders at any rate. With Joe Adams, Bev Mason, and Ben Goodes all playing the golf they are capable of, the opposition will have to be playing excellent golf to beat them.

The tournament opens with the play for the team championship and this will be decided by medal play over the distance of thirty-six holes. These thirty-six holes will also serve as a qualifying round for the individual play that is to be carried on Friday and Saturday. After the play for the team crown the individual champion will be determined by match play. The winner will be decided after four eighteen hole matches have been played off.

The Tar Heels have a great possibility to return with a Southern Golf Champion. Joe Adams, who just last week annexed the State title is the outstanding man from Carolina. Adams was on his game in grand style last week-end and if he can keep his stride in

STATE MEET TO DRAW STRONGEST FIELD IN YEARS

Carolina Will Be After Eleventh Straight State Title; Injuries Hurt Heels' Chances.

According to advance dope, the state track meet in Greensboro Saturday will be one of the most unique and sensational sport events ever held in North Carolina. Not only will one of the strongest fields in state track history compete for the state championship, but advance arrangements call for the first night track meet in the history of the Southern Conference.

The Tar Heels, champions for the past ten years, will see their supremacy threatened by the most formidable array of opponents to face them since the beginning of their long string of victories. Carolina managed to nose out Duke here last week by a score of 68-58 and will be hard pressed to win over the Blue Devils Saturday.

his part, the conclusion he reaches and the thesis he sets out to establish are so many times to fine and so well done by inuendo that newspaper and other critics draw opposite conclusions from those which he reached himself.

Mr. Steele does not think college courses in short story writing can make a successful writer. According to his understanding, success in the arts does not come as a result of spontaneous inspiration, but rather by painstaking and continual work. No writer ever reaches a peak when all of his stuff ought to be accepted just because it bears a famous name.

Twenty years ago this man sold his first story—the third he had written. He had been studying to become an artist—a painter; he has by painstaking degrees become the supreme contemporary artist of another form. In all he has had published only some one hundred and forty short stories, but they have given him a fame which will live longer than he thinks. His novels and his dramas have not been as successful as his short stories, a thing he regrets since he firmly believes that the renown of a writer of this genre is evanescent and transitory.

Most ironical is the fact that he derives more renumeration from a single story than from the returns of whole collections of his works, and that he is everywhere being used as an example of correct technique and included in anthologies, when he does not possess technique the teachers of the art of short story endow him with.

Wilbur Daniel Steele, because of his birth here in this state, can be called a North Carolinian, but regardless of that fact, Chapel Hill and the University will feel that another star has been torn from its intellectual diadem when he follows Painter Steene in an exodus from the village to Nantucket where, nevertheless, we wish him still greater success and happiness.

Tar Babies-State

The Carolina Freshman baseball club, which beat Davidson's Frosh 6-1 in its last start, goes to Raleigh Wednesday afternoon to continue its quest for freshman honors in a game with N. C. State's Freshmen.

The Tar Babies have a .500 rating for Big Five activities, they having beaten Davidson and lost to Duke 20-7 after a hectic battle of errors. Strickland struck out 14 men as the Tar Babies beat Davidson, and either he or Judge Wharton will likely pitch against State Wednesday.

Schwenning To Address Taylor Society Tomorrow

Dr. G. T. Schwenning, associate professor of business administration, will address the Taylow society, tomorrow night at 7:15 in room 103 Bingham hall. His topic will be: "Industry's Responsibility for Unemployment." This is the same topic that he used in his address at Goldsboro before the North Carolina Social Service conference.

INTRAMURAL RESULTS

Phi Delt's-A.T.O.'s Tie

The Phi Delta Theta's fought the A.T.O.'s to a 4-4 draw yesterday afternoon in the intramural baseball league. Peacock, Phi Delt shortstop, got the only extra base hit of the game, a double to left to score two men. The game was featured by the tight fielding of both teams and the excellent pitching of Moore and McLaughlin.

Score by innings:		R	H
Phi Delt.	040	0—4	2
A.T.O.	022	0—4	5

Batteries: Moore and Griffin; McLaughlin and Brooker.

Sigma Zeta's Defeat S.P.E.'s

The Sigma Zeta's defeated the S.P.E.'s 5-4 yesterday afternoon in a hotly contested game of baseball. Park, Sigma Zeta pitcher, gave up five hits but was unhittable in pinches striking out nine S.P.E.'s when hits meant runs. Temple and Seawell, S.P.E.'s pitchers, allowed only two hits but received ragged support from their team mates.

Score by innings:		R	H
Sigma Zeta's	022	1—5	2
S.P.E.'s	013	0—4	5

Batteries: Park and Fiet; Temple, Seawell, and Merrill.

Deke's Win 13-6

Making thirteen runs out of as many hits the D.K.E.'s walloped the Kappa Sig's 13-6 in yesterday afternoon's baseball game. Lassiter, Walker, and Hall led the attack for the Deke's with three hits apiece. White, Kappa Sig catcher, bagged two safeties to star for the Kappa Sig's.

Score by innings:		R	H
D.K.E.	641	11—13	13
Kappa Sigma	012	30— 6	5

Batteries: Alexander and Preston; Satterfield and White.

Athens he will be hard to beat. At his best Joe is as good as anyone in the South and if he is hitting his stride in Georgia, his opponents will have to shoot golf to take the title. Beside Joe there are Bev Mason and Ben Goodes, both of whom are capable of winning the title. With these three as likely champions the Tar Heels have a good chance of having a golf as well as a tennis king in its ranks.

follow Brown and Williams in the scoring. Finklestein, General hurdle star, also tallied eight points with a first in the low hurdles and second in the highs.

The Tar Heels swept all three places in the discus throw with Dameron first, Thompson second and Brown third. Dameron turned in his best performance of the year in this event when he hurled the plate 132 feet. Bob Drane and Smith placed first and second for Carolina in the 220 yard dash to offset the advantage gained by the Generals when Edmonds and Johnson nosed out Smith in the century.

Williams placed first in the 440 for the Generals with Shepherd second and Weil, Carolina star, third. The time was 51.4.

Tom Watkins played a leading part in Carolina's final rally when he captured the half-mile run from Broderick in 2:05.2. Dick Garrett took third to give Carolina a four point lead after Washington and Lee had climbed to within a point of the Tar Heels.

Cook and Rivers of Washington Lee tied for first in the high jump with a height of five feet six inches, while Red Hamlet and Don Waugh tied with Curtis for third place.

Brodie Arnold and Ray Ruble, on their way home from the Penn Relays, tied for first place in the pole vault with a height of eleven feet six inches, their poorest mark of the season.

Mark Jones, who was taken along at the last moment, ran the mile with his ankle well bandaged and took third behind Gladden, Washington and Lee, and Baucom. Gladden turned in a time of 4:33.4 for this event.

The summary of events follows:

100 yard dash—First, Edmonds, (W&L); second, Johnson (W&L); third, Smith (NC). Time 10 seconds.

220 yard dash—First, Drane, (NC); second, Smith (NC); third, Johnson (W&L). Time 22.4 seconds.

440 yard dash—First, Williams (W&L); second, Shepherd (W&L); third, Weil (NC). Time 51.4 seconds.

880 yard run—First, Watkins (NC); second, Broderick (W&L); third, Garrett (NC). Time 2:05.2.

One mile run—First, Gladden (W&L); second, Baucom (NC); third, Jones (NC). Time 4.33.4.

Two mile run—First, Baucom (NC); second, Hubbard (NC); third, Mahler (W&L). Time 10:11.2.

120 yard high hurdles—First, Speer (W&L); second, Finklestein (W&L); third, Waugh (NC). Time 15 seconds (new Washington and Lee record).

220 yard low hurdles—First, Finklestein (W&L; second, Slusser (NC); third, Speer (W&L). Time 25 seconds.

High jump—First, Cook and Rivers (both of W&L) tied; third, Waugh and Hamlet (NC), and Curtis (W&L) tied. Height 5 feet 6 inches.

Pole vault—First, Ruble and Arnold (NC) tied; third, Sanders (W&L). Heigh 11 feet 6 inches.

Broad jump—First, Williams (W&L); second, Howard (NC); third, Brown (NC). Distance 21 feet 1-2 inch.

Shot put—First, Stevens (W&L); second, Brown (NC); third, Bailey (W&L). Distance 41 feet 4 1-2 inches.

Discus — First, Dameron (NC); second, Thompson (NC); third, Brown (NC). Distance 132 feet.

Javelin—First, Brown (NC); second, Chandler (NC); third, Fangboner (W&L). Distance 160 feet 9 1-2 inches.

point winners in Captain Simons in the mile and two mile, Fulmer in the broad jump, Brownlee in the hurdles and dashes, and Kid Brewer in the weight events. Brewer accounted for sixteen points against the Tar Heels in their dual meet last week, and turned in several exceptional performances. State, with Captain George McGinn in the half-mile, Gurneau and Wilson in the weight events, and Stout and Silver in the dashes, will also present strong opposition.

Wake Forest will present a team of unknown strength, but the Davidson Wildcats are expected to present their usual stellar team. Both Wake Forest and Davidson have been defeated by Duke in dual meets this season, but have several excellent individual stars that may cause the Tar Heels worry.

The preliminaries are scheduled to be run off Saturday afternoon with the finals at night under the giant lights of Memorial stadium. Plans are being made to have a parade of the athletes around the track, with national, state, and school colors flying. This is the general program at the Olympic games, and is expected to add color to the already colorful event.

In addition to the college and university athletes who will perform there will be a large group of high school boys to compete for state-wide honors. Greensboro copped the indoor meet at Chapel Hill last March, but lost out to Charlotte in the regular state high school meet here a few days ago.

Tryouts for The Perfect Alibi will take place tonight at 7:30 o'clock in the Playmakers Theatre.

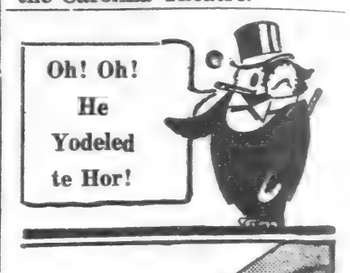
unanswerable.

Dr. Richards' address was preceded by a Sigma Xi banquet in his honor at the Carolina Inn. The banquet was attended by twenty-four members of the Sigma Xi society of this University and others.



Dr. Richards spoke last night on "The Functions of the Renal Tube." This talk was an account of recent efforts to identify and to localize the processes by which glomerular fluid is elaborated into urine during its passage into the uriniferous tubules.

The work of Dr. Richards has been such that he is regarded as one of the most distinguished pharmacologists in the country, and his researches on kidney function has been of such far-reaching importance that as a result of them he has been elected to the National Academy. In bringing him to Chapel Hill, the North Carolina Chapter of Sigma Xi follows its policy of inviting some scholar eminent in the scientific investigations to deliver a series of lectures here each spring.

While in Chapel Hill, Dr. Richards is the guest of Dr. William deB. MacNider of the University's school of medicine, himself a nationally known authority on the kidney.

HUMAN RELATIONS INSTITUTE WILL OPEN ON SUNDAY

Four Churches Will Have Visiting Speakers at Morning Worship.

The program for the University's second quadrennial Institute on Human Relations was announced yesterday by Harry F. Comer, executive secretary, and Beverly Moore, student chairman.

The purpose of the Institute is to provide a week of intensive study of present-day problems in the fields of international, industrial, and interracial relations. Some of the nation's greatest authorities have been secured to speak on these subjects.

The program will get under way Sunday morning when the pulpits of four local churches will be filled by visiting speakers. Dr. Carl C. Taylor, dean of the graduate school at North Carolina State college, will speak on international relations in the Baptist church, and James Myers, industrial research secretary of the Federal Council of Churches, will speak in the Episcopal Church on industrial relations.

Dr. C. B. Hoover, professor of economics at Duke University, will speak in the Methodist Church, having Soviet Russia as his subject. Dr. W. L. Poteat, president-emeritus of Wake Forest college, will speak in the Presbyterian Church on "Christian Attitudes in Race Relations."

The evening meetings will begin at 8:00 o'clock, and will take place in Memorial hall. Sunday night Dean Shailer Matthews of the University of Chicago school of divinity will discuss "A New Social Gospel for the New Social Order."

Monday morning at 10:00 o'clock Gen. Charles P. Summerall, president of the Citadel and retired chief of staff of the United States army, will address the Institute on "Trends in Our National Defense Policy," and in the evening at 8:00 o'clock, Norman Thomas, director of the league for industrial democracy, will talk on: "Wanted—A New Social Philosophy."

Decrease In Measles Reported By Nathan

Dr. S. A. Nathan, health officer, reports that the measles situation in Orange county has calmed down of late, although so far during the month of April there have been one hundred and fourteen cases, none of which has been fatal.

He reports that other diseases have been distributed as follows: thirteen cases of chickenpox, one of pneumonia, six of scarlet fever, two of whooping cough, and forty-one of German measles.

Dr. S. A. Nathan and E. P. Caruthers, the representative of the engineering division of the state board of health, made an inspection of the University buildings and found them very satisfactory. Likewise they inspected the restaurants in town and gave all except one grade A ratings.

Infirmary List

Those confined to the infirmary yesterday were: Stephen H. Pitkin, Norman E. Wells, Stanley B. Abelson, Philip A. Klieger, Lauchlin W. McKinnon, Ertie B. Warren, Herman Vinson, Dan M. Lacy, and Charles F. Crum.

Di Senate In Favor Of Prohibition Issue

The Di senate convened Tuesday night for its regular weekly meeting in the Di hall. The old bills appearing on the calendar were tabled indefinitely, and a new bill was introduced from the floor. The bill, Resolved, that the Di senate should go on record as favoring John J. Raskob's plan of taking a definite stand on the prohibition question in the coming presidential election, was passed by a large majority.

This bill immediately brought forth much discussion from the senators. The speeches continued until a motion for a vote passed by a narrow margin. Senators Dungan and Fleming-Jones favored this bill while Senators Rutledge and Ramsay opposed it.

The last initiation of the college year took place previous to the regular business. Several new members were admitted into the senate.

Wilson Returns From Registrars' Convention

Registrar T. J. Wilson, Jr., has returned from Buffalo, New York, where he has been attending an annual convention of the American Association of collegiate registrars. He has been away from the University since April 13.

On his return, the registrar stopped over in New York City to visit his son, T. J. Wilson, III, who is in charge of the modern foreign language department division of Henry Holt and Co., publishing house.

The association of registrars will convene again next April in Chicago.

MANY SOCIAL EVENTS ON CALENDAR AT INN

Numerous dinners, dances, banquets, and other social events are listed on the calendar of the Carolina Inn for the month of May. Beginning Saturday night, May 2, with the Phi Alpha fraternity dance a number of gay events will follow in rapid succession. The Phi Chi medical fraternity will entertain its members at a banquet in the private dining hall of the Inn Sunday May 3.

Tuesday evening, May 5th, will see the annual buffet supper of the Golden Fleece club. The Golden Fleece is an honorary organization for outstanding campus personalities. The "13" club will hold a dinner and tea dance from 6 to 9 p. m. on the 8th of May. Another fraternity function will be held on the 8th when Tau Epsilon Phi will give an evening dance in the ballroom. The Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity banquet will also take place on the 8th.

Rollins Appointed Dean Of Theological Seminary

Dr. Wallace E. Rollins, '92, has recently been appointed dean of the Virginia Theological seminary, Alexandria, Virginia, where he has served in the faculty for the past eighteen years.

University Facing Vital Problem In Securing Future Loan Funds

Dean Bradshaw Finds Most Students Are Slow in Paying Back Money Borrowed to Defray Essential Expenses.

With the view in mind of exposing to the student body the present deflated status of the students' loan fund and of exhausting every possibility of remedying the situation, Dean F. F. Bradshaw has appealed to the Daily Tar Heel to aid him in a plan.

The purpose of the plan is to emphasize the distressed condition of the fund and to urge the students making use of them to effect a repayment as soon as possible, and to appeal to influential students to exert all their power toward securing donations to this cause.

The expenditures incurred throughout the present year have amounted upwards to $60,000 whereas the available funds received from payment on the total $190,000 outstanding amount are only $30,000. This $30,000 deficit is the direct result of three current trends: the large increase of self-help students in the University; the depressed condition of business at large, inhibiting prompt payments; and the widespread epidemic of bank failures, necessitating the borrowing of funds by students who had previously laid away enough money to provide them with an ample education.

Dean Bradshaw is determined to continue his policy of never turning away a student because of insufficient loan funds; this determined attitude has rendered the University much benefit in the past, when similar financial clouds have darkened the light of education. However, unless a remedy for the present situation is found in one of the aforementioned methods, extensive borrowing will have to be resorted to. This system would not only prove a burden to the department, but would not render available to borrowers the largest sum possible, interest on the borrowed funds having to be paid.

The importance of the loan fund in the work of the University cannot be accurately computed. Some estimate of the effect that it has had in the past may be gleaned from the fact that 7,000 out of the 14,000 living alumni have made use of these funds. Throughout the United States educational institutions are coming to recognize more and more the extensive benefits contributed by such departments. Only recently, the alumni of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology have pledged themselves to support a $4,000,000 loan fund. Other departments here in the University have recognized the importance of its functions and have contributed heavily to the cause, as is demonstrated by the recent donation of $20,000 by the Alumni Loyalty Fund.

The first contribution toward a student loan fund was made by a Chapel Hill Episcopal minister, Reverend Charles F. Deems, in honor of his son who was killed in the Civil War. This early fund consisted of only $300. It was later increased by the original donor and Mr. Cornelius Vanderbilt to $10,700. Since that time, the fund has increased to eight times its original amount through lending it at a slight interest to students, now being estimated at over $82,000. In addition, there are many other such donations, which swell the total fund up to approximately $190,000.

At present, Dean Bradshaw contemplates the necessity of raising approximately $200,000 to meet the increasing demands for financial aid among undergraduate students. In order that this money provide the maximum benefit to the students and the minimum burden to the department, it is essential that the major portion of this amount be raised through private donations and prompt repayments of the borrowers.

Illinois Student Union Provides "A Center For University Life"

Activity Center Houses Offices of Campus Publications, and Contains Ballroom for Class Smokers, Conventions, And Weekly Dances.

(The following article is the fifth of a series in the PRINCETONIAN describing the purposes, financing and success of university centers, or their equivalents, at various universities throughout the country. It is reprinted through the courtesy of the Daily Nebraskan.)

An average of more than 4000 students enters the Illionis Student Union daily, according to E. E. Stafford, the manager. He has also estimated that some 6500 different students attend various functions at the Union each month.

The real purpose of the Union, according to Mr. Stafford is to provide "a center for university life, a place where students can meet and mingle in comradeship, where factional and sectional lines are not recognized or drawn."

"The Heart of Illionis," as the Union is called, is a beehive of student activities. The basement floor of the building houses the offices and plant of the Illini Publishing Co., which prints the student daily paper and the Siren, the humor magazine, in addition to the technical magazines of the various colleges. A cooperative book exchange is another excellent feature of the Union. At this exchange the students list for sale text books in courses they have completed and buy books in courses they are taking.

There are two sections to the Illinois Union, one the Union itself, and the other the Union Arcade. The first floor of the former is given over to a men's lounge room, ladies' lounge, reading room and an auditorium seating 300 persons. A military store, tailor shop, soda fountain and candy counter, checkroom and information desk are also maintained on the first floor. Union officials have offices there, and also a public stenographic bureau, ticket offices for student functions and a dormitory accommodating 100 men.

The Union Arcade building contains a large ball room in which the Illionis Union operates weekly dances, and a banquet

Phi Arranges Dance For Friday Evening

Final arrangements for the Phi assembly dance were made on Tuesday night at the regular meeting of the society. The dance will be held Friday night, May 2 from 6:30 to 9:30 in the Phi assembly hall.

The dance will be informal and refreshments will be served during the course of the evening. This dance brings to the Hill an orchestra which has never played on the University campus before. The dance committee has spent much time in selecting this orchestra and it is expected to be the main feature of the occasion. The dance committee after much consideration has picked "Willie and His Florida Orange Pickers" to make music for the occasion. This orchestra has played at various exclusive clubs in both the north and south.

Admission will be granted only to members of the Phi assembly and especially invited guests. The bids for the dance may be obtained at the Y. M. C. A. during chapel period on Thursday and Friday of this week. The dance committee is composed of W. Ranson Whittenton, Bob Atwood, and Tom Worth.

German Club Will Consider Applicants

Freshmen and University students who expect to attend finals June 9, 10, and 11, and who are not members of the German Club are requested to make application to the treasurer, Will Yarborough at the S. A. E. house today, it was announced yesterday by the executive committee of the club. By its ruling the committee will not consider any applications received after tonight until the fall quarter.

It was also stated that each application must be accompanied by a check for ten dollars, the amount of the initiation fee, which will be returned if the application is not accepted. The assessment for finals will be six dollars in addition to the initiation fee and yearly dues. Freshmen are not required to pay yearly dues, it was said. Special arrangements have been made for seniors who do not plan to return to the University next year.

UNIVERSITY WOMEN PLAN MAY MORNING BREAKFAST

On Saturday morning, May 2, breakfast will be served out of doors in the quadrangle of the Episcopal parish house, from 7:30 until 10:00 o'clock. In the case of rain, the meal will be served inside the parish house. The menu will include strawberries, creamed chicken, and waffles, for which seventy-five cents will be charged.

The breakfast is being sponsored by the Chapel Hill branch of the American Association of University women, for the benefit of its scholarship fund, which is loaned every year to some woman graduate student.

Student Council Penalties

The student council wishes to make the following report of its action at the last meeting:

Case number 28: Mr. X, freshman, was put on strict drinking probation until the winter quarter 1932 for drunk and disorderly conduct.

Case number 29: Mr. X. and Mr. Y., first year students, were suspended from the University for bringing women into one of the dormitory rooms.

COMMITTEE PLANS GALA FESTIVITIES FOR SENIOR WEEK

Sessions Under Davie Poplar on Program for Last Year Men.

Senior week will last from May 18 to May 25 according to an announcement made yesterday by the committee on the program. The complete plans have not yet been finished, but the events will include open meetings under Davie poplar each evening. The committee has invited a number of prominent men to appear at these meetings, among them President Frank Graham and Kemp Battle.

The regalia is still a matter of discussion and no definite announcements have been made in regard to it. One of the suggestions which has received much attention is that of beer suits. These would be white with blue decorations—such as a horse-shoe, "optional attendance," or an "N. C." Pritchard-Lloyd drug company has offered free drinks to all last year men who wear the costume for that week.

The last meeting will be a banquet in the Carolina Inn at 7:00 on the night of May 23.

The committee in charge of arrangements is composed of Clyde Dunn, chairman; and Will Yarborough, Charles de Wolfe, Bert Haywood, Bill Lindsay, and Kermit Wheary.

Prominent Graduate In Serious Condition

Allen J. Barwick, prominent Raleigh attorney, is reported to be growing steadily worse in the Maria Parnam hospital, Henderson, where he has been confined ever since being in an automobile accident a month ago. He was declared well on the way to recovery until pneumonia set in a few days ago, and his condition has grown more serious.

Mr. Barwick was a graduate of the University in the class of 1900, receiving his Ph.B. degree. Until 1907 he served as superintendent of several schools both in this state and Georgia. From that date until 1911 he was chief clerk of the North Carolina department of education. Since then he has been practicing law in Raleigh.

This year, he was elected to succeed Leslie Weil as chairman of the Alumni Loyalty Fund, having been outstanding in his connection with the University since his graduation.

Mr. Barwick has a daughter, Eloise, now a student in the University.

NEW YORK PRODUCTION HOPED FOR 'PLAYTHINGS'

Anthony Buttita, author of Playthings, has left for New York, where he hopes to have his play produced. Playthings was judged by Professor F. H. Koch as the best of the plays written in his playwriting class, and was accordingly produced in the Playmakers Theatre.

Paul Green, who received his early training as a playwright here, spoke very highly of Buttita's work.

Buttita came to the University from the University of Texas, where he received his bachelor's degree. While at Texas, Buttita was a frequent contributor to both the campus daily and the literary magazine. He is one of the editors of the new organ which appeared on the campus Monday, Contempo.

Representatives Of the People

The duly elected members of the legislature of a certain southern commonwealth convened in the capital city of this great and democratic state to conclude in sixty days the biennial legislation by which the welfare, education, and financial departments might continue their business of bringing security, enlightenment, and a reasonable amount of happiness to the three or four million inhabitants of the province. They met and met, and according to newspapers which have reached this state are still meeting after more than one hundred and twenty days.

Irate tillers of the soil from the East of the commonwealth through the power of the ballot rose from their long exhausted red acres, and forsook their broken plows to sit in the halls of the capital as representatives of their property stricken neighbors. They came four months ago grimly determined to lift an unbearable ad valorem tax from the weary shoulders of men unable longer to bear it.

From the middle section of this great commonwealth as well as the West came the insurance men turned representatives of the people, the furniture men, the cotton brokers' employees, and the most efficiently organized army of lobbyists that the great commonwealth had ever seen. Arrived at the capital city they firmly entrenched themselves to keep the ad valorem land tax where it had always been and thus protect the poverty stricken business men who yearly pay the second largest income tax returns of any commonwealth in the United States.

The farmers asked for a sales tax and greater educational opportunities for their children; the merchants said that the business of the state should come to a standstill until such time as the farmers are better able to pay the taxes. For sixty days the two groups have been compromising, but the denouement to this democratic spectacle has yet to be written.

Expert lobbyists, the modern leeches on the body politic, have sapped the strength of a great state which, like a great giant stands tied by Lilliputian strands under the power of political demogogues who fear that in offending the collosal corporations of the province that they will suffer defeat in forthcoming elections.

And this we have been led to believe is Democracy.

The Honor System

To a cynical observer it perhaps occurs that there is necessarily some intangible, morally elevating atmosphere about a class room that can be found nowhere else on the campus or vicinity, since there alone is that unseen force known as the Honor System supposed to exert its very beneficial influence.

Neither the merchants of Chapel Hill nor dormitory store rooms operate, so far as we know, on any such plan; so called "honor boxes" were but recently abolished on the campus, ostensibly to avoid strewing the campus with trash; athletic books, dance tickets, entertainment passes and other means of entrance to college functions are issued to each student entitled to one, and then are carefully required to be signed upon receipt; grades are always sent home by the University administration; and books leave the library only after the taker signs for them.

In spite of such precautions and others, however, slickers, books, etc., are constantly being missed; the library was forced either to abandon its coat room or provide locks; tickets are swapped around among students or even duplicated; library books are continually defaced; merchants receive bad checks or run losing accounts; etc., etc.

Truly there must be something uncommonly purifying in the atmosphere of class rooms, the only place where the standard of "honor" actually prevails.—J. M. L.

Publication Number Seven

Just when the campus had drawn a free breath at the supposed disappearance of illegitimate publications, the first edition of Contempo comes off the press.

Obviously with some sort of literary goal in view, the embryo publication has apparently launched on a crusade to acquaint the student body with the art of fine and sophisticated writing. Articles purporting to have been written especially for the Contempo by national figures endeavor to enhance the sheet as a creation for the campus intellegentia.

Despite what may be its contribution to mental enrichment, the editors fail to remember that the Publications Union already sponsors four campus publications, one of which, the Carolina Magazine is the recognized literary focus of the campus. The appearance of a contemporary publication strikes a severe blow to these four, owned and controlled by the student body. Advertising, at a minimum in the town the size of Chapel Hill is bound to be diverted from the Magazine and other legitimate campus organs. Upon advertising rests the existence of the four; without it their mission on the campus cannot be fulfilled.

The ordained publications are the only servants of the student body today. Their columns are open to any writer, no matter how mean has been his previous training. In them is vested the right of expression of student opinion and they have the sole power to direct the literary efforts of the students of the University.—D. S.

Speaking The Campus Mind

To the Editor of
The Daily Tar Heel:

It is the purpose of the present administration to keep the student body informed of all the actions and policies of the Student Council and of the entire administration, and to create a wider interest in student affairs. This can best be accomplished in two ways: regular use of the Daily Tar Heel and regular mass meetings of the student union. Such was the campaign platform and such is the present policy of the new officers.

Every Wednesday, therefore, following the regular union meetings of the student council there will be a report of any action taken by that body in its attempt to enforce good campus citizenship. Every Wednesday along with this brief report there will be a concise statement by the president of the student union as to the policies and the projects in which the administration is immediately concerned.

It has been extremely difficult in the past few years to assemble a representative group of students for a mass meeting of any kind. This is a regrettable commentary on student life, and an indication of the fact that the spirit of the campus has not grown in proportion to the growth of the student body.

There will be one mass meeting of the student union this spring, that being the Annual Awards Night which will be held in Memorial hall the second week in May. It is hoped that next fall quarter beginning with the orientation week, the University Convocation, and early pep meetings that the inauguration of regular monthly mass meetings can be auspiciously begun.

MAYNE ALBRIGHT,
Pres. of the Student Union.

With Contemporaries

Is Our Educational System Really Like This?

An excerpt from an editorial from the Bombay Evening News of India says the following of our awarding of university degrees: "Some people may think Dr. Abraham Flexner, the education authority, is exaggerating when he says there are American universities which grant pass degrees in clog-dancing, wrestling, typewriting and beekeeping. He is not.

"We have read that a Doctor of Philosophy in a Southern state got his degree for a thesis on the Cold Storage of Chicken Meat! Another university graduate secured academic honors with a monograph on dishwashing. And the American Geographical Society specially created the curious degree of Doctor of Longitude and Latitude in order to confer it on Lieut.-Commander Byrd, the North Pole flight."

It isn't a bad idea, is it? For instance, suppose a student worked and slaved over the books, but just could not pass courses required for graduation such as physics, mathematics or chemistry. He could then turn to some field in life in which he excelled and procure a degree made to measure. In an agricultural school he might earn a degree of Bachelor of Science in the Art of Steadying a Plough, or again on the Knack of Catching and Holding Fishing Worms. If the student were interested sufficiently in his chosen life's work he might seek to impress the committee on doctorates by changing the words "Fishing Worms," to "Lumbricus Terrestis," when ready for his Ph.D. degree.

If we of America would gain and hold the respect of the outside world then we must continue to be versatile and award degrees to any and all of those who have distinguished themselves in any line of work, even to gum chewing. Ours is the heritage of the name "Melting Pot." Are we going to forsake that epithet and all that it carries by inference? No, never. Rather we will take the matter up with the Zenith Boosters club and appoint a committee to act upon the matter to see if something can't be done about heaping further academic honors on this Flexner person.—Indiana Student.

As the Gloomy Dean Sees It

Having put in 40 years at the University of Illinois watching the capering freshmen depart as solemn seniors, Thomas Arkle Clark is persuaded that "petting can't be stopped." Those were his words to a conference of fellow deans down in Tennessee last week. Warming to his subject, he asserted "there has been petting ever since Adam and Eve, and there always will be." The stony silence in which his judgment was received must be construed as melancholy acquiescence.

It is of this melancholy acquiescence we would fain speak. It occurs to us that those censors of the campus are looking at life from what someone has called the wrong slant. It is one of the treasured tenets of their philosophy, apparently, that the higher education should be a denaturing process. They yearn to believe that because a maiden chooses briefly to wear the sandals of Hypatia she shall be emancipated from the tempests Sappho knew and sang, that somewhere along the bleak road of learning our Appollos shall be metamorphosed into Anthonys.

It is not the office of education to toss Chicago pineapples at the cosmic urge. Petting is an institution more lasting than marble or bronze or steel or concrete. If that makes deans gloomy, the gloom is all theirs.—St. Louis Post Dispatch.

The University Of Inverness

A short while ago it was proposed that a million dollars be spent at Harvard University for the erection of a war memorial chapel. Vigorous and proper protests against the expenditure for the sanctification of war were voiced by the "Harvard Crimson" and the "Yale Daily News," and other student newspapers.

Another, and infinitely more worth while, way of spending a million dollars was revealed recently in the announcement of a proposed new university to be built at Inverness, Scotland, by Americans. A group of Americans has organized the American Iona Society, which will build the new university as a tribute of gratitude for Scotland's contribution to the United States. The preliminary campaign is for the first ten millions of dollars which will be spent on the university at Inverness.

Professor John Lawrence Gerig, who teaches Celtic at Columbia University, and who is an officer of the new society, said: "It would be most regrettable if, in the amalgamation of cultures toward which all nations are tending, the beautiful and romantic tradition of the Celt should disappear from the face of the earth." The new university will be of great value, not only in the education of Scotland, but in the preserving of Scottish culture and literature, and in the keeping of "the beautiful and romantic tradition."

Far, far better than the spending of a million dollars for the greater edification of the god of war, is this move to spend a million dollars for a material addition to the institutions of higher education of Scotland, in a way which must inevitably draw two peoples on opposing sides of the Atlantic in closer sympathy. When the great universities of Aberdeen and Edinburgh, Glasgow, and St. Andrews find in their company the new University of Inverness they will be sensible to America's appreciation of Scottish contributions to the growth of this nation.—Stanford Daily.

Life at a Great University

Two young women with their skirts up around their thighs were sitting on the steps of St. Paul's Chapel yesterday. St. Paul's in case you haven't heard, is Columbia's stronghold of divine worship. The young women were tense and tight-lipped in the midst of a conversation about the verities of life, at the same time puffing at a pair of cigarettes whose tips glowed with the heat of honest controversy. Inside the Chapel someone was softly playing the organ. Just an adolescent, our civilization, just an adolescent. —Spectator.

National Comprehensive Senior Tests Planned

Since Dr. J. B. Johnston, dean of the college of science, literature, and arts at the University of Minnesota has been appointed chairman of a national advisory committee on college testing, comprehensive examinations to be given to every senior in academic, teachers and junior colleges throughout the United States appears as a possibility.

Dr. Johnston is now planning an examination which would be more comprehensive than one given to Minnesota seniors, and which would include twenty different subjects, as well as a general culture and character test.

Will Durant Sees Longer Marriages In Longer Skirts

Cleveland. — Adam Smith, John Stuart Mill and Baker Brownell: each of the first two have gained their proper recognition as founders not only of an economic system but of theories that have permeated life in its moral, spiritual and political phases, to be true, often negatively.

When Brownell first gave utterance to his widely-known theory to the effect that depression was caused by long skirts, few dreamed that an ethical as well as an economical civilization was to sprout from the seed.

But the first apostle has joined the ranks. Will Durant, eminent doctor of philosophy formerly at Columbia and more recently author of books on philosophy and many kindred subjects has grasped at the essence of Brownell's theory for his new ethical revelation. In an interview at Cleveland, the philosopher said:

"Long skirts will bring long marriages. Youth has been holding an epicurean riot in our big cities; but like all things, they run themselves out in time. The new clothes are an indication of the trend. Perhaps, long skirts will bring long marriages."

Striking at the fourth estate, Durant continued. "The predominance of youth in modern affairs is due partly to the large unsettled population caused by late marriages and partly due to the fact that most of the newspaper writers and reviewers are young people."—Daily Northwestern.

Ferebee, Powell Lead Tar Heels To Victory Over Deacon Nine

Hinton Hurls Good Ball as Carolina Wins, 7-4; Tar Heels First in Big Five.

Led by the big bats of Willie Powell and "Smokey" Ferebee, the Tar Heels repeated their earlier victory over Wake Forest yesterday, 7-4, at Emerson field before a crowd estimated at 3000.

Unlike the previous game, yesterday's contest was a free hitting one, the Tar Heels rocking Joe Meador for twelve hits while the Deacons found Carolina pitching for nine safe blows.

Ferebee, with three safe hits, including a homer, and Powell, also with three hits, led the attack for Carolina, while Cobb, Lister, and Hicks starred for the visitors with two safe blows apiece. Bethune hit a home run for the losers.

Cecil Longest, starting for the Tar Heels, was hit hard during his four inning stay on the hill, the "Deacs" solving his delivery for seven hits. George Hinton, who relieved Longest, hurled steadily, allowing but two scattered hits.

Joe Meador, who held Carolina for ten innings three weeks ago, went the distance but was hit hard, holding the Tar Heels hitless only in the sixth inning.

The Tar Heels scored in the opening frame when Ferebee hit his fifth homer of the season to center field.

Wake Forest came back in the second inning to score three runs on four hits. Earp singled to right, advancing a base on Bethune's sacrifice bunt. Benton's infield hit put Earp on third from where he counted on Hick's double to left field. Meador laid down a pretty bunt to score Benton with the second run and advanced Hicks to third. Longest's wild pitch enabled Hicks to score.

Carolina scored another run in the second and forged ahead in the third by scoring two more runs. Ferebee singled to center. House also singled to center putting Ferebee on third. Dunlap's infield out scored Ferebee. House scored on Blythe's long fly to center field.

In the very next inning, Wake Forest evened the count when the lead-off man, Bethune, smashed a home run to deep center field. That blow terminated the Deacons' scoring.

The Tar Heels counted two more in the eighth inning when a base on balls to Wyrick followed by Billy Powell's long single down the third base line scored Pete. Powell also scored on Hinton's single and error by Bethune on the same play. Hinton tried to score on the play but was thrown out, Bethune, Benton, to Hicks.

Briefs

Willie Powell finally came out of his hitting slump—and with a bang. Willie raked Meador for three hits out of four times at bat. Incidentally, Willie has been picking them out of the dirt all around the "hot corner."

Joe Meador is firmly established as Ferebee's "cousin." "Smoke" won the first game with the Deacons in the tenth inning by blasting a long home run off Meador, and yesterday, the short stop duplicated the trick his very first time at bat. In addition, "Smoke" got three for four.

"Doc" Sermon, umpiring, came in for plenty of squawking from both sides.

Time out had to be taken when Edwards, right fielder, hurt his groin. After a few minutes rest, Lefty was able to go out to his position again. He made a beautiful catch of Croom's bid for a base hit.

BASEBALL TITLE DATE ANNOUNCED

Interest throughout the state is growing in respect to the outcome of the baseball contest of class A high schools of North Carolina.

This class is composed of the seven largest high schools in the western part of the state and the eight largest in the eastern part. The winning team from the eastern group will meet the winning team of the western group here in Chapel Hill on Saturday May 23, for the state high school title.

The standings of the teams are as follows:

EASTERN

Team	W.	L.	Pct.
Raleigh	3	0	1.000
Rocky Mount	1	1	.500
Goldsboro	0	3	.000

BROWN, SLUSSER LEAD TAR HEEL TRACK SCORERS

Weight Man with Fifty-Six, Rip With Forty-Seven, Lead Squad; Smith Third.

Scoring ten points against Washington and Lee Monday, Theron Brown, leading Tar Heel track scorer, ran his total for the season to fifty-six and his lead over Rip Slusser, who holds second place with forty-seven, to nine. Slusser was able to score only three points against the Generals, taking second place in the low hurdles.

Brown placed first in the javelin, second in the shot put, and third in the discus and broad jump to lead the Tar Heel scoring for the day, while Cliff Baucom was second high scorer against the Generals with eight points. Baucom ran the mile for the first time this season and placed second to Gladden of the Generals who broke the tape in 4:33.2. He then placed first in his specialty, the two mile, to run the season's total to 26.

J. K. Smith, veteran dash star, tallied four points with a second in the 220 and third in the 100, to retain third place in the individual scoring race. Smith has a total of thirty-three points, three more than Brodie Arnold who added four points to his total Monday by tying Ruble in the pole vault. Ruble, with four points against the Generals and two in the Penn Relays, moved into a three way tie with Baucom and Sandy Dameron with twenty-six points each.

Archie Davis failed to place in the Washington and Lee meet and dropped from fourth to fifth place with twenty-seven points. Ken Marland, another leader a few weeks back, again failed to tally against the Generals, and dropped to ninth place with twenty-three points.

Tom Watkins, half mile star, replaced Mark Jones among the leading scorers by taking first place in the 880 while Jones was placing third in the one mile run. Watkins ran his total to twenty-two against twenty-one for Jones.

Sandy Dameron turned in Carolina's best performance Monday when he tossed the discus 132 feet, almost three feet more than he has done at any other time during the season.

Other leading scorers are: Bob Drane and George Bagby with twenty points each, Bob Hubbard with eighteen, and Red Hamlet with 13 2-3.

Floyd Higby, freshman dash and broad jump star, continued to lead the list of freshmen scorers by piling up thirteen points against Greensboro high school Saturday as the Tar Babies scored their most smashing victory of the year. Higby has fifty-nine points, thirteen more than Bunny Goodwin, hurdler, who is second with forty-six.

Ashkenas jumped from fourth to third among the yearling scorers by adding thirteen points to his total which is now forty-one. Horney follows him with 38 1-3.

Other freshmen scorers with twenty or more points are: Mullis 27, Glenn 25, Meade 24, Louis Sullivan 20, and LeGore 20.

Grant And Hines Defeat Yeomans And Wright To Give Heels State Crown

COLLEGIANA

By THOMAS H. BROUGHTON

The supremacy of the west in track is stamped impressively on the records. A comparison of the marks of the Penn and Drake Relays show records hung up at Des Moines superior to those of the east in twelve of seventeen events. In two events the figures were identical, and in three the east was superior.

The annual Purdue Alumni-Varsity game, which corresponds to our own Monogram-Rookie game, went to the Varsity this year although the Alumni team was made up of such stars as Frank Carideo, Notre Dame All-American, "Red" Mackey, Boilermaker coach, and Harmeson, former Purdue star. The Varsity nosed out the Alumni by the close score of 7-0. The main threat of the Grads was the passing of Marmeson to Carideo, which threatened to score several times but was unable to cross the goal line.

It appears that the three leading contenders for the honor of representing the United States in the decathlon of the 1932 Olympics will be Barney Berlinger, Penn track captain, Buster Charles, Haskell, and Jim Bausch, of the Kansas City Athletic Club. A comparison of the records made by Berlinger in the Penn Relays last Saturday with those made by Charles and Bausch at the Kansas Relays last week show that the Indian would have won the 100 meter, 400 meter, and 1,500

Tar Heel Aces Win Over Team Mates to Win First Intercollegiate Title.

Grant and Hines won their first intercollegiate tennis title as a doubles team yesterday afternoon on the varsity courts to sweep the tennis championship of the state for Carolina, Grant having previously defeated his doubles partner, Wilmer Hines, for the singles crown.

The Tar Heel doubles stars defeated Lenoir Wright and Ed Yeomans, fellow Tar Heels, 6-4, 1-6, 6-3, 7-5 to win the title.

Grant and Hines took the first set rather easily although each point has hotly contested. In the second set the Carolina No. 1 doubles combination slowed up allowing Yeomans and Wright to take their only set of the match by the one sided score of 1-6.

The third set was a different story however. Grant and Hines rallied to take an easy 6-3 victory and with only one set needed to win the match they opened up to take the fourth and final set, after the score had been tied at 5-5, to win the next two games and the match.

Yeomans and Wright put up a game fight but were outclassed by the two national champions, who have yet to lose a match in intercollegiate play.

In the semi-finals matches Yeomans and Wright gained the right to meet Grant and Hines for the title by defeating their team mates Hendlin and Cap-

FOOTBALL STARS PLAY HUGE ROLE ON TRACK TEAM

Slusser, Brown, Thompson, Hodges, and Chandler Having Success in New Fields.

Shades of football! At Greensboro in the state Track Championships Saturday, Carolina's defending champs will be banking heavily on the flying feet and the stout right arms of at least a quintet of husky gridders.

Leading the parade will be Rip Slusser, of halfback fame, remembered best by Tennessee's eleven. The blonde speedster has pinch-hit and won the 100-yard dash for Carolina in 10 seconds in three of six meets this spring, and in his speciality, the 220-yard low hurdles, he has raced as fast as 24.6 seconds, just .2 seconds slower than the Southern Conference record.

The others of the quintet are three hefty linemen and one hard-running back, but all four throw the weights. First is Theron Brown, a Greensboro boy, incidentally, who was second among the Carolina scorers last year, who throws shot, discus and javelin and broadjumps on occasions, and who may break loose in the discus almost any time now.

George Thompson and Harry Hodges are two other men old to football, but just getting started

Christopher Morley Advises Young Writers To Keep At It

Noted Essayist Tells Amusing Incident in Interview With Wisconsin Reporter of Shakespeare's Being Mistaken For Edgar Guest.

"We are just a couple of comedians who have finished our little trapeze act," said Christopher Morley, noted writer, as he nodded to his secretary in his hotel room, "and now for a little relaxation." So saying he took out his pipe and started to smoke, which is, by the way, his favorite sport.

After autographing a student's letter and one of his own books and inspecting a bottle of violet toilet water that had been purchased for him, he started to speculate on his trip to Chicago. "I like trains," he said, "but this one hasn't any diner, so we're taking a bag of doughnuts.

"There is something I always carry with me," he divulged, suddenly becoming serious. He took from an old wallet a paper yellowed with age on which was written Rupert Brooke's sonnet on death. It began.

"Not with vain tears, when we're beyond the sun,
We'll beat on the substantial doors, not tread
Those dirty high roads of the armless dead."

and ended with the line

"And see, no longer blinded by our eyes."

But Morley could not long be serious, and as the telephone rang he hollered out "phone fresh," which he said was the custom at Oxford.

He told how he and a publisher had entered a Minneapolis book store recently. Because it was Shakespeare's birthday they induced the clerk to take down a bust of Shakespeare, dust it, and place it on the table. Morley then purchased some flowers and placed them nearby.

It seems that the customers took the bust for that of Edgar Guest, and upon returning at the end of the day Morley found himself responsible for the largest sale of Guest's poetry that the store had ever had.

The twenty-four hours spent in Madison, according to the author, were the busiest of his life. He came back to the hotel for dinner thoroughly tired out from having played "blind man's buff" at a picnic, but admitted that he thoroughly enjoyed it.

He is interested in the act authorizing Esperanto to be placed on the University of Wisconsin curriculum. Although declining to make any long comment he said that to him it seemed "highly fantastic."

As he packed he humorously remarked on each piece of clothing from a bright pair of pajamas to a boiled shirt front.

After reminding me to be discreet in what was printed, on account of having seen the intimate Christopher Morley, he gave what he said was his advice to young writers, which is "keep on writing."—The Daily Cardinal.

NATIVE SPANISH SCHOOLS ADOPT NEW LOTTERY SYSTEM OF EXAMS

"The new system of examination introduced recently in Spanish universities is conducted by lottery. In this system, a revolving container is filled with small wooden balls, on each of which is indicated the number of a particular lesson in the text.

"The student goes to the mechanism and takes one of the balls as they are released automatically one at each revolution of the container. He then answers the question orally, before a tribunal composed of members of the faculty.

Joseph R. Sanchez, Ohio State university students, finishing with examinations, smiled as a new thread of conversation began.

"Especially do I admire the freedom of the women students in this university. In Spain, unless the girl is behind a barred window, you cannot have a date without a chaperon.

"I also like the idea of campus activities. In Spain there are no fraternities or sororities. There is only one organization, La Estudiantina," which corresponds to the glee clubs. At Christmas time the group travels from one city to another singing and dancing.

"The main sport is soccer football. Now and then a mock bullfight is staged. Baseball and basketball are just being introduced.

"The Spanish students go in more for politics and government affairs. They have the power and privilege of forming very solid bodies among themselves. The form of government and government affairs are always criticized.

"They do not hesitate to take arms in revolt, and not infrequently students are severely wounded. This is expected of them by the people. The student is looked up to as a future leader and is respected by the government and the public in general.—Ohio State Lantern.

Lillian Puts Blame On Scandal Sheets

"A girl in private life is expected to have beaux and go to parties, and there is no reason why a girl in the movies should not be able to do so." Thus stated Lillian Roth, cinema actress, in ridiculing public criticism that has been pointed at Clara Bow, to an interviewer from the Emory Wheel.

Miss Roth claims that the newspapers are to blame for all the unwelcome notoriety gained by stars in the film colony, "for they put the worst possible light on all actions." Further analyzing the situation, Lillian thinks that the public, now tiring of Clara Bow, will soon tire of her.

"In that case, I suppose you are saving your money," queried the interviewer.

"And how!" responded the petite Miss Roth.

Hanes Becomes President Of Bankers Association

Robert M. Hanes, '12, was elected from the position of vice-president to that of president of the North Carolina Bankers' Association at a meeting in Pinehurst ending yesterday. He is also the administrative vice-president of the Wachovia Bank and Trust Co., Winston-Salem.

State Typing Contest

The state high school typewriting and shorthand contest will be held in the Tin Can Saturday morning, May 2. Twenty schools, represented by a total of approximately eighty representatives will be present.

The contest is sponsored by the North Carolina Commercial Contest Association in conjunction with the University extension division. Miss Cora L. Odum, of the faculty of central high school, Charlotte, is directing the contest.

The Campus Calendar

Debate Squad

Mr. L. M. Brooks of the school of social welfare will address the debate squad at 7:30 tonight in 201 Murphey hall on the influence of the talking picture.

Debating Council

The old debate council will meet with the new council in 201 Murphey tonight at 7:20 for the election of officers for next year.

Spanish Club

Due to the dances this weekend, there will be no meeting of the Spanish Club Friday.

Debate Squad

The regular meeting of the debate squad in Murphey 201 at 7:30 tonight will be devoted to a discussion of Resolved, That talking movies will, in the next ten years, be more beneficial than detrimental, which is the question for the radio debate with the University of Virginia.

Taylor Society

Dr. G. T. Schwenning will address the Taylor society at 7:15 tonight in Gerrard hall on "Industries' Responsibility for Unemployment."

Winners of Prizes In Camel Contest To Be Known Soon

Announcement of awards in the Camel cigarette $50,000 cash prize contest will be made early in May, officials of R. J. Reynolds tobacco company, Winston-Salem, stated today.

The contest judges and their staff, who have been carefully reading the approximately 1,000,000 entries, announced today that they are rapidly nearing the completion of their work, and that within the next week or ten days they will be able to definitely set the dates on which the winners will be announced, and prizes awarded.

The judges are Roy W. Howard, chairman of the board of the Scripps-Howard league of newspapers; Ray Long, president of the International Magazine company and editor of Cosmopolitan, and Charles Dana Gibson, the famous artist, who is publisher of Life magazine. Thirty-eight prizes will be given for the best answers as to how the new cellophane moisture-proof wrappers on Camel cigarette packages benefit smokers.

The first prize-winner will receive a check for $25,000 from R. J. Reynolds tobacco company, manufacturers of Camel cigarettes. Awards of $10,000 and $5,000 will be given to the second and third winners. The next five will receive $1,000 each, and the balance of $5,000 will be distributed among thirty winners.

The uses of the Union building are divided between special events and functions held by the Union itself. Among its activities are smokers, meetings of its various committees, and dances for its members, while the special events include such things as elections and conventions. The various professional organizations which do not maintain houses of their own also use the Union extensively.

Appropriations Of U. of Minnesota Are Slightly Increased

The University budget as approved by the two houses of the state legislature will allow a total of $6,550,000 for salaries, supplies and equipment during the biennium 1931-32, or an increase of $50,000 annually for expenditures.

Together with a host of other measures, the University appropriations bill included in the general educational program schedule of the state, was passed through the senate recently while the draped clocks in the state house ticked unnoticed.

During the legislative session, the solons rejected several requisitions to finance research work on University farm. The proposed $300,000 farm crop experiment station was thrown out of consideration by the legislators.

Members of the legislature also failed to realize the expediency of the psychopathic hospital. Appropriation of $300,000 for the unit which would have been annexed to the east wing to the University hospital would be a drain on administrative expenditures, according to several members of the house.

The University is receiving at the present time:

For Maintenance	$3,225,000
For Buildings	300,000
For Hospital	165,000
Total	$3,675,000

The University will receive during the year:

For Maintenance	$3,275,000
For Buildings	300,000
For Hospital	165,000
Total	$3,740,000
Increase	$ 65,000

The 10-year building plan initiated by the 1929 legislature calls for an appropriation of $300,000 for construction of campus buildings every year.

Attempts made during the present session for the legislators to obtain special appropriations for the business building, forestry building, and a nurses' home proved futile.—Minnesota Daily.

Humor Publications Affected By Censor

Editors of campus humor publications throughout the country are feeling the effect of the spirt of journalistic puritanism that is now pervading the entire country. Following one after another several nationally known college humor magazines have been suppressed by the ubiquitous hand of the respective faculties.

Soon after the suppression of the so-called "theological" number of the Purple Parrot the Harvard Lampoon felt the severity of university officials as a result of their latest issue.

Forced to suspend publication until next September the Lampoon has been the subject of much comment because of the notorious publicity caused by its articles and cartoon. For some time it has been openly attacked by the Harvard Crimson, the daily paper, for the policy exhibited in current issues.

Only a short time ago the coeds of the University of Chicago threatened to boycott the Phoenix unless the editors promised a general housecleaning. Following this criticism editors pledged themselves to a fumigation of the jokes and cartoons to be printed.

The Michigan Gargoyle was also subjected to similar censure because its contents were considered risque. Authorities at Ann Arbor took the editors to task for alleged vulgarity and obscenity in the Gargoyle's columns.

The Tar Heel trackmen will show one more big star from another sport, Sandy Dameron, pivot of the big Carolina basketball team that twice came within two points of Maryland's Southern champions during the winter. Dameron specializes on throwing the discus, and has won four firsts and two seconds for six meets, but he may participate in the shot put, too.

With Carolina having beaten Duke only 68-58 and Duke having been held 64-62 by Davidson, the Tar Heels are expecting a tough three cornered fight as they try to annex their 12th consecutive State title at Greensboro Saturday. Charlie Farmer, Southern champion sprinter, is out, but Jones and Bagby will probably be back in the mile and jumps, respectively, and the Tar Heels will be a carrying on with all they have.

The big surprise of the Drake Relays was the defeat of Eddie Tolan, world's record holder of the 100 yard dash, by Glass, Oklahoma A. & M. sophomore who broke the tape a few inches ahead of Tolan in 9.7 seconds.

College athletics, and football in particular, were defended in speeches made in Des Moines recently at a banquet honoring the tenth anniversary of Ossie Bolen as football coach at Drake University. Major John L. Griffith, commissioner of athletics of the Big Ten said that football might be killed as a college sport but that it would never die as a game.

"The politicians, professional promoters, and the newspapers will gladly assume the responsibility of promoting football if the colleges do not wish to administer the game," said Griffith.

tain Graham after a long and hard fought battle.

Their match was scheduled to be run off Tuesday afternoon but had to be called off on account of darkness after each team had won two sets and the count was 3-3 on the fifth set.

In the first set Yeomans and Wright won 6-4 but Hendlin and Graham rallied to take the next pair, 6-1 and 7-5. The fourth went to Wright and Yeomans, 6-3, with the fifth set ending in a deadlock, 3-3.

In the play-off yesterday afternoon Yeomans and Wright won two sets of the three scheduled to enter the finals with the winner of the Grant-Hines and Rogers-Myers match, which was won easily by the Tar Heel team. Grant and Hines had previously defeated Rogers and Myers easily in the Carolina-Duke match here last Monday afternoon.

ORDER OF GRAIL ELECTS FIFTEEN TO MEMBERSHIP

Thirteen Students and Two Members of Faculty Initiated Last Night.

Fifteen men were taken into the Order of the Grail at the annual initiation last night.

The Grail is an honor organization which attempts to promote closer and better relationships between fraternity and non-fraternity men. Six non-fraternity and six fraternity men are usually chosen each year with the odd man alternating between the two groups.

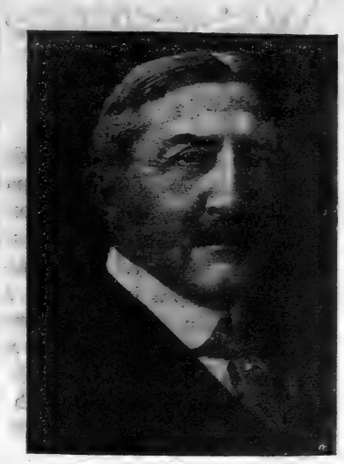
The new fraternity members are: John Manning, business manager of the Daily Tar Heel and Phi Kappa Sigma; Archie Davis, varsity baseball and football man and Delta Kappa Epsilon; Henry Connor, basketball squad and Sigma Alpha Epsilon; Charles Rose, chairman of the editorial board of the Daily Tar Heel and Beta Theta Pi; Ed French, managing editor of the Daily Tar Heel and Pi Kappa Alpha; Red Gilbreath, varsity football center and Pi Kappa Phi; Sam Breen, assistant manager basketball and Tau Epsilon Phi.

The following non-fraternity men were initiated: Percy Idol, varsity wrestler; Graham Trott, self-help student at the Book Exchange; Red Hamlet, varsity high jumper; Phil Alston, assistant sports editor of the Daily Tar Heel and manager of boxing next year; Bobbie Mason, art editor of the Buccaneer; and Lee Greer, vice-president of the Y. M. C. A.

Dean F. F. Bradshaw and Coach Bob Fetzer were also taken into the Grail as honorary members.

There will be a banquet for the order tonight in the Carolina Inn when officers for next year will be elected and the year's work discussed. Saturday night there will be a Grail dance in honor of the new members.

Students Drive Salesmen Away



Two representatives of a well-known national tobacco company started a near-riot yesterday afternoon when in a high-powered car they stopped in front of Swain hall to give away samples of their wares to after-dinner smokers.

The salesmen had come to Chapel Hill with the purpose of disposing of four thousand packages of cigarettes in an advertising scheme; and the first stop in their plan was in front of Swain hall. Over-eagerness caused the would-be smokers, learning of the representatives' purpose, to shove and push around their would-be benefactors until it was unfeasible for the salesmen to complete their attempt.

By this time a larger number of students had gathered and made the spectacle seem much like a street fight. The representative beat a rapid retreat to their automobile, closely followed by the students. They were unable to get started either backwards or forwards as the crowd had gathered all around their car.

Thus they departed, leaving a disappointed line of would-be smokers.

Dr. E. A. Alderman

Dr. Alderman, president of the University, 1897-1900, and president of the University of Virginia, 1904-1931, was stricken by apoplexy while on his way to the inauguration of Dr. Harry W. Chase as president of the University of Illinois.

FORMER HEAD OF INSTITUTION DIES IN PENNSYLVANIA

Dr. Alderman Stricken By Apoplexy While En Route To Chase Inauguration.

Dr. Edwin A. Alderman, president of the University of Virginia died as a result of an attack of apoplexy Wednesday evening while on the way to Urbana, Illinois, where he was to deliver an address today at the inauguration exercises of Dr. Harry W. Chase as president of the University of Illinois.

Dr. Alderman was sixty-nine years old and would have completed his twenty-seventh year as president of the University of Virginia in June. The late doctor was an alumnus of the University of North Carolina and was at one time president of this institution. Later he became president of Tulane University whence, after a term of four years, he went to take up his duties as president of the University of Virginia.

Dr. Alderman was born at Wilmington, May 15, 1861, and was graduated from the University in 1882. While here he won much praise for his oratorical ability and was later elected a member of Phi Beta Kappa.

After graduation he was superintendent of education of North Carolina for ten years. In 1893 he became professor of education at the University and was president of the institution from 1896 to 1900. Following this he spent four years as president of Tulane University in New Orleans, Louisiana.

During his administration as president, the enrollment of students at the Virginia institution has increased from 500 students in 1904 to 2,514 resident students and 3,500 summer school and extension course affiliates in 1931. The faculty that worked under him numbered 48 men in 1904 and 300 at the time of his death. He was to a great degree responsible for the increase of that University's endowment from $350,000 to more than $10,000,000.

Dr. Alderman was a life-long friend of Woodrow Wilson and was chosen by Congress as the speaker for its joint session in honor of the war President when he died in 1924. At that time he delivered what has been considered one of the most memorable eulogies ever made before Congress. He defended his

BATTIN ON GUEST ORGANIST SERIES

Meredith Professor Will Appear For Recital in Music Auditorium Monday.

Professor Isaac L. Battin, of the faculty in the Meredith College school of music, will present the third of the guest series of organ recitals in Music hall on Monday evening, May 4, at 8:15.

An attraction on Professor Battin's program is the Grieg Concerto No. 2 which will be played on the piano by Miss Galt, of the music faculty at Meredith, with the orchestral part played by Professor Battin on the organ. In view of the fact that this is probably the last of the guest series concerts, a large audience is expected on Monday evening.

Professor Battin, although only in his second year in North Carolina, has become known as a musician of high rank. A native of Pennsylvania, Professor Battin was graduated from the university of that state and has since carried on the study of music in New York under prominent teachers and coaches.

His interests are not limited to the organ. He is a choral enthusiast and has brought the Meredith choral activities to some degree of attainment. Under his direction, at least four choral works of major character each year are being studied and publicly performed at that institution. Professor Battin has recently organized and trained the Raleigh Choral Society, which will present Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise with the Raleigh Symphony Orchestra early in May.

Playmakers Select Tentative Cast For Milne Presentation

At the Playmaker try-outs Wednesday night the following persons were tentatively selected for parts in A. A. Milne's play The Perfect Alibi; Jimmy Ludgrove, John Sehon, Susan Cunning, Ellen Stewart, and Betsy Perrow; Adams, William Allsbrook, and Robert Proctor; Edward Laverick, Joseph Fox, Major Fothergill, Forney Rankin, and Arthur Marpet; Mrs. Fulverton-Fane, Susan Creech, and Marion Tatum; Jane West, also Susan Creech, and Marion Tatum; Arthur Ludgrove, W. G. Chandler, P. C. Mallet, Charles Elledge; "Sergeant" Mallet and Gilbert Stamper.

A reading rehearsal took place last night and the final selections will be made later. The play is to be presented only on the night of May 23 in Memorial hall. Mr. Selden also announces that the next bill of original plays will be presented May 14, 15, and 16. Season booklets cover both of these presentations.

Northwestern Professor To Speak To Law School

Professor John H. Wigmore of the Northwestern University law school will speak this morning at 10:30 o'clock in the first year classroom of the law building. Professor Wigmore, one of the most prominent figures in law school work, is considered an authority on evidence. The topic of his talk is not known, but the address is not expected to exceed 30 minutes in length. All pre-law students are especially invited.

FOUR EVENTS ON SOCIAL PROGRAM THIS WEEK-END

Sophomore Hop Scheduled For This Evening Will Be Largest Dance.

This week-end Carolina is to be the scene of many dances among which are the Sophomore Hop, the Phi assembly dance, the Phi Alpha dance, and the Grail dance.

The Sophomore Hop which will be given in the Bynum gymnasium from 9 to 1 Friday evening will open the events for the week-end. There have been about 350 bids already given out, and those who have not yet obtained their tickets should see Shady Lane at the Sigma Nu house.

The leaders of the dance will be: Dave Henry assisted by Elizabeth Nunn, Sparks Griffin assisted by Lois Mecham, and Ben Campen assisted by Miss Jones. The chaperons are Dr. and Mrs. Lyons, Mrs. Lee, Mrs. Rose, Miss Kate Graham, and Mrs. Sprague.

The music for the affair is to be furnished by Jelly Leftwich, and the dance is to be strictly formal, and restricted to sophomores.

On Saturday evening, the Phi assembly is having its annual dance in the Phi hall. Jack Wardlaw's orchestra will furnish the music for the occasion which is to be informal.

Only members of the Phi assembly and specially invited guests will be admitted to the affair. Bids for the dance may be obtained in the lobby of the Y. M. C. A. during chapel period today.

There will be a Grail dance Saturday in honor of the new initiates for which Jelly Leftwich has been engaged to furnish the music.

This evening and tomorrow evening the Phi Alpha fraternity will be sponsors to a series of entertainments. Tonight there will be a dance at their fraternity house, while tomorrow evening there will be a dinner dance at the Carolina Inn.

PHI ALPHA'S GIVE HOUSE PARTY THIS WEEK-END

Adding to the already crowded social calendar for the week-end, the members of the Phi Alpha fraternity will sponsor a series of entertainments in connection with the house party they are giving. Approximately sixty girls will be present.

Tonight there will be a dance at the fraternity house, while tomorrow night there will be a dinner dance at the Carolina Inn.

Saturday afternoon the Southern Conference regional meeting of the fraternity will meet and representatives from all over the south are expected to attend.

Pi Phi Plans Bridge

The Pi Beta Phi sorority will entertain at two bridge parties in the Carolina Inn, May 5, for the benefit of the Pi Phi settlement schools. The affair will be from 3:00 to 6:00 in the afternoon and from 7:30 to 10:30 in the evening.

Infirmary List

Those confined to the infirmary yesterday were: Norman E. Wells, Stanley B. Abelson, Philip A. Klieger, Lauchlin W. McKinnon, Herman Vinson, Dan M. Lacy, Charles F. Crum, Carlton E. Wilder, and Joseph V. Randolph.

Resignation Of Dean Of Law School Is Rumored

C. T. McCormick May Become Member of Northwestern University Law Faculty.

RUMOR IS NOT DENIED

Thirteen Other Important Instructors Lost By University Since Last Spring.

For the last few days rumors have been prevalent on the campus concerning the resignation of Dean C. T. McCormick of the University law school to take up similar duties at Northwestern University.

When questioned as to the truth of the rumor Dean McCormick declined either to deny or verify it. President Graham had no statement to make in regard to the rumor.

Should Dean McCormick leave, he would be the fourteenth important man lost by the University since last spring. Of these fourteen Dean G. M. Braune, Dean Vernon Howell, Major William Cain, and L. J. Bell, Jr. have died. The other men lost are: Harry W. Chase, president of the University who went to the University of Illinois; Addison Hibbard, former dean of the liberals arts school who went to Northwestern University; Professor F. C. Vilbrandt of the chemistry department who went to Iowa University; Norman Foerster of the English department who is now at the University of Iowa; Howard Mumford Jones, former head of the University English department who is now teaching at the University of Michigan; W. C. Salley of the Spanish department; Russell Potter of the English department; T. J. Wilson III of the

Galli-Curci To Sing Here Next January

Amelita Galli-Curci, whose name has become a household word among the musical artists of the generation, will sing in Memorial hall January 2, 1932. By an unanimous vote at the bi-monthly meeting, Wednesday, of Alpha Rho chapter of Phi Mu Alpha, national honorary musical fraternity, it was decided to bring to the University during the next school year this famous soprano singer.

Only once before has this artist appeared in the state of North Carolina, when she was in Charlotte six years ago. The members of Phi Mu Alpha feel that they will render a distinct service to the musical life of the state by this concert and will begin plans for the occasion as soon as school reopens in September.

MOORE OUTLINES INSTITUTE'S WORK IN RADIO SPEECH

Student Chairman Gives Program of Human Relations Body Over WPTF.

Beverly Moore, student chairman of the Human Relations Institute, made the third radio speech sponsored by the new student council Wednesday afternoon over station WPTF when he outlined the program of the Human Relations Institute.

Beginning his message, Moore told of what the institute is and its purpose. He stated that the fact that it is a student affair does not exclude interest and active participation of the citizens of the state. "The Human Relations Institute is one of the most distinctive features of student life in the University; as far as we are able to ascertain, it is the only institute of its kind in this country which is chiefly a student enterprise," the student chairman said.

A history of the institute was given in brief form in which the speaker told of the work of the first institute which took place in the spring of 1927. Moore explained that the financing of the institute is a difficult task but due to the benevolent aid of the Phelps-Stokes fund the first speakers of the program were made possible which are the Weil lecture series. The present senior class contributed financially to the institute by the gift of $500 from its gift fund.

Concluding his address, Moore said that the second quadrennial institute would be conducted on the same general range of subject matter such as international relations, industrial relations, and inter-racial relations. He mentioned some of the eminent speakers who are to participate in the program, and also told of the exhibit which is to be staged in Memorial hall.

Foreign Talkie Postponed

Owing to a missing of connections the Spanish picture, "Un Leon de Sociedad," scheduled to appear at the Carolina Wednesday night as the week's foreign language feature, was delayed and will be postponed until Wednesday of the following week at the same time.

SEMINAR STUDIES 'DUPLIN'S CYCLIDE'

A. E. Cameron Presents Paper At Regular Wednesday Mathematics Meeting.

A. E. Cameron, of the mathematics department, read a paper on "Dupin's Cyclide" at the regular seminar of the mathematics faculty in Phillips hall Tuesday afternoon.

The cyclyde is a mathematical surface first studied by Pierre Duplin in 1822. The characteristic property of the surface is that all lines of the curvature are circles, and it may be defined as the envelope of a sphere tangent to three fixed spheres. The locus of the center of the moving sphere which generates the surface is a conic. An interesting property is that the planes of all the characteristics pass through a line.

The limiting case of Dupin's Cyclyde is the ordinary anchor ring, for any cyclyde may be transformed into an anchor ring by inversion. Two models of this surface are owned by the mathematics department.

Cameron will read his report again on May 9th before the North Carolina Academy of Science which will convene at State College, Raleigh. This will be the annual meeting of the academy at which professors of natural sciences throughout the state gather and present papers.

Cameron obtained most of his material from French journals. Information first regarding the surface was published in 1822 in Dupin's Application of Geometry and Mechanics.

A Capitalist's Government

In re-offering the truism—"It costs too much for poor men to run for the national congress," we intend to lament the necessity of educated and capable men being forced to pledge themselves to party platforms which they cannot in all intellectual honesty subscribe to, or of being bought and paid for by lobbyists of corporate interests before they ever reach Washington.

Senator Nye has so vigorously prosecuted and investigated large campaign expenditures that he may loose his right to sit in the senate when he comes before the people for re-election because senators so investigated as well as their backers have determined that nothing shall stand in the way of their legislative steam roller.

Even the press and the universities of the country have been gagged by funds well placed for the purpose of "good will". There is no one to cry out against the exploitation of the natural resources, or the people of the nation. Without much unfairness it can be said that our government is a "government of the people, for industry, and for the capitalist."

There is nothing much wrong with capitalism as such; there is much wrong with abuses which have been and are choking the life out of democracy. The trouble is not so much in the form of our government as the fact that it is far from representative. Only three percent of the people are capitalists, and a government which represents but three percent is unrepresentative. The power of the ballot means nothing when the candidates of the only two parties which have a chance to win under the archaic electorial college system have been hand picked by big business because of the influence of campaign contributions which they have submitted. Nor does it mean anything when, regardless of what campaign promises may have been wrung out of them by irate audiences or a now and then decent newspaper which does not sell out its editorial columns to the advertisers, when their vote must always be regular and with their party.

Huge corporations, operating on the false economic principle that the people must be kept down or that they will want a greater distribution of the profits accruing from the management of their concers, do not desire that college men shall become interested in socialism, communism, or co-operative government for a whole people. Hence great propaganda by which even intelligent men become unbalanced and electrically alert to protect their homes and ideals against an insidious enemy which would destory themselves and cultures.

We do not subscribe to either socialism or communism, but can not see how anyone with a closed poisoned mind against them can possible understand them.

Form is not everything, however. People and their humanity or lack of it are what determines how we shall be governed. Our government is unrepresentative. This much is true. We therefore should make it possible for a more representative government to come into being.

We propose the abolition of the House of Representatives of the United States to be replaced by a House of Guilds, the membership so carefully drawn from the trades and professions that the meanest laborer should be closely represented as well as the wealthiest financier. By leaving the senate as it is, as a gesture to tradition which must always be placated, and by imprisoning for long terms any person convicted of lobbying, by abolishing the electoral college, and the lame duck session, and by causing the congress so constituted to go to the nation for justification of its acts as the parliament of England is forced to do, we may expect a better and more representative government, and a time when it will not cost too much for a poor man to run for office or to be forced to sell his vote to his underwriters.

May Day Speculations

Today is the day when the police of the larger world centers are prepared for extra-heavy duty; when the army reserves of unstable European and Asiatic states wander about the country peering in likely-looking places for disturbers of the peace. Today is May Day, when the Internationale will be sung with added gusto by millions of voices in many tongues. Today, those whose religion, whose philosophy, whose lives are steeped in the dogma of Lenin and sovietism celebrate in honor of their new gods, and vow to another year of concentrated effort to make the world safe for Communism.

For those whose celebration of May day lies in circumnavigating may-poles, and in watching the processions of flower-bedecked school children, the word Communist or Bolshevist can hold nothing but terror and horror for them. And perhaps their judgments of the Russian social and economic experiment are correct, and warranted. Perhaps their unshakable convictions that states based upon a complete reversal of the known order of political and social evolution must capitulate to the existing order, or fall are true. Perhaps it will be unequivocally shown that democracy carried to its logical conclusions, as it is in Russia, can lead only to political and attending social chaos.

But even if Russia, and all it stands for, will fail, and even if our predictions as to its inevitable failure, and our hopes for its failure will be fulfilled, let us at least be fair in our denunciations, and intelligent in our reasons. To use "soviet," "bolshevik", and "communist" as epithets, as did Mayor Walker of New York, not to cite closer examples, is certainly to give credence to the frequently made statement that only emotional, sentimental, and hide-bound, unreasoning "100 per-centers" are opposed to the U. S. S. R.

There are many thorough sound reasons for the demise of a soviet state, and yet not one of them is that the natives of that land are "damned boshleviks" or "dirty communists". The existing conditions in Russia, and the conditions that the Communist party controling that country hope to bring about in other land, are results. They are not reasons, nor causes. Before denouncing sovietism, let's find out more about it.—F. M.

Honor Where Honor Is Due

With the closing of the year's work comes a time when the campus honorary fraternity bestows its membership on a selected few. Because of the distinction only those are chosen who have been most outstanding in their work. They have been the class-room leaders, the athletic leaders, the social leaders, and the activity leaders. They have achieved success in their separate fields of college life, and because of this fact are to be awarded for their accomplishment.

Because of the distinguished honor which membership in the order carries, there is a temptation among the old members of the fraternity to "frame-up" so that a social fraternity brother might also receive the honor. The fraternity brother might not be as good material as some other prospect, but because he is a member of the same social fraternity there is a desire that he is taken in.

Despite the existence of this yearning to bring more honor to the fraternity house, there are many who do not yield to this temptation. The few, however, who are governed by this temptation are the ones who bring disgrace to the other members of the honorary order.

If a man does happen to be taken in by "inside pull" the members of the order are degrading their own high standing. They cause a rumor to go around, which, if allowed to continue, will be the destruction of the honor of membership. Not only does it dull the glamour for this year's members, but the incident will be remembered for several years thereafter. If the same corrupt practice of allowing friendship to have a voice in determining who will be taken into the order continues, it is not long before the one-time honorary fraternity will become merely a social group where friendliness with the members is the only requirement for membership.

Once the spark of just criticism is allowed to glow it will be fanned to a blaze by the wagging tongues of public opinion which will leave the former honor of membership in a smouldering mass of ruin—C. G. R.

Speaking The Campus Mind

Big Money's Progress

Theodore Roosevelt is reported to have once said: "Democracy, in its essence, means that a few people shall not be allowed for their own selfish gratification, to destroy what ought to belong to the people as a whole." How pleasant and just it would be if governments, national and local, would adhere to that principle! In this particular instance I am thinking in terms of conservation of wild life.

At the present moment a commercial airport company in New York state is manipulating in politics to get permission to drain off an extensive marshy area near the Hudson river, and to establish a landing field there. So far their efforts have been attended by success, and no doubt they will ultimately triumph.

Does not that bit of marsh righteously belong to the people as a whole? Let us attempt to prove it so by an exposition of facts: The territory in question (it has been in possession of the park commission) lies on a direct line with the North-South bird migration. Many thousands of water and shore birds bi-annually stop in for a while, rest and feed, pass on, or establish themselve there. At various times of the year one may find in it the big American bittern, the least bittern, the Virginia rail, the great blue heron, and the black-crowned night heron. Many other wild fowl, water and shore birds, not to mention other types, find it a welcome place in which to rest and refuel before continuing on their journies. The bald eagle is found there in numbers during the winter, and the marsh hawk is a regular summer visitor.

From season to season the marsh is a veritable pageant of colors—the brown of winter, the green of spring and summer, the swirling mass of autumn shades in the fall. It literally throbs with life and beauty.

During the past sixty years bird-lovers, naturalists, and nature-lovers in general have reveled in this swamp, have viewed with growing interest its parade of beauty and of wild life, and have cherished it as a means of of release from the hum-drum of everyday life. And yet, a private concern seeks to gain control over this mecca in order to save a few paltry dollars by building in a cheap location. In other words, it proposes for the sake of pecuniary advantage to mutilate the marsh beyond repair; to take away a source of enjoyment and solace from the multitudes who are accustomed to use it as such; to turn the refuge and home of myriads of living wild things into a barren, flat field.

The nature-lovers are fighting, but money has strength, and politics is not wholly free from corruption. Commercialists will chalk up their victory as an achievement towards progress. But is it progress? Is it democracy?

A Vote For Mrs. McCorkle

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

At all times of the year, but especially now when student recitals, band and orchestra concerts are the order of the day, is attention called to the work of Mrs. T. S. McCorkle, and it seems to me fitting that a word of appreciation for her generous and efficient service to the University and community should be publicly spoken. To a casual observer, it may seem a small thing to play an accompaniment for a soloist, but when one multiplies the soloists many times, and remembers that for each accompaniment there must be music learned and always rehearsed, it becomes apparent that much time and effort have been expended.

I have been taking considerable razzing during the past few days because of my prominence on the list which was published in front of Pritchard-Lloyd's. I shall in no way attempt to defend myself or seek revenge for I am rather proud of being a member of the Boo-Loo Club since it has such a charming secretary as Virginia Turner.

Billy Lindsay certainly put one over on the campus last week. The picture he ran as his date for the Junior-Senior dances was that of some movie actress and the name was fictitious. Billy was one of the most popular boys on the campus for a while. Everyone was asking for dates with the beautiful blonde. One sucker even gave him bids to the dances for a late date.

I had really planned to let up on a certain group on the campus, but there are some things which a columnist just can't over-look. They brought this on themselves. It may be sung, if you care to sing, to the tune of "Bohumkus."

Just to make the honor roll,
So they thought it would be clever as could be
If they had their profs around
And when they arrived they found
That the members all wore pansies to the tea.

Ten Million Dollars

In the dear dead days, football was an affair of turtle-neck sweaters, pennant canes, nose-guards, your best girl, and a scattering of the local alumni. Today it has developed into an organized but none the less colorful melee of ambulances, concrete stadia, and nation-wide hook-ups. It has been figured out that last year 450 college teams played 1400 games before some three million spectators.

And we have no objection to raise about this change.

But the very fact that three million people turned out to see teams of men mash into each other and run and kick means that money was spent somewhere. The gate receipts were somewhere in excess of ten million dollars. However, this ten million commanded a certain very definite amount of respect and so the public has gotten a hold on the game. Having placed money at the disposal of teams, the public has raised the game to such a level where the teams must have the money to function, and now the public holds the whip.

This is to be deplored. In fact, it is deplored on every hand. Most conspicuous among these is Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler who advocates financial support of the game to come from contributions of the alumni, obviating the necessity for gate receipts.

All of this pother about money comes under the general head of commercialization. Thus far we have been able to combat the spectre with fair success. And what we have not been able to combat, we have blandly blinked.

But when it comes to a cas

Tar Heel Tennis Team Heads North In Quest For Collegiate Crown

Bryan Grant and Wilmer Hines Will Lead North Carolinians Against Strongest Teams of East.

GRANT MEETS MANGIN

Mangin, Ranking No. 6 in Country, Meets Tar Heel Ace at Georgetown Saturday.

The University of North Carolina tennis team fares forth tonight on the longest and hardest trip ever attempted by a Carolina team in an attempt to bring to Carolina its first national tennis championship.

Bryan Grant, southern champion and national claycourt champion, and Wilmer Hines, national junior champion, who rank Number 10 and 33 in the country, respectively, led the charge, but Grant and Hines by no means constitute all the strength of the Tar Heels.

The most powerful tennis team Carolina has ever had, likely the most powerful tennis team a Southern Conference team has ever sent forth, is built around this pair of sophomores, and the Tar Heels are off now to shoot for national honors, to play the hardest schedule that could be found for them.

The Tar Heels to date have taken every one of six dual matches in the state and south by shut-out scores, while making a private party of the state college tourney, but this Northern trip will tax to the utmost even a team like Carolina's.

Opening at Georgetown Saturday, where Grant will get a shot at Gregory Mangin, rated sixth in the country, the Tar Heels will play at Princeton Monday, New York university Tuesday, West Point Wednesday, Yale Thursday, Brown Friday, and Harvard Saturday.

Straham and Thomas, Princeton's former national junior doubles champs; Swaybill and Harte, N. Y. U.'s eastern intercollegiate champs; Ryan, Yale's intercollegiate indoor champ; and Murphy and Wood, Harvard's stars, rated 16th and 25th in the nation, are only a few of the big guns they will meet.

All of which means that North Carolina will either conquer and win a strong claim to national honors, or will go down fighting the most worthy schedule they could find.

Besides Grant and Hines, the Tar Heels' singles entries will be Ed Yeomans, 1929 state champ, who pushed such Davis Cup stars as Shields and Wright so hard in recent tourneys at Pinehurst and White Sulphur Springs; Hinkey Hendlin, the 1930 state champ, well known around New York for having won the Clemens Medal in the 1928 fencing tourneys; Captain Sonny Graham; Lenoir Wright, a star soph; and either Phil Liskin, a junior, or Lucas Abels, another soph.

The Tar Heels' three doubles teams will probably be Grant and Hines, Yeomans and Wright, and Hendlin and Graham. Hendlin and Liskin are the only left-handers, and both are from New York City. Grant is from Atlanta, Georgia; Hines from Columbia, South Carolina; Yeomans from Washington, D. C.; Captain Graham from Chapel Hill; Wright from Charlotte; and Abels from High Point.

John Kenfield, former pro at Lake Shore Country Club in Chicago, who came on about the same time as Tilden, and who was one of the country's leading players in his day, is the Tar Heel coach.

The earth, judging from seismographic records, must be very uneasy about something.—St. Louis Star.

Sidelights

By Phil Alston

The Tar Heels will defend their state track title in Greensboro tomorrow afternoon and night against the strongest array of cinder stars to oppose them in recent years. Duke and Davidson will each present a team that might easily upset the dope and walk off with the meet if given a chance. Tradition says that the Tar Heels should win, but Coach Fetzer's boys know that tradition will not win first place in any event when someone else is ahead of you, and they are going to Greensboro to win in their own right. Should the Tar Heels emerge victors as they have in the past they will be deserving of a great deal of credit, for they have had anything but an easy path this year and will enter the state meet in a somewhat crippled condition.

One unusual thing about Saturday's meet will be the fact that it will be the first time any North Carolina team has performed at night. The preliminaries are to be run off in the afternoon with all final events coming off under the giant arc lights of Memorial Stadium Saturday night.

Night baseball made quite a hit around this section of the country last summer, but N. C. State tried the idea during its football season and didn't find it very successful. It will be interesting to note the effects of night track meets on the spectators. At any rate, this system will save the trouble of having to run the meet two days as has been done in the past.

Another new wrinkle attached to the state meet is the plan of having all the athletes parade before the stands carrying national, state, and school colors. This formality has long been the custom at the Olympic games, but it is rather a novel one for college meets. It should be an inspiring sight and should add still more glamour to the event.

The spectators didn't seem to like it when "Shoeless' Benny Ahakuelt, a lightweight and native of the Hawaiian islands, appeared in the national amateur boxing tournament clad in regulation boxing shoes. Benny is the boy who is supposed to have dropkicked forty yard field goals with his bare toes, and the fans were rather disappointed that Benny wore shoes. Just another case wherein old "Kid Ballyhoo" took one on the chin.

In this same tournament, Bobby Goldstein, Virginia's much discussed featherweight, scored a knockout over Morris Moyer of Cincinnati in the first round.

The record that Munn broke had been made in 1904 by Ralph Rose of Michigan and had successfully withstood all challenges for a period of twenty-seven years. Twenty-seven years a quite a long time for a record to exist in these days and anyone breaking a record of that long standing has really accomplished something.

Star High Jumper On Injured List

George Bagby, who tied with Bostick of South Carolina for the Southern Conference indoor high jump record at 5 feet 11½ inches and who holds the University high jump record at 6 feet ¼ inch, will not participate in the annual state track meet at Greensboro Saturday due to an ankle injury sustained in practice recently.

Carolina Trackmen To "Carry On" In State Meet Despite Injuries

Squad of Thirty-Three to Seek Twelfth Straight Title in Greensboro Tomorrow.

The Carolina track team walked off with last year's state meet with 76.6 points compared with 26 points for the next nearest team, but it doesn't look as if there'll be any such exhibitions Saturday afternoon and night at Greensboro this year.

On the contrary, dual meets have shown there aren't but 12 points difference in Carolina, Duke, and Davidson. State and Wake Forest also offer lesser quotas of stars, and it looks as there'll be the best matched field and the toughest competition in history.

Three men, Slusser of Carolina, Brownlee of Duke, and Fleagle of Davidson, have all done 10 seconds on the 100 this year, so it looks as if that event will be about a toss-up, with Slusser the favorite if at all in that he bested Brownleee in dual meet competition this year.

Brownlee will be a heavy favorite to take the 220, because the Dukemen took that event in the Carolina meet this year in 21.6 seconds, which is almost as fast as Old Charlie Farmer, who'll be on the Carolina bench Saturday, can run. Mack Stout, State's grid captain, Drane of Carolina, Fleagle of Davidson, and Smith of Carolina are others who should be well in the running.

Lionel Weil, Carolina's quarter-miler, has beaten the 440 men of Duke and State this year, but since then Floyd of State has improved, and Weil is expected to have to run his best if he beats the field of Floyd, Hicks of Duke, McGehee of Davidson, and Marland of Carolina.

Captain George McGinn, State's Southern champ, will be the heavy favorite in the half-mile. The most competition is expected from Watkins of Carolina, whose fine races have let Carolina nose out the enemy in two dual meets this year, and from Neil of Davidson and Garrett of Carolina.

Bill Simon, Duke's ace, has been rocking along and winning every mile and two-mile in sight, but it seems almost impossible that even so fine a star as Simon can win both these gruelling events in the State meet.

In the mile he should get his toughest run from Jones or Baucom of Carolina, both of whom have run under 4.35; Brannon or Earle, two Davidson men in the same class; and Ricks, a real prospect from State. Either Brannon or

HIGH JUMP STAR DEFINITELY OUT AS MEET OPENS

Sprained Ankle to Keep Holder Of University High Jump Record Out of State Meet.

With the state track championships in Greensboro just two days off, chances for George Bagby's being among the Tar Heel competitors tonight looked slimmer than ever.

Bagby's sprained ankle has responded to treatment slowly and is still so weak that it is certain that the Charlotte boy, who holds the University record on the high jump at 6 feet 1-4 inch, will either not compete or wll be so handicapped that he can hardly be expected to leap higher than 5 feet 6 at best.

Final check last night revealed that Charlie Farmer, southern champion sprinter, was definitely out due to the pulled leg muscle that laid him low in the southern indoor meet. Mark Jones is back in shape in the mile, however, and the Tar Heel squad is set to put up its best scrap against the odds.

Rip Slusser, who has won three of six hundred-yard dashes in 10 second time, and who has won all but one low hurdle race, while coming within two-tenths seconds of the southern record, will be Carolina's best bet in those two events.

J. K. Smith, a senior, should second him in both the dashes, while Bob Drane is rated a favorite to place slightly better than Smith in the 220. Lionel Weil, who holds the southern indoor record, and a sophomore, Ken Marland, are best in the 440.

The sophomore Watkins, whose first places in the half-mile let Carolina nose out Duke and Washington and Lee, will be Carolina's leading hope there. Garrett will second him. Jones and Baucom, leaders in the mile

FROSH EDGE WIN OVER TECHLETS

Tar Babies Get 13-12 Victory Over State Frosh; Score 11 Runs in Second Frame.

The Tar Babies continued their winning streak with a 13-12 victory over the State College nine Wednesday afternoon in Raleigh.

Carolina pushed eleven runs across in the second frame on four walks, five singles, a double, two triples, and an error. This was the only miscue on the part of Wolflets. Weathers started the rall with a single that scored McIver and Fisher who had walked. Adair, Yerton, and Harry Phipps singled in order to account for three more. DeRose and Matheson got free tickets to first, and John Phipps was safe on an error that let another run across. With the sacks loaded, McIver doubled to deep left driving in three more. Fisher tripled, scoring McIver, and came in on Weathers' single, his second hit of the inning. Weathers was out stealing second. Adair followed with his second hit of the inning, a slashing triple to center, but was caught at home when he tried to stretch it into a homer.

In the fifth, Weathers singled and Yerton, the pitcher, slammed one for the circuit to complete the scoring for Carolina and supply the deciding run that gave him a victory.

The Wolflets staged a comeback in their half of the second, scoring five runs on a double, two singles, a walk, and a home run. They tallied once in the third and twice in the seventh, and then in the last half of the ninth started a rally that almost gave them a victory. Two singles, an error, and a homer by Blair was good for four runs

Hawaiian College Newspaper Gives Versions Of Folk Tale

The legend of Maui and the Sun is known to all Polynesians —Maoris, Society Islanders, Samoans, Hawaiians. According to the Maori tale, there are six Mauis, whereas, the Hawaiians account for four.

Both myths are parallel, that of the Maori relating to Maui's going to the underworld to visit his relatives and Muri, and old woman, obtaining a magic jawbone with which weapon he could beat the sun; whereas, the Hawaiians counterpart climbed Haleakala where he met his old grandmother, who had helped him to capture the sun and thereby, causing him to move more slowly across the heavens during a certain season of the year.

According to the Hawaiian accounts, Maui was the youngest son of Hina. He was full of adventure and revelled in doing great deeds for the better mind and enlightenment of his people. One day, he noticed that his mother was dissatisfied. Upon inquiry, he was told that the sun had come and gone so rapidly that there was no time in which to dry the kapa and cook the food. Maui decided to attend to the matter. He climbed the Iao ridge, and gazed toward Haleakala. There he saw the sun coming out. He immediately went home, and told his mother about his plans to capture the sun. Hina at first doubted him, but he persisted. Finally, his mother gave him several strands of sennie (made out of the cocoanut husk) and told him to pay a visit to his grandmother who dwelt on the top of Mount Haleakala, and who every day, fed the sun with some cooked bananas. Hina warned him to await three crowings of the cock, and then steal the bananas prepared by his grandmother. This he did, and when the old woman found out that there was someone around, she asked, "who is it?" Maui answered, "Hina's son." He then told her of his plans. She promised to aid him, and gave him an ax and another rope.

Maui concealed himself and awaited the rising of the sun. He caught the legs of the great illuminator and fastened them to the wiliwili tree which grew nearby. Then Maui took his ax, and began hacking at the sun's long legs. The sun begged for mercy but Maui continued with his business until finally the sun promised to move more slowly during a certain season in the year. This season became known as Kau-wela, Summer, and Hina now had time enough during the day to prepare her food and dry her kapa. During the winter season, the sun was allowed to go more rapidly.

of the president of an alumni association slipping up to the mayor of a city and demanding that the mayor forbid any competition in the gate receipt industry, and when the mayor, for one reason or another, accedes to this request, we object just as strenuously and just as obnoxiously as we possibly can.

Yesterday we ventured a few comments about Mayor Curley's action. Today the action shifts to another front. Edward A. McLaughlin, Jr.,the president of the Boston College Alumni Association, has assumed full responsibility for suggestions that influenced the mayor's decision. In view of this assumption, we pour forth on him the mass of boiling indignation that this whole mess has stirred up.

The dabbling of alumni in undergraduate concerns is bad enough. But coupled with that is this brazen admission that the motives are purely commercial, that is, that they are in the interests of the institution's bank accounts.

Neither Dartmouth nor Stanford are situated in Massachusetts. Holy Cross and Boston College both are. Therefore, patronize the neighborhood football games, give them the monopoly, regardless of the fact that an inter-sectional game would mean no skin off the favored colleges' noses, regardless of the fact that an inter-sectional game would be one of the biggest amateur sporting events of the year, regardless of the fact that very few Dartmouth undergraduates would be able to see the game if it is refused by Boston.

This is dirty commercialization in its most despicable form. And we trace the muddy footprints back and lay the mewling bastard of American intercollegiate sport at the door of the wild-eyed football public in general and of the Boston College Alumni Association in partcular.—Daily Dartmouth.

friend against the critics of the day, particularly in regard to President Wilson's part in the Versailles treaty.

The friendship between Dr. Alderman and Woodrow Wilson began when their families were neighbors in Wilmington and developed into the close intimacy that marked their relations while Wilson was president of Princeton University. After the death of the ex-president, Dr. Alderman continued at every opportunity to speak with unstinted praise of his friend.

The late president of the University of Virginia believed that the university owed a service to the state in every line of endeavor. He expressed this view in his address upon assuming the presidency of that institution when he said: "If there be a question touching life on the farm or in the factory, in institutional development, in the public schools, in manufacturing or municipal problems, some intelligent answer should issue from the university."

In recognition of his educational work a number of universities conferred honorary degrees upon Dr. Alderman, and he was further honored by membership in many nationally prominent organizations including the General Education Board, the Woodrow Wilson Memorial foundation, Academy of Social Science, Phi Beta Kappa, American Academy of Arts and Letters, and the board of governors of the Thomas Jefferson Memorial foundation. He also was a trustee of the Institute of Economics, an elector of the Hall of Fame, and a member of the local chapter of the Phi Kappa Sigma fraternity.

Earle of Davidson and Hubbard and Baucom of Carolina, Baucom being the boy who gave Simon such a run in last year's State meet, are slated to give the Dukeman the race of his life in the two-mile.

George of Davidson, who has been running as fast as 15.5 seconds should be the real class of the 120-yard high hurdle race, but the other places should be hotly contested between Waugh and Davis of Carolina, McCallie of Davidson, and Paris of State.

The low hurdles will feature another dual between two aces, Slusser of Carolina and Brownless of Duke. Brownlee won every race in fast time until he met Slusser, then Slusser, who has come within two-tenths seconds of the Southern record, trimmed him. They should have it out again Saturday, with other good competition coming from George of Davidson and Fulmer of Duke.

Arnold and Ruble, a pair of 13-foot vaulters, gave Carolina a big edge for two first places in the pole vault, but Ripley and Turner of Duke and Flynn of Davidson look to be closely matched for the other places.

In the high jump Bagby, Carolina's record-holder at 6 feet 1 inch, will compete but despite a bad ankle, and Smith of Davidson and Brewer of Duke will both be favored over Bagby and Stafford of Carolina. Carolina power is at low ebb in the broad jump, but Duke and Davidson will offer a pair of boys both of whom have beaten 23 feet, Fulmer and McCall, and Brewer of Duke, and Flynn of Davidson will help to make both boys exert themselves to the limit.

Dupree, Wake Forest, won the javelin last year and is odds-on favorite this year, with McCall of Davidson, Brewer of Duke, and Brown of Carolina slated to fight it out for seconds and thirds. Gurneau of State, who is favored in the shot, is ranked below Dameron, Carolina, in the discus, but Gurneau has broken the Southern record and may steady down and break loose in both events.

Brewer of Duke, Boyle of Davidson, and Wagner of Davidson are other boys scheduled to stand at the top in the shot, and the discus Thompson and Brown of Carolina are slated to aid and abet in the duel between Dameron and Gurneau.

Carolina is probably strongest on paper for the relay, with Coach Bob Fetzer being able to pick his quartet from such a numerous body as Drane, Smith, Marland, Weil, Brock, Case, Garrett, and Watkins, but State, Davidson, and Duke are just about on an even keel.

All in all, the dope seems to be that the meet will be anybody's meet, that inspired performances are going to crown the new champ, and that it's going to be a mighty, mighty interesting meet of continuedly fine performances.

A big squad of 33 varsity trackmen will carry Tar Heel colors as the University of North Carolina strives against the odds of injuries at the State Meet in Greensboro Saturday afternoon and night to win its 12th straight State title.

The Tar Heel entries were announced today, as follows: Arnold, Bagby, Baucom, Brock, Brown, Case, Chandler, Cordle, Dameron, Davis, Donnell, Drane, Gabriel, Garrett, Geiger, Hamlet, Hodges, Howard, Hubbard, Jones, Marland, Newland, Owens, Pratt, Ruble, Slusser, Smith, Stafford, Strauss, Thompson, Watkins, Waugh, and Weil.

The Tar Heels will also take a squad of 13 men from off their all-star, undefeated Freshman team, to run in the Freshman sprint half-mile and distance relays. These men will be Bonner, Farr, Goodwin, Groover, Higby, Kimrey, McGlinn, McRae, Mead, Nicholson, Sullivan, Vitz, and Weisker.

and two-mile respectively, will be entered in those events, along with Hubbard in the two-mile, according to the way Simon of Duke, Ricks of State, and Brannon of Davidson compete.

Waugh and Davis will be Carolina's entries in the high hurdles, with Slusser in the lows. If Bagby is out, the Tar Heels will be weak in both jumps, except for Stafford and Hamlet, but they will be strong in the vault, where Arnold and Ruble are both 13-footers.

The Tar Heels' strength in the weights will be no more than average; Theron Brown is the only hope in the shot put, but Brown has been off form in this and in the discus, and Sandy Dameron will be Carolina's best discus bet. Chandler, Strauss, and Brown have been doing best on the javelin, but without any really good throws.

and left State trailing by only one run with none out. Powell was safe at first on an error, but Johnny Phipps caught a hot liner off the bat of Brown and got Powell at first to complete a double play. Paris flew out to Harry Phipps, and the game was over.

The yearlings collected seventeen hits off Nance and Cooper. Adair led with a triple and two singles while Weathers got three singles for five attempts. Yerton got a single and homer, Fisher a single and triple, McIver a single and double, and H. Phipps and DeRose each collected a pair of singles.

State touched Yerton for twelve safe blows. Roach led with a homer and three singles, while Blair had a circut blow and two singles for his efforts. Eight errors by the Tar Babies aided the Wolflets in their scoring.

The freshmen nine will play its first game with the Wake Forest Baby Deacons here this afternoon at four o'clock.

INTRAMURAL RESULTS

Phi Alpha Beats T. E. P.

Behind the steady pitching of Cohen and the timely hitting of Bessen, the Phi Alpha's shut out T. E. P. 1-0, in a fast five inning game yesterday at the intramural field.

Cohen held the losers hitless throughout the game and was never in danger of being scored upon.

The victors scored the only run in the fourth inning by bunching two hits. Lorberbaum doubled to center and Bessen drove in the run with a single to right field, clinching the game.

Fine was on the mound for the losers and allowed but three hits, striking out ten batters.

Lewis, Everett Tie

In a game limited to four innings, Lewis and Everett dorms played to a 2-2 standstill. Witken was on the mound for Everett while Mass, lefthander, worked for Lewis.

Lewis scored in the first inning when Crutchfield walked, stole second and scored on Bradley's single to right center.

Everett evened it up in her half of the initial inning when singles by Leibowitz and Baumstone drove in a run.

Fisher of Everett and Egerton of Lewis each got triples, both of which figured in the scoring.

Best House 6; Manly 2

Best House had little trouble in gaining a win over Manly, 6-2, yesterday at the intramural field. Scarboro was on the mound for the victors and hurled good ball, fanning nine of the Manly batters.

Fields, pitcher for the losing nine, hit a home run in the third inning. Beck, Best House, with a triple with the bases loaded, led the attack for the victors, being followed by Crouch with two singles.

BILLY MCKEE IS MADE PRESIDENT OF FOREIGN CLUB

Epsilon Phi Delta Will Help Sponsor Banquet With Thomas As Guest.

At the regular meeting of the Epsilon Phi Delta Cosmopolitan Club in the Y. M. C. A. Thursday night at 10:30, Billy McKee was elected president of the organization for the coming year. He succeeds Beverly Moore.

The meeting was called primarily to elect officers and to make plans for the spring initiation. Other officers who were chosen were Larry Spitzer, vice-president, Bob Barnett, secretary, and Ted Baroody, treasurer.

Banquet Planned

The club decided to join with the Amphoterothen club, and the International Relations Club in sponsoring a banquet to be given Monday night at six o'clock in the Carolina Inn, Norman Thomas, former Socialist candidate for the presidency, who will be attending the Human Relations Institute, is to be the main speaker for the evening.

The Duke cosmopolitan club extended an invitation to the Carolina chapter to attend a barbecue supper to take place next Friday evening. Several members of the local chapter will attend the supper.

The initiation for the spring quarter has been definitely set for Monday night week. Seven men are to be taken in at this time.

Dean Taylor Unable To Attend Institute

Dean C. C. Taylor, of the graduate school of State college, was injured in an auto wreck Thursday afternoon near Burlington. He is now in the Burlington hospital and has had to have several stitches taken in his head.

This accident will keep Dr. Taylor from taking part in the Human Relations Institute as had been planned. He was to speak in the Baptist church tomorrow morning. As yet no one has been named to substitute for him.

Dean Taylor is the second man who was invited to the Institute, and who will be unable to attend because of accidents. Fletcher Brockman was seriously injured in an auto wreck in New York City several weeks ago.

Gardens On View

Several town residents of the village who will open their gardens to the public during the next two weeks are: Mrs. Charles S. Mangum, May 2 from 9:00 to 12:00 and May 3 from 3:00 to 6:00; Mrs. Louis Graves, May 2 from 9:00 to 12:00 and May 3 from 10:00 to 1:00 and from 2:30 to 6:00; Mrs. H. R. Totten, Mrs. N. B. Adams, and Mrs. A. A. Kluttz every day for the next ten days. Two springs will be on exhibit: Mrs. E. C. Branson's down the slope off Hillsboro street, and Mrs. Karl Fussler's opposite the Peacock home on Tenney circle.

Infirmary List

Those confined to the infirmary yesterday were: Carlton E. Wilder, Joseph V. Randolph, Raymond Cohen, Ida Currie, Norman E. Wells, Herman Vinson, Lauchlin W. McKinnon, and Charles F. Crum.

Formal Program For Institute Ready Soon

The formal printed program for the Human Relations Institute is now on the press.

The eight-page pamphlet carries a cut of the new Memorial hall on the front cover and an analysis of the Institute subject matter. Inside there is a history and explanation of the Institute, and a complete hour by hour program of procedure. There is also a page devoted to exhibits, and a list of acknowledgments. The back cover outlines the organization, and the list of committees which have worked for the meetings.

LUXURY TAX BILL IS PASSED AFTER SECOND READING

Goes Through By 64 to 41 Vote Despite Stand of House Insurgents.

The House had a busy day Thursday when the luxury tax amendment bill was passed on second reading and the gas tax amendment cut in addition to enacting the Moss, Norman, and Etheridge bill levying a flat minimum for automobile licenses.

At the outset of the meeting the house began to fight over the luxury tax bill. Legislator Erwin proposed an amendment to refer the luxury tax to popular vote in 1932, but Connor jumped up to say that the issue before the house was a conference report and that an amendment to it would be a virtual rejection. Brooks of Durham opposed the idea of the bill being written by a small number of men. He was asked if he would vote for it if he were allowed to add an amendment. He agreed to do this.

House insurgents and holdouts still maintained their stand but the standpatters held to what they had and put the report through by a vote of sixty-four ayes and forty-one no's on its second reading. The Forsyth delegation, which cooperated to put the general sales tax through a few weeks ago stood solidly opposed to the luxury amendment.

A new revenue saver was also passed putting a flat tax on certain types of automobiles and fifty-five cents per hundred weight on all others. The senate was in favor of a sixty cents tax but there were too many automobile owners and dealers in the house to pass.

The question that promises to stir up the biggest fight is the gas tax exemption cut. The eastern fishermen, farmers, boat operators, saw mill owners, western miners, and the consumers of gasoline for purposes outside the roads have taken hundreds of thousands from the road bill which is to raise revenue for the whole state and county system. It was argued that most of these enterprises profit directly or indirectly by roads leading to their establishments. Two bills were presented to the roads committee. The first cutting all exemption was rejected; the other cutting fifty per cent was accepted.

Post Office Painted

The interior of the postoffice has just been painted, and after Postmaster Herndon has received bids for exterior painting, work will be begun on the outside.

DEBATERS MEET N.C.C.W. TONIGHT

Speight and F. Wardlaw Represent Carolina In Split Meet In Gerrard.

The local end of the dual debate between the North Carolina College for Women and the University will take place in Gerrard hall tonight at 8:30. The query to be discussed is Resolved: That the several states should enact legislation calling for unemployment insurance. The Tar Heel representatives are Bill Speight and Fred Wardlaw.

This is a split team meet with a member of each school on each side. A team composed of Clyde Shreve and Digby Wardlaw debated in Greensboro last night, Shreve supporting the affirmative and Wardlaw the negative.

The debate tonight will end the home season as only one meet remains on the schedule and that a radio debate with the University of Virginia on May 19, which will be broadcast from Richmond. The Carolina team will support the affirmative of the question Resolved: That talking movies in this country during the next ten years will promote the general welfare more than they will retard it. Men will tryout for this meet May 7.

FLEMING-JONES HEADS DEBATERS

Elected President of Debate Council at Thursday Night Meeting.

At a meeting of the debate council on Thursday night, McBride Fleming-Jones was elected president of the council and W. A. Olsen was chosen executive secretary.

Fleming-Jones has received two monograms for debating and has already served one year on the council. He will succeed W. W. Speight, a law student, under whose administration more debates have been held than in any single year before this time.

W. A. Olsen is an assistant professor of English and an instructor in public speaking. He follows Mr. George McKie, who had served in the position of executive secretary for several years. The council concluded with a rising vote of thanks to Mr. McKie for his splendid service.

At the debate squad meeting a few minutes later, L. M. Brooks, of the sociology department, gave a short speech on talking movies, in preparation for the radio debate with the University of Virginia on May 19 and will be the last debate of the season.

PURDUE'S CENTER IS STIMULUS TO DEMOCRACY IN EDUCATION

Building Backed By a Student Assessment of Four Dollars and Housing All Campus Activities Develops True University Spirit.

(The following is an article reprinted through the courtesy of the DAILY PRINCETONIAN and DAILY NEBRASKAN describing the purposes, financing, and success of university centers, or their equivalents, at various universities throughout the country.)

Purdue's student union building, financed largely through the efforts of students, is, in the words of a booklet on the building, "a home for the whole Purdue family."

Its financial backing was organized primarily on a plan which in 1910 resulted in the construction of a memorial gymnasium. Each of the university's graduating classes before that time was accustomed to giving $5 per year to the construction fund. The 1911 class planned a suitable gate for Purdue's athletic field but when the class of 1912 conceived the idea of a union building the original $5 assessment was diverted to the student union fund. The total continued to grow slowly until after the war when an intensive campaign among students, alumni and friends augmented the total to $883,000 and actual construction took place from June of 1921 until the dedication in 1924.

Although not entirely completed the building already houses all campus activities as a memorial to Purdue students who lost their lives in the World War. According to Purdue University officials, the memorial union develops a true University spirit, stimulates the proper social side of education, improves the standard of social activities among students and democratizes the undergraduates by giving them a chance to come together on a common ground at a meeting place. Likewise, the building affords a reception place for guests of the university and provides a gathering place for returning alumni.

Assembly hall, in the center of the first floor, accomodates 350 couples for dancing, 450 or more persons for banquets and any gathering of not more than 900 people. Two reception rooms which adjoin this main hall, one for men and one for women, are used for conferences and committee meetings by practically all student organizations. Separate smaller banquet rooms are provided for club dinners, which average more than two each week.

The general lounge, where men and women students may meet to talk or pass time is the most generally used room in the building. It is also used by couples at dances on Saturday evenings, while in general it provides a place where students and alumni may sit and read before a large cozy fire-place, magazines and newspapers being there free of charge. The union cafeteria, which takes care of 341 persons at a time, serves nearly 1,000 luncheons at rush hours, with student board priced at $4.50 a week.

All students are entitled to use the building, with registration cards the same as certified memberships. Also, all alumni and friends of the university who have pledged and paid up to date a life membership of $100, payable in five installments of $20 each are members. All other persons who have any connection with the university are entitled to use the union building upon payment of $4 per semester.

Special Institute Luncheon Saturday

Next Saturday afternoon there will be a special luncheon in the Carolina Inn for the section of the Human Relations Institute dealing with international relations. Professor James T. Shotwell of Columbia, and Professor Harold J. Laski, of London university are to be the honor guests. Josephus Daniels, editor of the Raleigh News and Observer, has been asked to be the toastmaster for the occasion.

Another special event next week is the banquet sponsored by Epsilon Phi Delta, Amphoterothen, and the International Relations Club Monday evening with Norman Thomas as guest.

ANNUAL BANQUET STAGED BY GRAIL FOR NEW INITIATES

The annual informal banquet of the Order of the Grail took place last night in the Carolina Inn at 6:15 o'clock. The affair was in honor of the members who were admitted to the society on Thursday night of this week.

John Slater, president of the Grail, acted as toastmaster during the affair, at which there were approximately forty people. Among the new members are President Frank Graham, who was unable to attend the banquet due to his being out of town on official business; Dean F. F. Bradshaw and Coach Bob Fetzer. Both Mr. Bradshaw and Mr. Fetzer spoke briefly. Remarks were also made by the new members and members of the senior class who were attending a Grail banquet for the last time.

Fraternity members initiated are: John Manning, Archie Davis, Henry Conner, Charles Rose, Ed French, Red Gilbreath, and Sam Breen.

The new non-fraternity members are: Percy Idol, Red Hamlet, Phil Alston, Graham Trott, Bobbie Mason, and Lee Greer.

There will also be an informal lance tonight from 9:00 to 12:00 in the gymnasium given by the Grail in honor of the new initiates. Jelly Leftwich and his orchestra will play for the occasion. This will be the second of the three dances to be sponsored this quarter by the Grail.

City Elections

The candidates for office in the city election to take place here, May 5, from 8:00 in the morning till sunset are: for mayor; Zeb Council; for four-year councilmen: R. D. W. Connor, P. L. Burch, Brodie Thompson, Eugene Andrews, J. T. ("Bull") Durham, and E. J. Woodhouse; for two-year councilmen, R. M. Trimble and H. A. Whitfield. C. P. Hinshaw for judge of the recorder's court is opposed by L. J. Phipps. Since no condidate has announced himself against Zeb Council, it is certain that he will be the next mayor of Chapel Hill.

STUDENTS ON PROBATION

Of the twenty-six students in the school of liberal arts on academic probation during the past quarter, not one was dropped at midterm this spring for failure to check his work. Seventeen of these students checked all their courses, and none of the rest received two "X's".

The liberal arts school requires that a student pass at least four courses in two quarters of residence and at least five for three quarters.

NATION MOURNS DEATH OF NOTED UNIVERSITY HEAD

Statesmen, Educators, and Persons in All Walks of Life Join In Expressing Grief.

At 11:00 o'clock this morning one of the leading educators of the South and of the nation will be laid to rest. Statesmen, educators, and men prominent in all walks of life will attend the funeral of Dr. Edwin A. Alderman, late president of the University of Virginia who died of apoplexy Wednesday evening.

Hundreds of telegrams and messages of condolence were received from persons scattered throughout the United States. Statesmen and business men joined with the educators and personal friends in expressing their grief at the death of the man under whom the University of Virginia has grown to more than five times the size it was when he became its head.

All activities of the university were suspended, including athletic contests scheduled for teams away on trips.

Eight students in the university will serve as active pall bearers. They are: Harry F. Flippin, Fenton Gentry, Jack S. McLihenny, Robert L. Rainey, John K. Sloan, C. Alfonso Smith, Jr., Williamson W. Fuller,2nd, and William T. Thomas.

Among the messages received yesterday was one from Chancellor Elmer Ellsworth Brown of New York University, who telegraphed that flags were flying at half mast over that institution as a token of respect to Dr. Alderman.

Others who were among the first to send their condolences were: Mrs. Woodrow Wilson, Dr. Harry W. Chase, whose induction into the presidency of the University of Illinois, Dr. Alderman was on his way to attend at the time of his death; President Nicholas Murray Butler, of Columbia University; John D. Rockefeller, Jr.; Michael MacWhite, minister of the Irish Free State to the United States; Bishop William T. Manning, of New York; United States Senators Copeland of New York; Fess of Ohio; and Swanson and Glass of Virginia; and Josephus Daniels, secretary of

The annual Sophomore Hop took place last night in Bynum gymnasium between 9 and 1 o'clock. Approximately 350 bids were given out for the dance for which Jelly Leftwich and his orchestra furnished the music.

The leaders of the dance were: Dave Henry and Elizabeth Nunn; Sparks Griffin and Lois Mecham; and Ben Campen and Miss Jones.

The dance was strictly formal, and the gymnasium was decorated suitably to fit the occasion. The music of Jelly Leftwich and his band was up to their usual good standard and class was in its prime as it glided over the smooth floor.

There were, of course, at the function, the usual number of "crashers" who somehow always succeed in getting into these supposedly strictly class functions. The usual crowd gathered around the gymnasium to listen to the music and some even climbed to the rear window sills to catch a glimpse of the dancers.

Valuable Contacts

The coming of the second quadrennial institute on Human Relations affords to the students on this campus an opportunity to see the actual mechanism of some of the best minds in this country. It will give the students a chance to make contacts which will be invaluable to them in later years. The mental contacts which will be formed during the Institute will aid the students no little in facing the problems with which they will be confronted in life. By seeing how the minds of these visiting speakers work, the collegians will be able to more easily make their own decisions.

Not only does the present day education consist in class-room work, but it also includes contacts with other persons who think differently from ourselves. These contacts help us to see how other people would look at life and what their reaction would be to this or that condition.

When we come in contact with one whose mode of thinking is far superior to ours, we immediately have a desire to bring our thoughts up to their plane. We want to be able to see things as they see them, and to think as they think. By so doing we will come to be more broad-minded. This does not necessarily demand that we give up our own beliefs but that we merely alter them according to the good points of the beliefs of our new associates.

Those persons attending and following the speeches during this coming week will not only be given "food for thought" to be digested later, but will also have a chance to think today. They will also be privileged to mentally associate with the speakers and learn their ideas and thoughts on the questions of the day.

This Institute comes only once in a college career and to miss it now would be to lose part of our education here at the University.—C. G. R.

Il Asan"ine"
Comedia

Without question a niche may be worthily occupied by Miss Hollywood for giving birth without seeming pain and abundantly to her share of the world's insipidities. Ample evidence of the conspicuous apparentness of her progeny in our national life is available even in this cultured little town of super-elites.

Take your seat, squirm to a maximum comfort in one of Mr. Smith's hard-backed seats, recline to allow your mind to fall under and become massaged by the subtle stimulation of our American cinematographic drama and—The bald-headed man pops out of the flour barrel with a lobster clamped to his vest, come again and the lobster is clamped to his trouser seat, again the lobster is crawling on his shiny pate. (Laughter.) The woman trips, hobbles, and peeks through keyholes posed in unnatural and miraculously distorted positions. The suave host falls into a fish pond. A vase tips, lingers off-balance for an instant and crashes onto the linoleum floor. The impact upon the floor is noisy and very funny. An insane man tears the steering wheel from the steering rod and his car sails precariously through town. The beautiful girl drinks tea made from a sack of Bull Durham. "Googoo-eyed" she staggers about. (This is all humor.) The news reel flashes on the screen and the evening's entertainment continues.

Hollywood appeals to the enlightened and critical interests and tastes of our American people. We sit back and swallow, some in amazement, some satisfied, some awfully hard and with a bitter grin. Then we come back for more.—R. W. B.

Shibboleths

"England expects every man to do his duty!"

That symbolic phrase which swept the world in the same manner as Pershing's alleged "Lafayette, we are here," has been a signal to Britains ever since that memorable day in 1805 when it was uttered on the poop deck of the stunch Victory. Melodramatic, yes, but so expressive of that indomitable spirit that pervails in the heart of every true red-blooded Englishman. It was remembered in front of Khartum, it rang true in British hearts at Sevastapol; the burly Sikh shuddered at its poignant message, doughty Tommies at Hill Seventy fell with its soul-stirring force in dying ears; it lives forever as an inspiration to scores of contemporary Nelsons, and in the hearts of a hero-loving people.

Great Britain has been founded and constructed of such rigid stuff as was Nelson. Others have gone before him, many unknown, into the substance for a great foundation which will never totter. Of such men must every nation build her dominance. With stirring phrases we sent thousands into a great struggle across the waters, fighting for such a cause as was that of the Hero of Trafalgar.

On such phrases has many a battle been waged and won. "Sail on, sail on" was the incentive to a hardy crew that found a new world in 1492, "Westward, ho" urged pioneers across a bleak and unsettled continent to settle a virtual Empire of the Golden West. "To hell with Burgundy" evoked a new France. No less stirring and sacred to the memory of the English people are the words of the immortal Nelson.

England expects every man to do his duty even unto this day as she will in ages to come. Those eight words will live after all else has crumpled in dust and departed. In the words of the Great Emancipator "The world will little note nor long remember what we say here, but it will never forget what they did here," a statement which in the first part did not hold true, so will the stirring words of the great admiral quicken the pulse of Englishmen for time immemorial.—D. S.

Speaking The Campus Mind

Editor the Daily Tar Heel:

Mr. Bernard must needs plead guilty of the boast recorded against him by your Tar Heel reporter. His only defense is to repeat that boast: That nowhere in America is there a group of college students who could "pull off" cleaner and happier dances than the Junior Prom and Senior Ball of the last week-end. However, it is not the challenge I have in mind in writing these words but the desire that credit for the big endeavor may be given to whom credit is due.

First to the two classes as wholes: their fine spirit and perfect cooperation made possible the remarkably efficient work of their two committees. It is no light task to do the work necessary for entertaining sixteen hundred dancers two nights in succession. No less light is the responsibility of conducting such large dances (the very largest ever held at the University) smoothly and without disorder. Yet I believe the committees will sustain me in saying that there was not an unpleasant incident during the two nights. This is remarkable even in a university justly and universally praised for the sober and orderly conduct of its dances.

I spoke of cooperation: the two class committees, aided by the entire Executive Committee of the German Club, worked together with the harmony and precision of our best basketball teams. I have never seen a finer spirit. To me that speaks of student self government in a well nigh perfect example. For, the faculty committee on dances exercises no autocratic control. Its members "sit-in" as permanent members of the Executive Committee of the German Club—just other boys, a bit older, big buddies, all working together to keep healthy and happy the chiefest social activity of the student body. May I express congratulations to all upon a big job well done?

WM. S. BERNARD.

With Contemporaries

A Red Flag

The Supreme Court decision giving counsel for Negroes the right to examine jurors for race prejudice is much-needed encouragement to a people for whom "American justice" has long been an empty phrase. In the Southern lynching areas the decision will have little influence, since the jury panels include few who have avoided the general bias. But in other parts of the country the Negro will be able to insist upon a right which some of the backward courts have denied him.

To remove from juries those openly hostile to the Negro is, however, slight assurance of justice. Behind the apparent fair-mindedness of the majority of people is a feeling that the Negro is by nature disposed to crimes of violence. The South would have us believe that, freed from fear, the colored people would embark upon an orgy of license. From lynchings has issued a propaganda more damaging to the reputation of the Negro than to that of his oppressors.

Even in communities where the colored population is small charges of assualt upon white women make people forget the rules of justice. Cases are known where this inflammatory disposition of the public has been used for the settlement of private grudges.

The death sentence imposed recently in Alabama upon eight Negro boys on the charge that they assaulted two white girls is considered by the Association for the Advancement of Colored People a new manifestation of the grudge scheme. With a mob waiting to enforce the popular notion of justice, these youngsters were convicted on the evidence of a gang of whites whom they had trounced. Instinctively, upon hearing of the charge "assault," most Northerners as well as Southerners rejoice that justice has been speedily applied. They have come to associate such attacks with the Negro.

A little study of the Negro and the law produces so much evidence of perjury and prejudgment of guilt, however, that we have a right to be suspicious where the charge "assault" is waved. An honest skepticism will do much to improve the legal status of the colored race—Cornell Sun.

Spinach Ice-Cream

We live in an age that has been weaned, fed and brought up on progress. Progress has become a platitudinous watchword of the times and science and invention are the chief abettors which whet the appetite. Often the results of this move are commendable but every once in awhile the demon "Progress" gets out of hand, runs amuck in a respectable field and causes us to writhe in agony and despair. A Detroit confectioner is the latest to lead the demon astray.

This confectioner has produced a hybrid monstrosity which he styles vegetable ice-cream. To his customers he offers a collection of pea, carrot, celery, bean, spinach, orange, and beet flavors, added to a vanilla mix. The resultant conglomeration, of course, is a mark of modern, progressive civilization! We can only shudder. Ice-cream has long been one of our favorite concoctions. Now to have vegetable ice-cream is the straw to break the back of human toleration and good humor. This Detroit genius has taken a thoroughly delectable dish, crossed it with lowly weeds, and transformed it into something thoroughly detestable. Yet this, this sample of twentieth century advancement, comes under the head of progress. We only await the caviar lollypop.—Princetonian.

Humanity Uprooted

"Life in Russia is so violent an experience, so painful a trial, and to him who bursts with the new faith so glorious an experience, that one cannot remain simply passive. One must react somehow to the heaving turbulence, with fervor, with fury, with hope, with despair, with madness or event with death."

This paragraph from the preface of Maurice Hindus' Humanity Uprooted expresses the whole theme of the book; the bigness, essence and totality of modern Russian life. Its scope is all-inclusive. The manner of its presentation is of even greater amplitude: it is entirely apolitical. Unlike Dr. Will Durant's Case for India, it presents no brief. It is broadly critical—in the word's true sense of pointing out—of the trend and status of Russian institutions, of Russian people and of Russian quests.

Under institutions, Mr. Hindus analyzes such fundamental social concepts as religion, property, sex, love and the family. His discussion gives one the impression that a colossal projecting machine, arrested with a group of one hundred and fifty million odd actors focused motionless on the Russian screen, has started up again so that the individual acceleration and in greater orbits of social contact. The stuff of their lives is woven on a larger loom and a looser pattern. Their frozen societal assets have been made liquid by the Revolution.

In the second section of his book, Mr. Hindus deals with the people: the peasant, the proletarian, the communist, youth, the intelligentsia, the Cossack, the Jew, women. It seems that the trend in humanity is towards a standard. Rigid class barriers have been leveled by the Revolution, and the formerly isolated contents of these social reservoirs is interpenetrating. Class, sex, and racial disparities have been cancelled in the wash of the current. Russia is becoming a vast babbitt-warren. The once privileged, swash-buckling Cossack is fading from the Russian scene, along with the pogroms, and the subordination of women. Individualism is becoming similarity.

Quests, the final third of the book, is a picture of Russia looking ahead. With eventual recurse to war accepted as necessary, eventual, and even desirable, and so inculcated in the masses, with Revolution transcendent over Russia as a symbol to be fought for and preserved, with England universally considered Russia's implacable adversary, and America held as her well-wishing, mass-productive hero and friend, the outlook on Russia's future trail to the pot of gold at the end of her national communistic rainbow seems sufficiently tortuous. At any rate, something gigantic, glorious and agonizing in the same breath is being attempted.

Humanity Uprooted is a brave, broad work. Its author should be well worth hearing —The Dartmouth.

Pittsburgh Students Overcharged for Prunes

Charging "profiteering" in the University of Pittsburgh cafeteria, several students have brought charges against the management, citing the high cost of prunes as an example. The complaintants plan to prove that the profit on prunes sold in the cafeteria exceeds 1100 percent. They claim that prunes sell for 8 cents per pound, and that one pound will make 13 ten-cent dishes, for which a total of $1.30 is charged. Other items concerned in the alleged profiteering are: beans, 1400 percent; fruit salad, 300 percent; vegetable salad, 250 percent; butter, 220 percent; and ham sandwiches, 200 percent.—Purdue Exponent.

California may undertake to regulate the import of foreign dried eggs. Steps ought to be taken, too, to dry up some of the foreign eggs who come over here to lecture.—San Diego Union.

Heels Defend Title Tonight At Greensboro

Carolina Faces Stiff Competition In Effort To Gain Track Crown

Duke or Davidson Expected to Step in Breach Should Tar Heels Fail.

AFTER TWELFTH STRAIGHT

Fetzer Has Yet to Lose State Championship After 11 Years Stay at Carolina.

Facing the stiffest competition in years, the Tar Heel track squad will go to Greensboro today to defend their twelve year old state championship title. The Tar Heels scored as many points as all the other teams in the state last year, but the prospects for repeating this performance today are very slight.

Carolina will be greatly handicapped by injuries to several of their finest performers, while every other team has been considerably strengthened since last spring. Carolina nosed out a win over Duke by a score of 68-58, and Duke, in turn, defeated the Davidson Wildcats 64-62. Every team entered in the meet will present one or more stars who bid fair to break many of the existing records.

The Tar Heels with their long string of victories will be fighting to keep intact Coach Bob Fetzer's record of having never lost a State meet.

Carolina will have Rip Slusser, J. K. Smith, Bob Drane, and Ken Marland in the 100 yard dash. Slusser has taken three first places in the six meets this year, and Marland has taken two. In only one meet have the Tar Heels failed to win the century this season, Washington and Lee taking first and second last Monday.

Bob Drane and Smith will be in the 220 with Lionel Weil and Marland in the 440. Both Drane and Smith have been doing great work all season while Weil holds the Southern Conference Indoor record for the quarter-mile.

In the 880 the Tar Heels will have Tom Watkins, Dick Garrett, Mark Jones, and Wallace Case. Watkins has been doing the best work in this event and has been a big factor in Carolina's last two victories. Mark Jones, Gabriel, Cordle, and Donnell will be entered in the mile run. Jones has turned in several excellent performances this season, but was injured in the Duke meet and has been unable to regain his early season form.

The two mile will see Baucom, Hubbard, Pratt, and Cordle in action. Baucom has been defeated only once this season in this event, losing to Simon of Duke when the Blue Devil runner made a sensational finish in the Carolina-Duke meet here.

In the hurdles the Tar Heels will have one of the strongest list of entries in the meet. Rip Slusser, in the low hurdles, has been defeated only once this season, and has turned in times of 24.6 and 24.8. Archie Davis and Don Waugh, in the high hurdles have both turned in good performances this spring and rank among the leading hurdles in the state.

FROSH GAME CALLED

The scheduled game between the Wake Forest and Tar Heel freshmen nines was called off yesterday on account of rain.

Bob Bessire, slugging left fielder on Princeton's baseball team has clubbed his way to first place in the Eastern Intercollegiate baseball league. In his opening league game, with Columbia, the Tiger outfielder "rocked the apple" for five hits in as many times at bat. . . . A high school youngster astounded Dixie track fans recently by jumping 23'11½" in the Southeastern A. A. U. . . . Incidentally, 23'11¾" won the Penn Relays. . . .

So far the New York Yankees are in undisputed possession for the title of 1931's hard luck team. As if the injury of Babe Ruth wasn't enough to hurt them, Dusty Cdoke and Myril Hoag, the $75,000 beauty, had to be injured, leaving Earle Combs as the only regular gardener. Joe McCarthy was forced to put in a pitcher in right field the other day to have a full team on the field. . . . which all means that Paul Krichell and the other Yank scouts will be working overtime combing the minors for an outfielder. . . .

That the art of base running is fast disappearing is all the more evident when one looks over the box score of a recent Yank-Senator game. Lou Gehrig smacked a home run into the center field bleachers, but passed Lyn Lary on the base paths thereby costing the New York team two runs—the Washington margin of victory. . . . Another game like that and the Yanks can move into Madison Square Garden and make the dear old public forget that the circus ever left town. . . . Two ex-Carolina boys are burning up the American Association with their ball playing. The gentlemen in question are Burgess Whitehead, captain for 1931, and L. S. Riggs, star freshman shortstop last year. Both boys are playing in Columbus' infield, and have won the hearts of Columbus fans. . . .

Bobby Goldstein, Virginia's 125-lb. champion, went to the semi-finals of the National Amateur Championships. . . . It looks like Brooklyn just can't win a ball game. The National League clowns made eleven hits off Clarence Mitchell, left handed spitter for the Giants, while Watson Clark held the Polo Grounders to just four hits, yet the Dodgers lost, 3-2. . . . The third of baseball's pioneers died

Tar Heels' Track Destinies Depend On These Stars

Carolina's chances for taking her twelfth consecutive state track title tonight at Greensboro will depend largely upon the performances of these three stars, who also starred on the gridiron. Theron Brown, star weightman, is leading the team in scoring with fifty-six points in six meets, an average of nine and one-third points per meet. Rip Slusser, sprint flash and hurdle star, is running Brown a close second for scoring honors with forty-seven markers. George Thompson, also a weightman, has been piling up points regularly during the season and should be valuable to the Tar Heels tonight.

TULANE GOLFERS WIN DIXIE TITLE

Carolina Places Fourth in Tourney at Athens, Ga.; Vandy Second and Duke Third.

Tulane university wrested the Southern Conference golf team championship from the defending University of Alabama Thursday at Athens, Georgia, the Greenie team shooting 648 in the 36-hole play.

George Bush, Tulane, was medalist in the 36-hole qualifying round for the individual championship with a score of 155. Second place in the team competition went to Vanderbilt with a score of 655.

Duke was third with 663. Other results were: North Carolina, 667; Georgia Tech 669; Alabama 686; Georgia 711; Kentucky 714, and Sewanee 725.

Schultz, Tulane substitute, was runner-up in individual play with 157. Caldwell, Duke, and Wheeler, Vanderbilt, were tied for third place with 158.

Scores of 164 or better qualified for individual match play Friday while Bill Ramsey of Kentucky with 165 lost out in the play off with three others for the remaining places.

Tulane led the qualifiers with four men in the match play, while Georgia Tech and Vanderbilt had three each.

The qualifiers:

Randle, Duke, 78-82—160. Bob Gormley, Alabama, 79-82—161. Russell Welch, Tulane, 81-80—161. Scott Hudson, Tech, 79-82—161. Hogan Watson, Kentucky, 80-82—162. Alvin Graham, Vandy, 81-82—163. Wilbur Oakes, Tech, 81-82—163. Tony Scheffer, Vanderbilt, 83-81—164. Fred Blackmon, Alabama, 79-86—165. Joe Adams, North Carolina, 81-84—165. Pratt Brown, Tech, 83-82—165.

Eddie Case, Harvard's new football coach, taught the freshman eleven three years and lost only one game.

Those Braves

One of the pre-season baseball forecasts is being fulfilled entirely too fast and well to suit a couple of National League ball clubs. Old Gabby Street of the Cards more than a month back opined those Boston Braves would be a thorn in the sides of some of the pennant contenders. With the season just a week old the Braves have slaughtered Brooklyn and they have taken the Giants two out of three in the present series. It is not infrequently these early season setbacks by second division teams are the difference between first and second place in September when the flag races fold up.

With Jess Harper back in the driver's seat, Notre Dame has no misgivings concerning the future of football there. This is especially true of alumni who were students at South Bend when Harper was head coach and Rock was his assistant. They will tell you that Harper was as great a football genius as Rockne, but there was a vast difference in the personalities of the two men and it was this difference that made the Rockne teams the more successful.

LAWYERS MEET MEDICOS TODAY

The exhibition game between the med school and the law school scheduled for last Sunday afternoon will be played this afternoon on Emerson field at three o'clock.

The two teams are made up of former stars now registered in the respective professional schools. Johnson, star pitcher of the Doctors, is a former Duke University pitcher. Others are Mac Gray, assistant director of the intramural department, who will catch for the Barristers; Boucher, Phi Gam basketball and football star, who will pitch for the Lawyers; and several others who have performed on various teams throughout this section.

The game has aroused considerable interest on the campus and a good crowd is expected. Regardless of the final outcome a good ball game is expected.

The probable line-ups:

The law school: Boucher, p; Gray, c; Craig, 1b; Adams, 2b; Marshall, ss; Merritt, 3b; Kellog, lf; Martin, cf; Campbell, rf.

The medical school line-up has not been definitely announced as yet but will be selected from among the following: Benton, Avener, Whitaker, Scarborough, Moore, Hunsucker, and McLeod. The battery will be Johnson and Carr.

LOCAL HIGH MEETS WILTON

The local high school will meet Wilton in baseball this afternoon on Emerson field at 3:30. The contest will be one which will determine the championship of the class B conference, as both Wilton and Chapel Hill recently defeated Bethel hill and Henderson respectively.

According to coach Brookbank, the local team is in good condition to meet the opposition this afternoon, and every hope is expressed for victory. The line up is as follows: pitcher, Wright; catcher, King; first baseman, Prouty; second base, Andrews; short stop, Dashiell; third base, Ray; left field, Riggsbee; center field, J. Ray, and right field, Pendergraph.

MANY CONTESTS ON TAP FOR TAR HEELS THIS WEEK

Eleven Games Scheduled; Virginia-Carolina Baseball Series Features Week's Sports Program.

Tar Heel athletic teams will face the stiffest week of competition of the spring quarter. No less than eleven events are carded for four teams with the tennis squad sharing the spotlight with the baseball nine.

Starting Monday the tennis team will swing into its northern trip in earnest meeting six teams in six days, including some of the country's best teams.

Monday will see the Tar Heel racqueteers playing Princeton at the northern school. Last year, the Tigers were recognized as unofficial national collegiate champs, and they have a veteran squad to face the Tar Heels. New York university, Army, Yale, Brown, and Harvard will be met in that order.

The baseball team will also have its hands full this week. On Tuesday, Coach Ashmore's charges will play the first of a two game series with N. C. State, meeting the Red Terrors at Chapel Hill. This year State has been giving their opponents plenty of trouble, and a good game should result.

Virginia will travel down to Chapel Hill Friday for the second game of a three game series with the Tar Heels. Both of these teams met on April 11 at Charlottesville, the Tar Heels coming out on the big end of a 6-1 score. On Saturday will be the gala event of the baseball season—the Carolina-Cavalier game at Greensboro. Last year Carolina emerged victorious 12-1.

The trackmen will face their greatest test next Saturday

Utopian Newspaper Of Future Predicted By Senator Allen

New Era in Journalism Will See Increased Condensation and Selectivity In Publication of International News; Will Appeal To More Intelligent and Better Educated Class.

A new era of newspaper development was predicted by Henry J. Allen, of New Jersey, who prophesied increased condensation and selectivity in the publishing of international news, in an interview with the Princetonian.

Senator Allen remarked that the movement for condensation had already begun, notably in such papers as the New York Times and the Herald Tribune. Even the tabloids exhibit a certain amount of conciseness in their articles. Selectivity should go hand in hand with condensation.

Future newspapers will do away with sex stories and family quarrels, and will relegate crime to the back page instead of displaying it in eight column headlines. They will contain mostly stories of international importance, and even these will be carefully sifted over for superflous details.

Subscribers will pay a high enough price to give advertisers some relief from paying the publishing costs. These subscribers will read a complete account of all daily matters, written with new dignity and selectivity.

The new paper endeavor to set a good example to all publishers. It will emphasize the important things in life instead of the trivial. The trouble today is that everything is in mass production.

It will neglect the quantity for the quality of its news and will be the leader in clean thought. The future publisher must realize that he must give not only news but a first class interpretation of that news. He must appeal to the sensible and not to the senseless. A rather restricted circulation will probably result from these changes. Only the more intelligent and better educated classes will be interested in such a journal.

Allen was doubtful as to just when this radical change would take place, but he was sure that its influence would be great enough to do away with the tabloids. He was very emphatic when he said that the new paper would in no way be a financial venture, but only one of human interest.

Theodore Dreiser Waging Fight To Halt Filming 'An American Tragedy'

New York.—Theodore Dreiser, author of An American Tragedy, is going to wage "a fight for my literary character" in an attempt to prevent by court action the release of the motion picture version of his novel, he is quoted as saying in an interview in the Herald Tribune.

He recently returned from Hollywood where he conferred with motion picture officials on the film.

"I have a literary character to maintain," he said, "and I contend I have a mental equity in my product and the character of my product . . . They can't take a piece of work that is inimical to my standards and picture me as writing something I never in the world could have written."

In describing Hollywood, Dreiser said he "was led through double doors to meet generalissimos who jumped around like monkeys and talked like children."

"They are dealing with the total average mind of the United States, these movies," he declared "and what they are doing to it is fantastic . . . Ruth Chatterton, for instance, has done very sympathetic work in one or two things, but along comes Marlene Dietrich or someone wearing a high hat and tights, and so they compel the serious actress to wear a high hat and tights and she can't do it. Instead of finding vehicles for Greta Garbo, they put her in things that any little squeak can play."

BIBLIOGRAPHY PAMPHLET PRINTED FOR INSTITUTE

A twelve-page pamphlet of bibliography for the Human Relations Institute went to press yesterday. It is hoped that it will be ready for distribution tonight.

The bibliography has been in preparation by the Sophomore Y cabinet for at least four weeks. The work does not go into a great deal of detail, but covers every phase of the conference.

Theron Brown and Bill Howard, who clinched the Washington and Lee meet by placing second, will represent the Tar Heels in the broad jump, while Harry Hodges and Brown will be entered in the shot put.

Sandy Dameron will lead the Tar Heel discus throwers, and stands a good chance to take the event against Gurneau of State. Brown and Thompson will be the other entries. Stuart Chandler Joe Strauss, and Brown will be in the javelin throw to compete with Brewer of Duke and Brock of Davidson.

The Tar Heel relay team will be selected from Drane, Weil, Smith, Marland, Brock, Case, and Garrett. Carolina's team of Jensen, Marland, Weil, and Drane set a new record in this event last March in the Southern Conference indoor meet, and is expected to repeat its victory today, although Jensen will be missing.

Duke, with Brewer, Fulmer, Brownlee, and Simon, and Davidson, with George, Brock, Brannon, and Earle, stand the best chance of breaking the Tar Heel's long string of victories, although State will present outstanding performers in Captain McGinn, Gurneau, Ricks, and Stout.

Political Situation At Washburn Grows Bitter

Politics at Washburn college at Topeka, Kansas, promises to be very active and bitter with the announcement of Richerd McEntier, leader of the Vox Pop party, that his party would submit a platform calling for the establishment of an elective publications board to supervise all student publications. The Kagpadat party, now in control of the student council, is opposed to such a proposal, preferring to keep the system now in use of electing the editors and business managers of publications directly. The Vox Pop platform also includes optional attendance at chapel, and a modification of the cut system.

the Navy in Wilson's administration.

M. S. C. Noble, dean of the University school of education, and life-long friend of the late president and schoolfellow, will represent the University at the funeral services today. It was not learned whether or not President Graham will attend.

Dr. Alderman served as professor of education in the University of North Carolina from 1893 to 1896 and as president from 1896 to 1900. From here he went to Tulane University where he served as president four years. When taken by death he was in his twenty-seventh year as president of the University of Virginia.

According to an editorial in yesterday's News and Observer, " Dr. Alderman understood, and, what is better, caused thousands who lacked his perception and philosophy to understand that education of all the people is a public duty and a natural right. There have been—there are—learned scholars who have sought to make universities the center of light and research for the few, not acknowledging the kinship between the little country school in the mountains or the sand dunes. Alderman knew they were one and inseparable. An aristocrat in cluture, he was like Jefferson and Wilson a democrat in championing the right of the poorest to equal opportunities with the children of the rich. He saw the public school and the university component parts of one system, and with Jefferson believed the support of such schools should be 'levied on the wealth,' a doctrine which has not even yet found universal acceptance, but which all men of wisdom now accept, and which no man did so much in his day to advance as Dr. Alderman. His chief service in North Carolina—in fact, his his chief interest and contribution was—was in public education. The historic educational evangelism of McIver and Aycock flowered in the establishment of North Carolina College for Women at Greensboro, given notable high place by these two noblest of all educational leaders. At that time the supreme need of the state was trained teachers and the hundreds who have gone out from that institution since have a thousandfold justified the wisdom of McIver and Alderman. Called to the presidency of the University of North Carolina in 1896 during a period of depression, Dr. Alderman gave it new distinction and enlarged its usefulness, opening its doors to women in the higher classes. Upon his inauguration at Chapel Hill in February 1897, the Governor and members of the General Assembly being present, he used these immortal words:

'I have an ideal for this University. My desire would have it a place where there is always a breath of freedom in the air; where sound and various learning is taught heartily without sham or pretense; where the life and the teachings of Jesus furnish forth the ideal of right living and true manhood; where manners are gentle, and courtesies daily multiply between teachers and taught; where all classes and conditions and beliefs are welcome and man may rise, in earnest striving by the might of merit; where wealth is no prejudice and poverty no shame; where honorable labor even rough labor of the hand, is glorified by high purpose and strenuous desire for the clearer air and the larger view; where there is a will to serve all high ends of a state struggling up out of ignorance and to general power; where men are trained to observe closely, to imagine vividly, to reason accurately, and to have about them some humility and some toleration; where, finally, truth shining patiently like a star, bids us advance, and we will not turn aside'."

Student Reporter Reviews Troubles Of Apple Vender

Apple vending in New York City is profitable enough to afford a livelihood for a widowed Irish woman, as well as her son and invalid sister, to judge from an interview recently printed in the Princetonian. She has been working on the corner of 42nd Street and Madison Avenue since November, and she says, "When I'm lucky I get about $2.50 a day."

Her twelve year old son wants to sell papers but she refuses to let him run around the streets saying that he's going to be educated first. "My sister is quite a burden because I have to leave the stand twice a day to go home and see how she is making out."

Before her marriage she was training to become a nurse. At times she cares for sufferers of mental diseases because those kind of jobs last longer, but it is difficult doing this because she has to go home to care for her sister as well.

Regular customers have promised her numerous jobs, but so far they have failed to materialize although she is still waiting. She intends to continue selling apples until she gets another position. "I'm going to keep at this until something more profitable turns up. I'll even work nights somewhere else and here in the daytime if I can; I have my name in almost all the employment agencies in the city, so I'm hoping for the best."

SECOND INSTITUTE ON HUMAN RELATIONS
OPENS TODAY

VOLUME XXXIX | CHAPEL HILL, N. C., SUNDAY, MAY 3, 1931 | NUMBER 161

DEAN MATHEWS TO OPEN HUMAN RELATIONS MEET

Classes Will Be Arranged So That Students Can Attend Morning Sessions.

With Dean Shailer Mathews speaking tonight in Memorial hall at 8:00 p. m. as the opening speaker on the program, the second Institute on Human Relations gets under way to continue throughout the remainder of the week. The Institute unofficially opens this morning with the pulpits of the four local churches being filled by visiting speakers.

Tomorrow's program brings to the campus two of the most important speakers of the whole Institute. General Charles P. Summerall, president of Citadel and retired chief of staff of the United States army, will speak at 10:10 in the morning on "The Trends in Our National Defense Policy." He will be introduced by Albert Cox of Raleigh.

Thomas to Lead Forum

In the evening at 8:00 o'clock Norman Thomas, director of the League for Industrial Democracy and former Socialist candidate for president, will make an address in Memorial hall on "Wanted: A New Social Philosophy."

At 4:00 in the afternoon Mr. Thomas will have a public forum in Gerrard hall and both Summerall and Thomas will conduct forums at 12:00 for special commerce, history, and government classes.

For the benefit of those persons interested in doing reading on the topics of the speakers, a special book exhibit has been arranged and will be placed in the lobby of Memorial hall during the week. It contains maps, pamphlets, charts, periodicals, books, etc., pertaining to the general theme of the three divisions of the Institute. This exhibit has been assembled by the members of the sophomore Y cabinet under the direction of Bob Barnett.

Laski to Speak

Through the material aid of the Phelps-Stokes fund, the Weil lectures, and the senior class, the quadrenial plan of the Institute was able to be continued. Dr. H. J. Laski, British economist and 1930-31 Weil lecturer, will appear on the program during the last three nights, through the courtesy of the committee in charge of the lectures this year.

During the remainder of the week the program will consist in daily class room lectures, and two lectures are at 10:00 a. m. and at 8:00 p. m. each day. It has been arranged with the University administration that the lengths of the classes be so arranged that the chapel period each day will last one hour. By making this change it will be possible for the morning speakers to have more time for their addresses.

At the meetings of the Institute in 1927 it was estimated that approximately 22,000 persons attended, and plans are being made this year for an even larger crowd.

Phi Mu Alpha

There will be an important meeting of Phi Mu Alpha Sinfonia after the organ concert Monday night in the music building. Electon of officers will take place.

James Urges Y Men To Attend Institute

All members of the Y. M. C. A. cabinets have been requested by Pardner James, president of the Y, to take part in the Human Relations Institute which will open today and run until Saturday.

There will be no regular meetings of the cabinets tomorrow night. Members of the organization are expected to attend the Human Relations Institute throughout the week and be prepared to lend any assistance possible.

"It is important that cabinet members acquaint themselves with the entire program of the Institute so that they may be able to answer any questions that may be asked them," the Y president said in his statement.

He went on further to say that since the Y is helping to undertake this Institute it is imperative that every member do his part to make the undertaking a lasting impression in the minds of every student and individual.

VARIED PROGRAM IS PRESENTED AT LAWYER'S DINNER

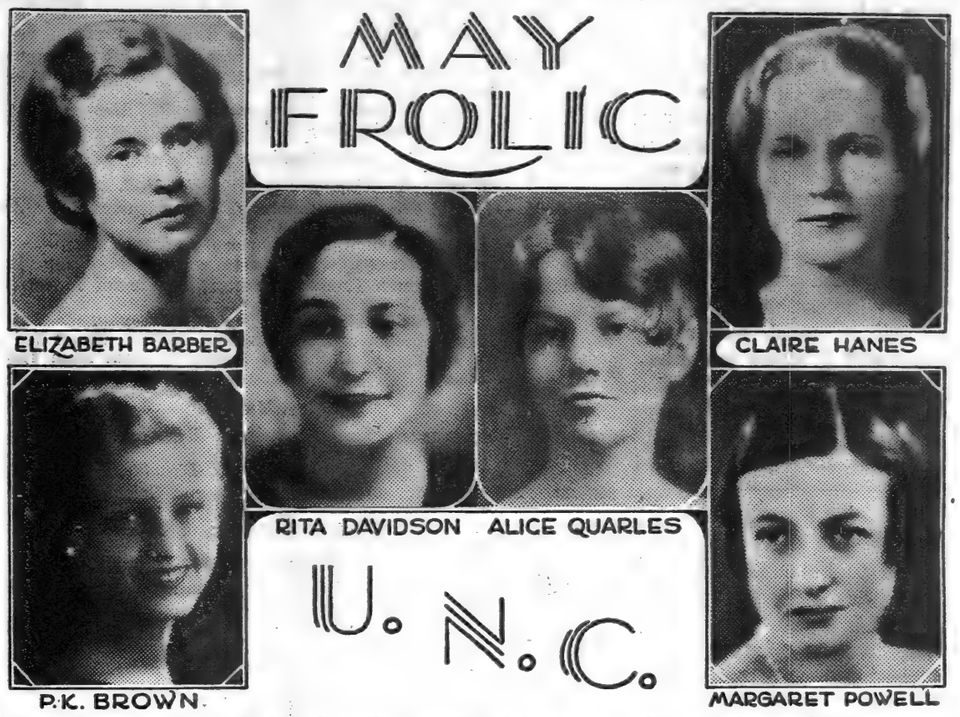
Awards, Speeches, and Skits Share Honors at Law Association's Banquet.

Reminiscent of Gridiron Press Club dinners, and characterized by good food interspersed with a variety of frivolity and lese majeste, the annual law school banquet occurred Friday night at the Carolina Inn. Skits at the expense of the faculty, imitations of professorial idiosyncrasies, and laughs, alternated with announcements of awards, interesting speeches, and instructive comment to round out a delightful evening for all present, from Supreme Court Justice to lowly first year student.

Arranged in the form of a mock trial, the dinner got under way with "liquidated damages" (tomato cocktail), proceeded through corpus delicti (meat course), "fructus naturales" (salad) and similar courses, to the final adjournment of court after two and a half hours of more or less serious entertainment provided for the observers of the case cited as Students versus Faculty.

Light Part of Program

Court was called to order with class yells, followed shortly by the law school song, the words and music of which were written by Wex Malone. Orators of the respective classes, including James Chadbourn, Mac Gray, and Beatty Rector, delivered short talks.



High lights on the program were skits by Moore Bryson in which the various members of the faculty came in for a due amount of affectionate "razzing" and caricaturing, given and received in the spirit of the occasion. This spirit was further carried out by the aid of bulletin boards placed in the lobby of the Inn, displaying subtle allusions to well-known characteristics of the professors.

Awards Made

The more serious side of the meeting involved the announcement and awarding of honors for work accomplished during the past year. Law Review certificates were given those who had performed noteworthy achievements as members of the

SPONSORS FOR FRATERNITY DANCES NEXT WEEK-END

Pictured above are six of the charming young debutantes who will be with the officers of the May Frolic, to be sponsored by seven fraternities at the University next Friday and Saturday. Miss Elizabeth Barber, of Raleigh, will be with Arthur deL. Sickles, Sigma Chi, who is president; Miss Alice Houston Quarles, of Charlotte, with Willis Henderson, Sigma Nu, vice-president; Miss P. K. Brown, of Asheville, with W. B. Snow, Jr., Zeta Psi, secretary-treasurer; Miss Rita Davidson, of Lynchburg, Virginia, with Dail Holderness, D. K. E.; Miss Claire Hanes, of Winston-Salem, with Clyde Dunn, Kappa Sigma; and Miss Margaret Powell, of Asheville, with Henry Anderson, Beta Theta Pi.

Norman Thomas To Speak At Banquet

Norman Thomas, director of the League for Industrial Democracy, will be the guest and speaker at 6:00 o'clock tomorrow night at a banquet in the Carolina Inn given by three liberal clubs. Mr. Thomas, who was the Socialist candidate for the presidency several years ago, will speak on the third party and its principles. Clyde Dunn, president of the International Relations Club, will act as toastmaster.

The International Relations Club, Amphoterothen, and Epsilon Phi Delta are the the three groups sponsoring the affair, and with the exception of about twenty specially invited graduate students and faculty members the attendance will be limited to the members of these organizations.

History Group Meets

Representatives of the University department of history and members from four other North Carolina universities and colleges, attended the regular biennial dinner given for teachers of history for the five institutions. North Carolina College, Duke University, State College, and Wake Forest College were the other schools sending representatives.

Young Peoples' Union

The union meeting of the young peoples' association of the churches of Chapel Hill will convene in the Methodist church tonight at 7:00 o'clock at which time James Meyers, federal secretary of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America and visiting speaker with the Human Relations Institute, will speak.

A.B. Seniors

Dean A. W. Hobbs asks that all seniors who have not yet secured from their major department an O. K. please to do so at once.

German Club Tickets

Will Yarborough announces that tickets for Finals may be obtained from him at the S. A. E. house tomorrow afternoon.

MAY FROLIC WILL SPONSOR SECOND SET OF DANCES

Seven Fraternities Will Join in Social Activities Next Week-end.

An unusually brilliant spring social event at the University will be the presentation next Friday and Saturday of the second annual May Frolic.

Emerson Gill and his Columbia recording orchestra have been engaged to play the sets of five dances, which with attendant house parties and other festivities, will draw attractive debutantes from all over the state and South.

Sponsoring the big social event will be the Sigma Chi, Beta Theta Pi, and Sigma Nu fraternities, all of which will have house parties, and D. K. E., Zeta Psi, S. A. E., and Kappa Sigma.

Officers of the organization are Arthur deL. Sickles, Sigma Chi, president, who will be with Miss Elizabeth Barber of Raleigh; Willis Henderson, Sigma Nu, vice-president, with Miss Alice Quarles of Charlotte; and W. B. Snow, Jr., Zeta Psi, secretary-treasurer, with Miss P. K. Brown of Asheville.

Assisting them on the committee are Dail Holderness, D. K. E., with Miss Rita Davidson of Lynchburg, Virginia; Clyde Dunn, Kappa Sigma, with Miss Claire Hanes of Winston-Salem; Henry Anderson, Beta Theta Pi, with Miss Margaret Powell of Asheville; and John Jemison, S. A. E., with Miss Jane Rogers of Little Rock, Arkansas. Dail Holderness will lead the figure with Miss Davidson.

Elaborate Decorations

Plans for this year's Frolic are much more elaborate than last year. Emerson Gill and his orchestra, who have just completed a fine run at Bamboo Gardens in Cleveland, is one of the most popular and one of the most-in-demand of the college orchestras, and the mammoth Tin Can, secured in order to accommodate the large number of guests expected, is being decorated elaborately and uniquely.

Final Cast Selected For "Perfect Alibi"

At the final reading rehearsal of A. A. Milne's play, The Perfect Alibi, conducted in the Playmakers Theatre Friday night, the following cast was selected: Mrs. Fulverton-Fane, Susan Creech; Jimmy Ludgrove, John Sehon; Susan Cunningham, Betsy Perrow; Edward Laverick, Joseph Fox; Edward P. Carter, Arthur Marpet; Major Fothergill, Robert Novins; Jane West, Marion Tatum; Arthur Ludgrove, William Chandler; Adams, William Allsbrook; P. C. Mallet, Charles Elledge; and "Sergeant" Mallet, Gilbert Stamper.

This comedy-murder mystery will be presented the night of May 23 in Memorial hall.

DAVIDSON STUDENT BODY INSTALLS NEW OFFICERS

Recently elected officers of the Davidson college student body were formally installed in an impressive ceremony Friday night.

Dan Goodykoontz, of Bluefiield, West Virginia, retiring president of the student body, presided over the meeting. He spoke briefly, charging Don King, of Bristol, Tennessee, new president, and members of the incoming student council, with the importance of the new offices.

Roger Enloe, Buchanan, Georgia, was installed as new president of the Y. M. C. A.; D. M. McQueen of Little Rock, South Carolina, as president of the athletic association; D. G. Martin, Covington, Georgia, editor of the Davidsonian and E. C. Dwelle, editor of the college year book.

Y Meetings Postponed

Pardner James has announced that there will be no meetings of the Y cabinets tomorrow night. All members are expected to attend the Human Relations Institute.

Lutheran Service

Rev. Sigmon will have charge of the Lutheran service at 5:00 this afternoon in Gerrard hall. His sermon will be "Do Not Err."

CHASE FORMALLY INDUCTED TO NEW WORK AT ILLINOIS

Former President of University Installed as Head of Mid-Western University.

New England education, ripened in the South, was transplanted to the Middle West Friday when Harry Woodburn Chase was formally installed as the sixth president of the University of Illinois. He has been acting as head of this institution since last July 1, succeeding David Kinley who had reached the University's retiring age. Dr. Chase was educated at Dartmouth and was president of the University of North Carolina for ten years.

Some five hundred delegates representing 232 universities and colleges, sixty-eight learned societies and professional organizations, and including a half hundred federal and state officials, marched in academic dress behind the University band across the south campus to the gymnasium where the exercises took place.

Number of Addresses

In his inaugural address President Chase told the visitors that "state universities like the University of Illinois are expressions of the faith that the provision of opportunities for higher education is one of the functions of the American commonwealth," and that they had obligations of a very particular nature unlike those of any other institution "in the fields of both teaching and research."

Brief addresses of greetings were also brought to the new president by Governor Louis L. Emmerson of Illinois, from representatives of the university world in general, the colleges of Illinois, the faculty, student body, and alumni.

Chase's Speech

"Among the many varieties of institutions, the large state University, like Illinois, occupies a peculiar position," President Chase said. "The very nature of its foundation and maintenance has committeed it to certain obligations in the fields of both teaching and research. In teaching it must deal, not with a homogeneous and selected group of students, but with the great numbers who have successfully met its standards—students who have widely different interests and capacities. It must devise ways and means of sending these out of its halls, some as leaders, many just as compotent people, but all better adjusted for happier, richer, and more useful lives in the world of tomorrow because of their work and their life here.

"In research," he said, "this institution must touch and vitalize the life of its state at every strategic point. It must also be true to its function as a university in the search for truth in every field and without question as to its immediate value.

"The state universities which have prospered and grown great are precisely those whose states, like Illinois, have had the wisdom to recognize the needs for freedom to teach and investigate and have supported those needs without interference from without in matters of control and policy. Without such a policy a university becomes but an empty name."

University's Obligation

In the opinion of Dr. Chase, the state university owes much

Harmful Criticism

Since the announcement of the possible loss of another of our best faculty members, a cloud of discouragement and gloom seems to have settled on the campus. Several students that we have talked to have even threatened to register in another school if the good men in the faculty here continue to be called away. All of them point to the fact that the University has lost around twelve or fifteen of its choice professors simply because our budget is such that we are unable to offer salaries comparable to those of larger and richer institutions.

These critics seem to forget the fact that this state, as well as a big part of the nation, is at present in the midst of one of the most wide-spread financial depressions in the history of our country. They have overlooked the fact that there is a larger number of persons on the unemployment list than ever before. They have also failed to remember that for the past one hundred and thirty days or more the General Assembly of this state has been trying to decide on some plan of taxation which will remedy the poor financial condition of North Carolina.

These critics, forgetting all such conditions, are surprised to see the University give up some of its faculty to those universities and colleges which are better off materially than we are at this time. They expect, in spite of these facts, that the University should be as prosperous as other schools which do not have such similar problems to face. They think that we with our budget ought to be able to compete in salaries with institutions who enjoy an assistance of double this amount.

Their continual pessimism is not only doing the University no good, but it is making people believe that we are actually on the decline. It leaves the impression that there is some way that the budget might be raised to meet the salaries which must be offered to retain some of our faculty members. But, in order to make this advance in the total amount of the budget it will be necessary that the present financial depression be removed—a problem which the members of the recent Congress struggled with for so long to no avail. It will be necessary that the unemployed be given job, and that they then be taxed sufficiently to give the University what it needs—an impossibility.

It would be much better for all concerned if these pessimistic critics would "take what's set before them" rather than covet something which is not theirs to possess.—C. G. R.

Professor-Business Men

It used to be customary for professors, as soon as they got their Ph.D.'s, to undergo a sort of aging process to make them grow old quickly. During this aging process it was essential to acquire peculiarities to distinguish them from their fellow-pedagogues. Age plus idiosyncrasy equaled one professor. That style is out of style now. Professorial dignity and peculiarity are no longer at a premium, and instruction is becoming less and less a haphazard and whimsical thing.

Professors now have all the paraphernalia of business, with offices, stenographers, and regular conference appointments with students. This newer type of instructor, despite his modern methods and efficiency, is no less wiser than his predecessor, but combines the wisdom of the old with the efficiency of the new age.

The coming into existence of the large university with its increased yearly output has made necessary this different method of handling the problem of teaching. The eccentric old "duck" would not get very far with a class of from fifty to two hundred. He might continue to ramble on, but the students would neither get anything out of it, nor would they stand for it.

Whatever his merits may have been, the "queer duck" is rapidly becoming passe in universities which must rely on speed and efficiency to fill their quota of students every year. The modern professor is a business man in harmony with the atmosphere of a business-like institution—more power to him. A. J. S.

Overhead it will be a profusion of streamers in black and white, while a crystal ball suspended from the center of the ceiling will diffuse into soft and glowing light the rays from many-colored spotlights playing on the dance floor. The entrances will be banked with evergreens, while individual booths for the different fraternities will line the floor facing the orchestra, and at one end will be a tea garden, bordered around with evergreens, where refreshments will be served by the Chapel Hill Women's Auxiliary.

Five Dances

The first formal dance of the set will take place here Friday night, immediately after a twilight dance sponsored at the Carolina Inn by the "13" Club, which will follow the afternoon's Carolina-Virginia baseball classic here.

On Saturday there will be a luncheon dance at the Washington Duke Hotel in Durham, with a special program by Miss Sara Busbee and her terpsichorean artists. Festivities will be continued with a tea dansant in the Tin Can, while the final ball in the Tin Can Saturday night will bring the set to a close.

Besides the May Frolic dance set, the house parties and the "13" Club twilight dance, there will be several other social events of note. The orders of Sheiks and Minotaurs and the "13" Club will all entertain at formal dinners, the Sigma Chi fraternity will entertain its guests with a formal buffet supper following the tea dansant Saturday evening, and several of the fraternities will have buffet suppers following the final ball.

Governor and Mrs. O. Max Gardner and President Frank P. Graham of the University will head the list of chaperones, which will include Dr. and Mrs. W. S. Bernard, Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Slade, Dr. and Mrs. C. S. Mangum, Dr. and Mrs. George Howe, Dr. and Mrs. H. G. Baity, Dr. and Mrs. J. W. Lasley, Mrs. G. C. Sprague, Dr. and Mrs. W. M. Dey, Mr. and Mrs. John H. Anderson, Mr. and Mrs. C. T. Woollen, Dr. and Mrs. Archibald Henderson, Mr. and Mrs. Marion G. Follin, Dr. and Mrs. R. D. W. Connor, Dr. and Mrs. E. G. Hoefer, Dr. and Mrs. E. G. Leavitt, and Dr. and Mrs. R. P. McClamroch.

List of Girls

The young women who will be the guests of the different fraternities include:

Sigma Chi: Elizabeth Barber, Raleigh; Phoebe Harding, Charlotte; Marian Wrigly, Greenville, South Carolina; Dorothy Kimberly, Asheville; Alice Cadlwell, High Point; Kappa Fulgum, Wilson; Jean Jackson, Glenn Ridge, New Jersey; Ledona Thomas, Rockingham; Robin Fraley, Statesville; Myra Lynch, Asheville; Sara Gibson, Gibson; Electra Waggoner, New York City; Hazel Brannon, Rockingham; Kate Jenkins, Atlanta, Georgia; Mary Cannon, Concord; Virginia Smathers, Miami, Florida; Kay Brown, Long Island, New York; Hattie Frank Mears, Danville, Virginia; Alice Grubbs, Greensboro; Lydia Lee Dix, Rockingham; Alice Ward, Bay City, Michigan; Ruth Lane Stikeleather, Asheville.

AT THE CAROLINA

Returning to the talking screen for the first time since the production of "The Trespasser," Gloria Swanson, starring with Ben Lyon, brings a DeSylvia, Brown, and Henderson feature up to her usual standard with "Indiscreet." The action revolves around the attempt of a modern girl to prevent a rejected suitor from marrying a younger sister.

As a music week feature "Kiss Me Again," the screened version of one of Victor Herbert's successes comes to the theatre Tuesday with Bernice Claire and Edward Everett Horton leading a cast which also contains Walter Pidgeon and June Collyer. The picture is one of the Vitaphone and Technicolor specials done on a musical score.

Wallace Beery shows up as a gangster in his latest film, "The Secret Six," which deals with racketeers and crooked politics and the efforts of citizens to remedy conditions. Beery is chief crook, so powerfl that he believes himself exempt from punishment.

The foreign language attraction for the week, coming Wednesday night at 11:00, after the last showing of the regular feature, is the one that was delayed last week; "Un Leon de Sociedad," an all-Spanish talkie with a foreign cast.

Mary Pickford comes out with her second talkie, "Kiki," as Thursday's attraction, in which she is seen in the role made famous by Norma Talmadge in the old silent version, that of the Paris street girl who wins success as an actress by her ability and charm. Reginald Denny takes the leading masculine role.

Friday's feature is Ramon Novarro's most recent release, "Daybreak," based on continental drama of pre-war Vienna written by Arthur Schnitzler. Chief among the supporting cast are Helen Chandler and Jean Hersholt.

The week's program closes with a western of a sort different from the usual run. "Dude Ranch," in which the prolific and inimitable Jack Oakie takes the leading role. Also prominent in the cast is an old time stage and screen star who has not been seen for a long time: Cecil Weston, who takes a main part. June Collyer is the heroine.

Dunlap Leads Carolina Batsmen; Hurlers Lead by Hinton With Four Wins

Star First Sacker Piles Up Average of .444; Ferebee leads Home Run Hitters.

TAR HEELS HITTING .295

Meet State Here Tuesday; Both Teams Leaders in Big Five And Tri-State.

The Carolina nine, which is running a nip and tuck race with N. C. State, and whom they play here Tuesday afternoon, for the lead in the Tri State League, is batting at a .295 clip, and has two men hitting well over .400.

Starting with a club composed almost altogether of green material, Coach Jim Ashemore has wrought wonders with the Tar Heels this year.

Paul Dunlap, rookie first baseman, and Henry House, veteran outfiielder, are the boys who have been doing the most disastrous work at bat, according to Manager Art Sickles' figures, released yesterday.

Dunlap has stepped to the plate 54 times and 24 times he has come back with hits—an average of .444. House is just behind, with 27 hits for 64 tries, and an average of .421.

These two gentlemen also rank to the top of the garnerers of the extra base blows. Little Smoky Ferebee, shortshop, leads in homers with four, but Dunlap has hit two homers, five triples and two doubles, and House has made seven doubles and one triple.

Four pitchers have carried the brunt of Carolina's first 15 games, and since 11 of these have been won and two tied, the records look mighty good.

George Hinton, regular for the first time, leads the list with four games won and none lost, and Jim Shields is just behind with three wins and no losses. Longest has won 3 while losing 1, and Edwards has won 1 and lost 1.

Other leaders at the bat and their averages are Blythe, outfiielder, 312; Ferebee, shortstop, .311; Peacock, outfiielder, .304; Wyrick, second baseman, .296; Captain Potter catcher, .295. Edwards leads the pitchers with a .250 average, Hinton follows with .222. Blythe has seconded Ferebee, Dunlop and House in extra base hittings, making two homers, a triple and a double.

The Tar Heels are unbeaten in the Big Five and stand with N. C. State at the top of the Tri-State Loop. Their game with N. C. State here Tuesday afternoon is holding the spotlight of interest this week because it will count importantly in the deciding of two titles and will match two of the teams with the best records in the South.

HAL KEMP ENGAGED AT HOTEL NEW YORKER

Hal Kemp, University alumnus who got his start as a big-time orchestra leader on the campus, opened an engagement at the Terrace Restaurant of the new and already well-known Hotel New Yorker, Friday night.

Kemp and his Brunswick recording orchestra will play at the New Yorker during the month of May. He will also broadcast over the National Broadcasting Company stations WEAF and WJZ. His schedule class for radio presentations seven times a week.

Any senior in the college of liberal arts who expects to apply for a teacher's certificate should secure from A. C. McIntosh, Peabody hall, application blank No. 1B and leave it at the registrar's office before June 1.

staff of the periodical. Added to the staff as a result of the recent competition to select new men were the following first year students: W. J. Adams, Jr., Archie Allen, E. E. Butler, Ernest Ewbank, Robert Hovis, J. M. Little, W. C. Medford, J. O. Moore, J. H. Sembower, F. P. Spruill. William T. Covington was announced as the editor-in-chief for next year.

The Hill law prize, offered for the most valuable contribution made during the year to the Law Review, went to James H. Chadbourn.

Coif Initiation

A solemn event of the program was the initiation of new members into the honorary society of the Order of the Coif. Every year seniors are chosen for this honor from the highest one-tenths of the class. The students initiated were James H. Chadbourn, Wex S. Malone, and Thomas Carlisle Smith. In addition, honorary membership was conferred upon Mr. Junius Parker, eminent lawyer of New York City, formerly of North Carolina.

The law school received from the law school association an etching of Supreme Court Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes, and from Dean C. T. McCormick an etching of Chief Judge Benjamin N. Cardozo.

Van Hecke's Address

The principal address of the evening was given by Professor M. T. Van Hecke, of the law school faculty, on "The Chief Justiceship of William Howard Taft." The speaker prefaced the more serious part of his discussion with several anecdotes connected with Justice Taft's lecture trips to Raleigh and Chapel Hill. He then traced the contructive work Mr. Taft had done in the improvement of the administration of justice in the Federal courts. This work was done chiefly through his leadership in the enactment of legislation which applied the executive principle to the organization and management of the inferior Federal courts and their personnel, and which enabled the Supreme Court to select for review only those cases involving questions of national importance in the realm of social, economic or governmental policy.

Concluding, Mr. Van Hecke indicated that while Chief Justice Taft was not perhaps the greatest judge we have ever had, he was unquestionably the greatest executive the American judiciary has produced.

The banquet committee was composed of Dean McCormick and Robert H. Wettach of the faculty, and Moore Bryson, Wex Malone, Archie Cannon, J. H. Chadbourn, W. T. Covington, R. M. Gray, Jr., and J. C. Williams of the student body. Mr. Wettach served as toastmaster.

Hits First Home Run

Jimmie Maus, former Carolina football and baseball star, treated Raleigh baseball fans to the first home run of the Piedmont season at League Park Friday afternoon. Jimmie, playing for his home town Greensboro Patriots, drove a clout over the left field fence in the second inning off Bill Ferebee, also a former Carolina athlete. Maus batted in two more runs by singling in the sixth with three on. The homer was the second in two days for the former Tar Heel captain, as he lifted a Ruthian over the wall at Henderson Thursday.

to the state. In the first place, he thought, it should be responsive to the new social philosophy of higher education which now prolongs the period of formal education up to the age of maturity.

"Never before has this been possible for the average family," he pointed out. "It will not pass. This philosophy must not be measured in terms of the fact that new and rapidly changing civilization, complex, confused, and intricate, requires a longer period of preparation if men and women are to lead in it lives of understanding, of happiness and of usefulness.

"It must be measured," he insisted, "in terms of the fact that the welfare of the America of tomorrow demands a citizenry educated beyond the point of its citizenry of yesterday. There is, I believe, no other course."

With a student body that is not only large but exceedingly varied in capacity, in interest, and in personality and achievement, the university owes it to the state to provide for such a group a wide range of liberal and professional opportunities, President Chase pointed out. "Such an institution must constantly fight against the insidious temptation to become a sort of educational factory," he said. "It involves large opportunities for discretion and individual treatment on the part of those in positions of responsibility, systematic opportunities for competent advice and guidance, and a large measure of freedom for exceptional and unusual students.

University's Mission

"We must carefully and continuously carry on a constant revaluation of our own processes. Both in our professional and our liberal education, conditions confronting our graduates are in many respects essentially different from those of ten years ago, and in another decade they will have undergone still further radical alteration. Our mission is to our own civilization, with its own needs and demands, not to the civilization served by the medieval university even by those of Europe today. State universities must reinterpret and reassess their work in the light of their new obligations."

Speaking directly to his faculty he said that "the first great duty of any institution is its teaching responsibility. We want great teachers. To the really great teacher, as for the great scholar, the highest rewards of the University are open."

Former Baseball Stars Make Good With Professional Clubs

By Bob Betts

Two former Tar Heels, Captain Burgess Whitehead and Lewis Riggs, have started their professional baseball careers in a sensational manner. These boys are with the Columbus club of the American Association, a class AA organization. The Columbus team usually a tailender, has started the season off at a fast clip, and these Carolina men have played a big part in the team's success so far.

Riggs is batting in sixth place in the batting order, while Whitehead follows him in seventh position. Whitehead is playing shortstop, and Riggs is holding down the hot corner. Both boys have been fiielding well and hitting hard. While it is still too early for any batting averages, it can be seen from the box scores that these youngsters have started the season by hitting all kind of American Association pitching. In a game with Minneapolis on April 23, Whitehead and Riggs got two hits apiece, one of Riggs' blows going for a double. The next day both boys garnered three bingles each; Riggs again got a double and Whitehead a triple. On this same day Riggs banged out a home run in the second bill of a doubleheader. In a game with St. Paul on April 25, Riggs got a round trip blow and two singles, while his mate got a couple of safeties and a stolen base. All in all the former Carolina players aren't fairing so badly. Whitehead was captain of this year's diamond aggreation until it was discovered that he had signed a contract with the Rochester club of the International League and was ineligible for college baseball. He was later transferred to the Columbus team. Lewis Riggs played on the 1930 Carolina frosh team, but later joined the St. Joseph club of the Western League. One can imagine what a team the Tar Heels would have with Whitehead on short and Riggs at third!

Two other former North Carolina college players are performing in the American Association this season. Bill Werber is playing shortstop and leading off the batting order for the Toledo team. Bill's fielding has been splendid, but his hitting has been weak. However, he will soon find his batting eye. "Pat" Crawford, former Davidson star and "big leaguer", is batting like a fiend. He has hit seven home runs this year and should lead the league in home runs.

Jimmie Maus, last year's baseball captain and star catcher, is with the Greensboro club of the Piedmont League. The season started last Wednesday, and Jimmie has already belted out two home runs in three games. His fielding around the initial sack has been of a high order.

ENTRANTS ANNUAL BOXING TOURNEY NUMBER EIGHTY

Squad Enters Final Week of Preparation With Conditioning Classes Under Coaches Rowe and Allen.

With the spring boxing tournament scheduled to be run off Tuesday and Wednesday, May 12 and 13, the squad will begin its final week of preparation tomorrow when Coaches Rowe and Allen start special conditioning classes for all those who have not already been taking daily workouts. Over eighty men have entered the tournament, but only a few have taken the required number of workouts. The intramural regulations require that every man must have attended at least five practice sessions to be eligible for the fights.

This spring's tournament will see seven new champions crowned since all but one of last winter's champions have been declared ineligible for competing in varsity or freshmen meets during the past season. Bob Gold, winner of the lightweight title is still eligible, but has been out for freshman track all spring and will not be able to enter the tournament.

The lightweight, welterweight, middleweight, and heavyweight classes should present the best fighting of the tournament with several stars from the varsity squad competing for the titles. The lightweight and welterweight classes have the largest number of entrants with over fifteen each.

Lofton Brooker, A. T. O., has been showing the best form among the lightweights, and stands as the favorite to cop the championship against a strong field of opponents.

The welterweight division will present several of the most outstanding candidates for next year's varsity team when Brunda, Battley, Preston, and Cahoon meet each other. Brunda

MARY deB. GRAVES AND HER WOODLAND STUDIO

Pictured above is the Chapel Hill studio of Mary deB. Graves and an inset of the artist, who is president of the North Carolina Association of Professional Artists. The association is now presenting its first exhibition of the works of state professional artists in the music building.

FIRST EXHIBIT BY NORTH CAROLINA ARTISTS REFLECTS LIFE OF STATE

Mary deB. Graves, Elliot Dangierfield, William Steene, and Charles Baskerville Are Among Prominent Painters Represented In Attractive Exhibition in Music Hall.

By Joe Jones

The romance of a state beginning to record herself upon the artists's canvas is glimpsed in the first exhibition of the North Carolina Association of Professional Artists which will conclude its thirteenth and last day in the University's music hall, Thursday, May 6.

For instead of modernistic daubs and the dim canvases of old masters here are exhibited pictures of North Carolina people and North Carolina scenes painted by living native North Carolinians. Here is North Carolina making a place for herself in the field of art; an industrial commonwealth awakening to the magic of her own artists' brush and pencil and palette.

Surely upon the walls of this gallery is a bit of the soul of North Carolina. Here is the misty gulf that falls away below Blowing Rock; here is a colonial doorway of Old Salem; a Guilford county farm; an ancient Hillsboro church; and here are portraits of North Carolina children and women and men.

Is First Exhibit

The North Carolina Association of Professional Artists, founded less than a year ago, is the first organization of its kind in the state, and this exhibit marks the first time a group of North Carolina men and women who make their living by painting and drawing have publicly exhibited their work. The society already has about eighteen members whose aim is to put on display the professional work of the state without an intermixture of amateur and student products. They intend to sponsor such an exhibit annually, showing only the work of native born or adopted Tar Heels.

Mary deB. Graves of Chapel Hill, one of the state's most outstanding portraitists, is president of the association. After studying in New York and at the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts and sketching abroad and doing illustrating work in New York, she returned eight years ago to begin portraiture in Chapel Hill. The interior of her studio, a tiny remodeled barn, is probably the most charming Bohemian nook in the village.

Besides three splendid oils she displays four pastels of children which are considered by many to be the loveliest pictures in the exhibit.

Isabelle Bowen, whose studio is on Fayetteville Street in Raleigh, is secretary-treasurer of the association. Included in her exhibits are a delightful painting of a chubby little girl called "Sugar" and a fine portrait in oils of Judge John Thompson of Raleigh. Both she and Miss Graves are on the board of directors of the State Art Society which was organized some years ago to promote the appreciation of art in North Carolina, and which presents in Raleigh an annual exhibition from the Grand Central Art Galleries.

The Association's vice-president, Charles Baskerville, is a former native of Chapel Hill who has made a name for himself in New York where his modernistic decorations and panels are especially popular at present. His work is also widely known in Europe.

State's Greatest Painter

By far the most prominent artist contributing to the exhibit is Elliot Dangierfield, who spent his boyhood in Fayetteville and who has had a studio at Blowing Rock for more than forty years. An old man, his canvases bringing fabulous prices among the wealthier collectors, and with perhaps as full a measure of success as any living American artist, Dangierfield says, "I have painted in Italy at Capri and Ravello and Venice, and I have painted in California and at the Grand Canyon of Arizona, but the scene of my greatest inspiration has been in the mountains of North Carolina, where at Blowing Rock I have had my summer studio since 1885 in a very, very beautiful invironment."

His enchanting "Carolina Mountain Country", a scene of the slopes and peaks below Blowing Rock done in deep blues and misty subtle tints, is the feature of the exhibition.

Other North Carolina scenes include the old church at Hillsboro and a deserted country schoolhouse between Raleigh and Morrisville which are by Mable Pugh, a native of Morrisville who has become a very successful illustrator in New York. She is one of the outstanding workers in the block print which is so much in vogue now.

Winston-Salem is well represented in the exhibit by the work of William Pfohl, a nephew of Bishop Pfohl. One of the finest pictures here is an oil painting of early Salem which he did for Mrs. R. W. Reynolds, and his etchings and water colors of Old Salem are equally as delightful. On viewing them, a northern visitor said, "I had planned to visit Richmond, but I think I shall go to Salem instead."

Many North Carolina Artists

Other prominent North Carolina professional artists represented in the exhibit are James McLean, Clement Strudwick, Franics Speight, Gene Erwin, Louis Vorhee, Mary Tillery, and William Steene.

James McLean, a native of Lincolnton, is one of the state's most outstanding art teachers. He is the head of the Raleigh school of fine arts.

Clement Strudwick, who has come back from studying in Paris to occupy a barn studio in Hillsboro, his home town, is represented by several striking portraits in both pastel and oils. He is active in promoting the work of the State Art Society, being one of its directors.

Frances Speight, an alumnus of Wake Forest and Carolina, and a native of Windsor, has won several of the most important art prizes offered in this country. He is a teacher in the Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts.

An architect, Louis Vorhees spends his spare time painting and seems to get more of it done than many who do nothing but paint. In High Point, where he has lived for a number of years, he has designed and built a little school house which has attracted great attention because its quaintness harks back to a day that is gone.

Mary Tillery teaches art at Meredith college and does a good deal of painting in her own studio. Her work is both delicate and colorful, and her "March Morning," a spring scene near Meredith, is considered one of the best Carolina landscapes in the exhibit.

Gene Erwin of Durham, one of the youngest members of the Association, is at his best in the medium of water-color florals and decorative screens.

William Steene, a New York artist who has made his home in Chapel Hill for a number of years, has done portraiture for many prominent North Carolinians.

Predicts Greater Day

The exhibit, which was officially opened to the public Friday, April 24, with an informal tea, contains about seventy pictures, and they are attracting a great deal of attention. Visitors and groups of club women from all over the state have come to the music building's galleries. To those of us who know little or nothing about art these pictures are interesting and beautiful in that they are so realistic in their portrayal of something of the life and people and scenes of North Carolina. One is constrained to feel a bit awed as he stands before this first exhibit of North Carolina professional artists, for surely it foretells a greater day in the history of a state which is only beginning to establish herself in the fields of art and drama and literature.

Some day, after many North Carolina artists have followed in the steps of the immortal Dangierfield, the world may learn that North Carolina's mountains and sea dunes are wild and beautiful, that the maple-bordered streets of her villages are scarlet corridors in autumn, and that at this season of the year the boughs of dogwood blossoms hang on her wooded slopes like cirrus clouds tangled in the underbrush.

is a southpaw and one of the most promising prospects of the tournament. Dick Battley and John Preston were reserves on the 1931 varsity team, and both rank among the tournament favorites, while Carroll Cahoon, a freshman wrestler this past winter, and John Finlator are other outstanding men.

Billy Stallings, who fought in the welterweight class in the winter tournament, has put on weight and will probably enter the middleweight class where Franeis and Burgwynn are other promising contenders for the crown.

Only two men have signed to enter the heavyweight class so far, but both of them show promise of developing into varsity material for next year. Barron Grier, 220 pounds, was entered in the winter tournament, but was defeated in the finals by Lacey Pace. Red Sherrill, the other candidate, weighs well over 200 pounds and has gotten himself into good condition for the coming bouts. Sherrill is a newcomer, but he has shown rapid improvement and has a good chance to take the crown.

The bantamweight, featherweight, and lightheavyweight classes have the fewest number of entrants, but Heyward, King, Barclay, and Errico look good to land titles unless a dark horse appears during the coming week.

NORMAN THOMAS ATTACKS SOCIAL ORDER OF TODAY

Socialist Candidate for President in Last Election Discusses Present Situation.

"We live in an epoch that is dying. Its end is not yet, and there is still time, I think, for us to plan and act so that our epoch does not perish in cataclysm, out of which in darkness and pain a new epoch may emerge."

Such was the view expressed by Norman Thomas, director of the League for Industrial Democracy and Socialist candidate for president in 1928, in an address last night before the second quadrennial Institute on Human Relations in session at the University this week.

At the morning session General Charles P. Summerall, president of the Citadel College of South Carolina and former chief of staff of the United States army, outlined a national defense policy.

At this morning's session in Memorial hall at 10:10 o'clock James Myers, industrial research secretary of the Federal Council of Churches, will discuss conditions underlying the recent strikes in Gastonia, Marion, and Danville. There will be no session tomorrow night in deference to an address by Judge John J. Parker, of the fourth circuit court of appeals, who will speak at the annual tapping of the Order of the Golden Fleece, senior honorary society, at 8:30 o'clock. The public is invited.

Condemns Social Order

Condemning the present social order, Mr. Thomas, in his address last night, declared that "economically, a civilization is sick almost unto death when, in the midst of actual or potential plenty, it condemns millions of men to the poverty of unemployment. Ethically, our social

FRIDAY DEADLINE FOR INVITATIONS

Senior Announcement Cards Are Attractively Bound in Leather.

Friday afternoon at 5:00 o'clock has been set as the deadline for placing orders for senior invitations, according to an announcement by the invitation committee yesterday. At chapel period and from the hours of 3:00 to 5:00 o'clock at the Y. M. C. A. and Pritchard-Lloyd's, the application lists will be opened to seniors and those who expect to receive degrees in June.

Attractive Makeup

The make-up of the invitations, considered to be the most attractive ever produced, consists of a fly-leaf page with an etching of the old well. Pictures of President Graham and Graham memorial building will appear as well as the addresses of all candidates for degrees. The last page will bear an inscription of "Hark the Sound."

Having already experienced a delay in placing the orders for the invitations with the printers, due to recent comprehensive examinations, an extra week for orders has been granted. The committee has urged those who desire to obtain their invitations to place orders immediately so that they may be obtained in time to be mailed out prior to graduation ceremonies.

WIGMORE GIVES INGREDIENTS OF SUCCESS AT LAW

What does it take to make a successful lawyer?

Legal knowledge, skill of tongue and pen, honesty, industry, tact, friends, and luck are the seven ingredients of the prescription handed down to the University law students by John H. Wigmore, dean at Northwestern university, for thirty years, and author of Wigmore on Evidence called the "greatest work of creative legal scholarship this country has produced."

Dean Wigmore rated the first four ingredients as worth fifty points each, tact 35, friends twenty, and luck ten.

"The law calls for a great many qualities," he declared. "No one or two are necessary for success," he went on while explaining that it's a matter of getting a winning combination. "There's a chance for all of us and that's the consolation in it."

"No one has all these qualities to the highest degree," Dean Wigmore said. "Fifty points in industry will pull you through almost anything. When you find you're short in some qualities, don't be overconfident you have the maximum in the others, but get down and develop."

PARKER PRAISES AMERICAN PLAN OF LIBERAL LIFE

Noted Judge Attributes America's Greatness to Liberty and Freedom of People.

Judge John J. Parker delivered the first of his two talks to the students of the law school yesterday in the first year law room. The speaker was introduced by Dean C. T. McCormick, who said that Judge Parker was the only graduate of the law school who had attained a position on the United States Court of Appeals.

Judge Parker talked on the principles of democracy and government, stating that democracy is not only a system of government but a principle of life. He went on to say that America's chief greatness does not lie in her riches or in her powerful position, but in the freedom and liberty of the American people.

Upholds Balanced Government

He also stated that the principle reason for the inefficiency and corruption of American municipalities is the political election of the judiciary. He approved the system of checks and balances devised by our ancestors, and especially the power of the Supreme Court to declare unconstitutional any act of Congress. He declared that this power protects the constitutional rights of individual citizens.

Judge Parker is not in favor of modern socialistic thought. He declared that socialism, or the state ownership of industry, would again place the individual in shackles. He believed that the chief contribution of America to modern civilization is the liberation of her citizens from the shackles of caste and tyranny.

The second of the series by Judge Parker will be delivered in the first year law room at 12:00 today.

Town Elections

The Chapel Hill elections will take place today from 8:00 a. m. till sundown in the high school gymnasium.

WAR CAUSED BY FALSE VALUATION SAYS SUMMERALL

Retired Chief of Staff Declares America Is Peace Loving In Institute Address.

"American military and naval preparedness always has been and probably will continue to be wholly for purposes of defense and not for offense," General Charles P. Summerall, president of The Citadel in Charleston, South Carolina, and former chief of staff of the United States army, asserted here yesterday in an address before the University's quadrennial Institute on Human Relations.

"We have always been a peace-loving nation," General Summerall declared. "Our regular army today is a comparatively small establishment. It is maintained at a maximum of efficiency with a minimum of expense. It is too small to be used for any offensive war. It is not aimed at any nation or combination of nations. Our only purpose in having an army and navy is to be able to defend ourselves in case of conflict with nations of different standards of moral values, and by moral values I mean different standards of justice."

General Summerall was introduced by General Albert Cox of Raleigh, who presented him as one of America's foremost citizens who had won high distinction in translating his war-time experiences into peaceful activities, it being his task to reconstruct the army as chief of staff during the past four years.

NOTED SPEAKERS DISCUSS RELIGION IN MODERN LIFE

Human Relations Institute Opens in Sunday Morning Services.

Religion must adapt itself to the changing order that civilization follows if it is to continue as one of the governing factors of the universe, Dean Shailer Mathews, of the school of divinity at the University of Chicago, declared here Sunday night in an address at the formal opening of the second quadrennial Institute on Human Relations.

The object of the Institute, which took place for the first time four years ago, is to provide a week of intensive study of present-day problems in the fields of international, industrial, and inter-racial relations. The sessions, which will convene in Memorial hall at ten o'clock each morning and at 8:00 o'clock at night, excepting Tuesday night, will continue through next Saturday.

Addresses in Four Churches

The Institute was opened in an informal way Sunday morning when visiting speakers occupied the pulpits of four Chapel Hill churches. Dr. B. F. Brown, dean of the school of science at North Carolina State college, spoke in the Baptist church, taking the place of Dean Carl C. Taylor of State college, who was kept at home by an automobile accident which he suffered several days ago.

"Industrial Relations" were discussed in a message which 'ames Myers, industrial research

Harvard Student Daily Paper Is Backed By Notable History

Publication of Famous University Is Considered One of Country's Best Because of Its Strong Editorial Policy, Good Financial System and Staff's Enthusiasm.

(By Bob Woerner)

(The following is the second of a series of articles relating the history, development, and success of the leading campus dailies throughout the country.)

The Harvard Crimson today, stands at the head of student dailies throughout the entire country because of its fearless editorial policy in recent years and as a result of fifty-eight years of tireless effort on the part of its editors and business managers. From its begining in January, 1873, as the Magenta, a bi-monthly with twelve two-column pages devoted to literary material rather than news articles, it has changed through successive steps to the present four-page, five-column daily.

Started in 1873

As early as 1810, an attempt was made to institute a student news organ at Cambridge. No less than five were begun but all of these failed because of the indifference of the undergraduate body. The Harvard Advocate, started in May, 1866, was still in existence at the time of the first issue of the Magenta, and held a position of undisputed and increasing security.

News played but a small part in the publication at its conception since it was planned primarily to be a literary magazine. When a "Sporting Editor" was elected and a column devoted to sports, it took a step toward becoming a newspaper. News which appears in a fortnightly sheet, as the Magenta was at this time, is not of particular importance, and it was not until publication was made weekly that a calendar of events called "The Week" and an epitome of news of outside colleges was added.

Changes Name

The name Magenta was chosen as the title for the paper because it was at this time that accepted color of the college. The change of the hue in the college color was due to a peculiar incident connected with the Back Bay Regatta in 1858. As there were to be several crews in the race, the question arose as to how the Harvard crew was to be distinguished from the others. The stroke, Ben Cowinsfield, settled the problem by going down to Hovey's and buying six China red bandanna handkerchiefs, and these were tied around the heads of the oarsmen. For several years after this, the crew wore red bandannas during the race. The choice of red was just chance; it might just as easily have been blue.

Red was undoubtedly to be Harvard's color, but what shade? The colors which Harvard rooters wore ranged from the lightest pink to the deepest maroon. Magenta was generally accepted to be impractical, and at a meeting of all the departments of the University voted by a large majority in favor of crimson.

Golden Fleece Will Tap Student Leaders Tonight

PLESSOW TO TALK TO PHILOLOGICAL SOCIETY TONIGHT

The Philological club will be addressed on the occasion of its monthly meeting tonight at 7:30 in Smith building, by Dr. Gustav Plessow, who will deliver one of his special lectures on "A New Theory Concerning Middle English Dialects."

Dr. Plessow is professor of Americana at the University of Turbingen. He delivered a special lecture a short while ago before the graduate club.

The body he is addressing tonight meets in the lounge of the graduate club the first Tuesday night of each month during the college year. Its membership consists of the faculty and advanced students in the language and literature departments of the University. The object of the group is to stimulate original investigation in language and literature and to afford an opportunity for the interchange of views on subjects relating to such work. Papers are read and discussed at each meeting. Dr. W. D. MacMillan is president, Dr. J. C. Lyons, vice-president, G. F. Horner, secretary, and Ralph S. Collins, treasurer.

LOUIS R. WILSON WILL HEAD NEW LIBRARY SCHOOL

Librarian to Direct School Recently Established by Board of Trustees.

The school of library science at the University of North Carolina recently established by the Board of Trustees will open at Chapel Hill September 18, 1931, under the directorship of Louis R. Wilson, University librarian and Kenan professor of library science.

According to the catalog of the school just issued, it is made possible by a grant from the Carnegie Corporation and is the culmination of a series of courses in library science offered in the summer and regular term since 1904.

Meets Definite Need

The school represents the University's effort in the direction of meeting a definite need in North Carolina and the Southeastern states. The growing interest in the Southeast in city and county public libraries, the adoption of minimum standards for college and secondary school libraries by the Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools of the Southern States, and the change in methods of teaching involving extensive use of library materials in every phase of modern education, according to the catalog, have increased the demand for trained library workers in North Carolina and the South generally. An increase in the number of libraries and the demand for library workers in these states are only a part of a nation-wide development.

To Be Housed in Library

The school will be housed in the University's new library building dedicated October 1929. This building, a splendid structure of white limestone, thought by many to be the finest piece of architecture in the state, is capable of seating over a thousand readers and shelving 450,000 volumes. The University's Membership in Organization Established in 1903 Considered High Campus Honor.

The Order of the Golden Fleece, leading honor organization of the University, will make public the election of new members tonight when the annual tapping will take place in new Memorial hall at 8:30. Judge John J. Parker, of the fourth Federal circuit court of appeals, will deliver the annual address in connection with the occasion.

Judge Parker, a member of the Fleece, will be introduced by Dr. Horace Williams, generally regarded as the founder of the order. Ed Hamer, of McColl, South Carolina, and Jason of the order, will officiate.

Ceremonies Impressive

Following the usual custom, a tapping committee of the Fleece, composed of two members dressed in robes, will come down from the platform into the audience and seek out the men who have been selected as the most prominent and worthy members of the junior and senior classes.

Membership in the Order of the Golden Fleece carries with it perhaps the greatest honor the campus can bestow upon an individual. Not only does it have in the selection of members the careful approval of campus leaders and the traditions of the organization but the recognized approval of the entire University.

Established in 1903

The Golden Fleece was established in 1903 by three prominent alumni, Dr. Horace Williams, Robert Herring, and R. S. Stewart. Herring and Stewart were attorneys of the state, and Dr. Williams the head of the philosophy department at the University.

At the time of the establishment, the students of the University were divided into fraternity groups between which there

English Composition Condition Examination

The examination for the removal of conditions on English composition will be given on Friday, May 15, at 4:00, in Murphey 201. All students who take the examination will be required to hand in a theme of one thousand words on a topic approved by the English department. Those who plan to take the examination may come to the English department office, Saunders 104, to get the list of approved topics. Further information may also be obtained from the English office. Individual notices will not be sent out this spring.

Battin Plays Third Of Guest Concerts

Professor Isaac L. Battin, of the faculty in the Meredith college school of music, presented the third of a guest series of organ recitals in Music hall yesterday evening at 8:15.

Professor Battin was assisted in the Grieg Concerto No. 2, which was the main attraction on the program, by Miss Galt at the piano.

The program last night was probably the last guest concert of the quarter.

Power,
Powder and Tomorrow

General Charles P. Summerall was at one time chief of staff of the United States Army. Now he is president of Citadel, the West Point of the South. Presumably such a man might voice the feelings of the case of war as regarded from the fighter's angle. We consider his remarks significant.

It is encouraging to see that he announces that "wars for defense" are the only moral wars. It is encouraging to see him look upon war as a potential and somewhat passive instrumentality rather than as a temperamental and rapacious device for national gormandizing.

However, it is little short of maddening to see that intelligent and influential men sincerely believe these things. "Force is basic." "We fight for morals." "We fight for justice." "The voice of the people and the voice of God are irrepressible." "We never plan to fight anybody." "Our naval armaments are nothing more than an attempt to be abstractly ready." "Our cheapest men are our reserves. We use them first." (And then bury them.) "The few American lives lost on the Lusitania, the American interests in Cuba in 1898, and so forth were not intrinsically responsible for America's belligerency." No, it was the principle, the justice, the moral involved.

As long as our national men of power and prestige refuse to face facts, perhaps bitter, costly ones, the intelligentsia, the socialist, the pacifist, the progressive, the college thinker may as well groan in despair. This process of evolution is indeed a slow one and seemingly dubious in its ultimate success.—R.W.B.

Human Relations

It is interesting to note the various philosophies expounded by speakers of the present Human Relations Institute. Interest should be added greatly during the progress of the forums by the diametrically opposed views expressed by outstanding speakers in the fields of politics, government, capital and labor, law, and related subjects.

Recognized leaders of socialist adherents speak on the same day with strong advocates of individualism and personal freedom; pacifists condemn warlike tendencies of today only to have their arguments riddled by masters in the art of national defense and adequate military protection; representatives of Capital set up arguments at which supporters of Labor may direct energetic assaults of verbal refutation. An unequalled opportunity for comparison and relative weighing of tenets and dogmas is to be found at present on the campus.

Perhaps only in one respect could the schedule of daily convocations be improved from the standpoint of general interest. Seemingly some arrangement could be effected whereby several of the most strongly opposed speakers would be allowed to talk from the same platform, with opportunity for rebuttal and direct reply to opposing argument. At least a few of the men here have expressed a willingness to engage in some such controversial debate, and others could no doubt be persuaded to do so. In this way much of value could be added to what is already an event of recognized importance.—J.M.L.

The Sunday Hangover

By
Wex Malone

A hangover is a hangover for all that. I can't see any legitimate reason (or illegitimate either, for that matter) why one can't have a hangover on Tuesday as well as any other day. Take it from me, I've seen it happen many a time. Besides, with one's family in town it is at least inconvenient to indulge in the favorite luxury.

To Beverly Smith of the Herald-Tribune goes credit for the observation: "Great spruce trees, mighty monarchs of the Canadian forests, are toppled down hourly to provide paper for the dictators who say 'in regard to your letter of even date'. Huge vats of linseed oil, rosin, soap and garlic acid are drained to furnish the ink for 'as stated above, and, trusting to hear from you, we remain'." Disregarding for a moment the mighty monarchs that are toppled hourly to provide paper for dictators who comment on dictators' comments, credit is due to Governor Pinchot of Pennsylvania for taking the first official action in instructing state employees to cut out superfluous pattern-phrases from business communications. Dr. Vizetelly, the lexicographer, estimates that at least 30 per cent, of the average business letter is "pure bilge," and on this basis has been computed a daily waste of 100,000,000 square inches of nice, clean paper.

We feel that encouragement and approval should be given to Messrs. Pinchot, Vizetelly, Firmin, and Galloway in their campaign against redundant verbiage, in so far as it is a measure to protect national resources. However, there is this to be considered: since few business letters exceed one page, why, for a few paltry spruce trees, junk the whole romantically glamorous ritual of commerce? After all, one chief compensation of the junior executive is the privilege of droning at a blond stenographic head, "Begging to acknowledge your favor, contents noted, in requesting me to comment in re the situation at hand, permit me to advise . . ." —Princetonian.

secretary of the Federal Council of churches, delivered in the Episcopal church.

In the Methodist church Dr. C. B. Hoover, professor of economics at Duke university, spoke on conditions in Russia, which he has studied at close range. And from the pulpit of the Presbyterian church Dr. William Louis Poteat, president-emeritus of Wake Forest college, discussed "Christian Attitudes in Race Relations."

All the churches joined the University in the formal opening of the Institute at the union service and mass meeting Sunday night. Before and after the address the University Glee Club rendered several selections.

Cites Three Problems

Taking as his subject, "A New Social Gospel For a New Social Order," Dean Mathews laid stress on what he regarded as three " new and perplexing moral conditions which are the result of the work of the last generation."

That some sort of moral authority must exist is obvious, Dean Mathews said. And then he went on to explain that "any morality that we have must be grounded on something deeper than the mere desire for pleasure or material goods.

"What is needed today is the reassuring conviction that morality is grounded on something ultimate. Such a religious basis cannot be legalistic, but must be intelligently derived from our understanding of human relations, both in society and with the personality producing activities of the universe."

Citing the second problem, Dean Mathews pointed out the changes that come from our new ability to use the forces of nature. "What we want from religious teachers is a clear-cut message that human personality is an end rather than a means and that it is possible to ground successful economic life on principles of brotherliness as distinct from coercion."

Can Nations Be Moral?

The third question is whether nations can be moral, Dean Mathews declared, "Must the relations between nations ultimately be determined by war, or is it possible for nations so to live together as to develop moral mores, customs and codes something after the fashion of those that exist between individuals. This question is so new as to be practically unformulated, but it is in the field of religion.

"It is a hopeful sign when the Church and the University take a more vital and intelligent interest in industrial problems," said James Myers, in his address.

Industry and Science

"Certainly the co-operation of religion and education is essential, for it is becoming more and more clear that our so-called 'Christian' civilization is not yet founded on religious principles in its economic and industrial relations. It is equally clear that in our age of science, industry is scientific only in spots.

"I am convinced that when we have faith enough to be religious in industry, to trust Jesus' principles of love, brotherhood and co-operation, and when we are scientific enough really to discover the laws of human conduct, and to base our industrial relations upon sound principles, we shall be able to develop an industrial civilization in which science and religion will make major contributions to an ideal social order."

Dr. Poteat's Message

"The conditions under which the races of the earth developed are today reversed, and with this change comes one of the greatest problems of civilization," Dr. William L. Poteat declared in his sermon.

Pointing out that men are closer together now than ever before, that they move about faster and their contacts are more often and more violent, Dr. Poteat said that from this arises the problem of living together in peace and righteousness.

"The race problem is but one phase of it, and that is not ours alone. It arises wherever two distinct races face each other on the same soil. I am happy to believe that the race relations of our own state are exceptionally favorable. To the maintenance and extension of these friendly relations the intelligence and conscience of our citizenship are committed—we shall get nowhere without these two —understanding and religion."

Dr. Poteat stressed the view that movements and organizations to promote the common interests of mankind have assumed an important place in our life today, and that even now we are beginning to accept a broader vision and to think in terms of worldly connections rather than national sentimentality.

book collection now comprises 223,000 volumes, carefully selected to meet the needs of the University and the school of library science. This collection includes 39,000 bound periodicals and transactions of learned societies.

The library is a depository for United States government documents; it owns a card catalogue describing the holdings of the library of Congress at Washington. In the Hanes and Hunter collections, the library has more than 450 incunabula, over 700 early and finely printed books, and 100 14th to 18th century European manuscripts.

Faculty of New School

The faculty will consist of five members, headed by Dr. Louis R. Wilson as director of the school and Kenan professor of library science. The other members of the faculty are: Donald Coney, assistant director and professor of library science; Robert Bingham Downs, assistant librarian and associate professor; Susan Grey Akers, associate professor, and Nora Beust, assistant professor.

The curricula of the school offer a basic course preparing the student for general library work. Three curricula are offered, permitting the student to specialize in preparation for work in one of three fields: elementary and high school libraries, city and county public libraries, or college and university libraries. The course as offered requires an entire academic year for completion, for which the University will grant the degree of bachelor of arts in library science.

The school has been organized as a graduate library school with the requirement for admission for a reading knowledge of French and German. The school has been planned in accord with best modern library school practice and along lines prescribed by the American Library Association.

"Out of this jungle of unemployment, tyranny, and the constant threat of war, we shall not find our way without an organizing philosophy and loyalty, a great integrating solidarity such as has always inspired the notable epochs in history. The actual transition from this epoch to a better order may be a matter of time and careful planning. We cannot and will not plan or plan in time unless we have a revolutionary change in philosophy.

"The only philosophy that is big enough," Mr. Thomas asserted, "is the loyalty of co-operation. It is a philosophy that is based upon the power men have to abolish poverty if they will work machinery for the common good. It is a philosophy of a classless society where workers are owners and where there is no shame greater than the shame of shirking.

"To this philosophy, for which I plead, must be added a program. Neither philosophy nor program will be effective without the power of political and economic organization behind them. But it is the need of a philosophy that I want to stress. It is by our social loyalty that we have risen above the beasts. It was the philosophy of the Declaration of Independence which opened and inspired a great period in human history. We need that philosophy restated so that it will apply to the necessary collectivities of a machine age, to the world and not to one nation, if we are to be saved. And the general acceptance of this philosophy, especially by that minority which always leads the way, must be revolutionary in the speed with which it comes if we are to avert a drift to disaster."

"There's no trouble about the quantity of liquor laws; it's the quality," says a writer. Same to the liquor.—Norfolk Ledger-Dispatch.

standards have sunk so low that we seem to be powerless against the poison of racketeering. An age which has exalted the legitimate getting of something for nothing by stock manipulations and all sorts of legal rackets is almost impotent against the curse of illegal racketeering.

"But above all, we are sick for the lack of adequate philosophy and social loyalty. Among reasonably intelligent men, there is almost no one today who is ready to present a positive intellectual vindication of our social order. Yet there is little hopeful organized and intelligent activity in America looking for a better social order. We try to live by the tag ends of old philosophies.

"The first act of the president who talked about rugged individualism—perhaps he meant ragged individualism—was to call Congress in session to pass the half billion dollars farm relief bill. Whether the law will relieve farmers of their poverty or of their farms is yet to be seen, but the law was not rugged individualism.

"When President Hoover talks about American life as a foot race where we all start equal and the prize is to the swift he talked untrue nonsense. Some of us are handicapped by racial prejudices and injustice, some by poverty and the bitter consequences of poverty to physical and normal health. The race is often is to the unscrupulous. But beyond all this is the fact that life is not a foot race at all. It is more nearly a football game with very bad team play."

Mr. Thomas said that the social philosophy of America can be summed up under two principles: one capitalism and the other nationalism. "Both are inadequate as a supreme philosophy," he said. "The private ownership of property for power and its management for private profit is the inevitable source of unemployment, bitter inequalities of wealth and poverty, and social conflict. Nationalism, whatever its beauties, is not big enough in an interdependent world to serve as our supreme loyalty.

Carolina Track Team Easily Wins Eleventh Straight Championship

State Upsets Predictions to Capture Runner-up Position; Davidson Third, Duke Fourth.

THREE RECORDS BROKEN

Dameron, Ruble, and Baucom Smash Old Records on Soggy Track; Frosh Set Record.

(By Phil Alston)

Doped to be pushed to the limit by the strongest opposition in recent years, the Tar Heel track squad made a rout of the State meet in Greensboro Saturday afternoon by rolling up 61 1-2 points against 33 1-2 for N. C. State in second place. It was the eleventh consecutive championship for the Tar Heels, who won by a much wider margin than was expected. N. C. State rated as one of the weaker teams of the state before the meet, also helped upset the dope was nosing out Duke and Davidson, both of whom were considered worthy challengers for the title.

Due to the soggy condition of the track, meet officials abandoned their plan of running the finals for each event at night, and all events were finished in the afternoon.

The Duke Blue Devils, who held Carolina to a 68-58 win some time ago, had to be content with 29 1-2 points and fourth place, while the Davidson Wildcats took third with 31 1-2. Wake Forest placed first and second in the javelin to score eight points, while High Point College, with fourth place in the half-mile run, brought up the rear with one point.

In scoring their overwhelming win, Carolina men broke three records and tied another. Sandy Dameron, in the discus, broke "Puny" Harper's old record of 136 feet three inches made in 1929 by tossing the plate 136 feet six inches for an easy first place. Seitz of State followed him with 127 feet, while Theron Brown and George Thompson placed third and fourth respectively.

Cliff Baucom, stellar two miler, broke the old record set by Simon of Duke last season, when he ran away from the field and finished in 9:51.7. Simon, Duke's hope for this event, was unable to run, and Baucom came very near lapping his competitors.

Ray Ruble broke the other record when he cleared the bar at twelve feet eight inches in the pole vault to shatter the former record by six inches. The old record was made in 1927 by Brantley of Duke. Brodie Arnold placed second to Ruble.

In the most thrilling race of the day, Carolina tied the record for the one mile relay by winning over State in 3:25.2. Weil, Tar Heel anchor man, finished a few feet ahead of Floyd of State after the Wolfpack runner had taken the lead at the beginning of the lap.

Another sensational race was the mile, in which Mark Jones won over Simon of Duke after trailing him for the majority of the way. Jones sprinted over the last hundred yards to pass Simon and finish the distance in 4:32, his best mark this year.

Carolina's margin of victory was found largely in the great number of second, third, and fourth places scored. In the matter of firsts Carolina led the field with six, but the Wolfpack from State was right behind with four. Davidson and Duke won two first places each, and Wake Forest one.

Davidson did its heavy scoring in the hurdle events, both of which were won by George of the Wildcats. McCallie placed second, and Little third in the

BASEBALL TEAM MEETS STATE IN BIG FIVE TODAY

Tar Heels Undefeated in Big Five Play; Cavaliers Here Friday and Saturday.

The Tar Heel nine will play N. C. State today at Emerson field in a Big Five game, starting at 4:00 o'clock.

Coach Ashmore's charges have yet to meet defeat in the state, being credited with two victories over Wake Forest. Games scheduled with Duke and Davidson earlier in the season were postponed because of rain.

This year State has had unusual success, being in second place in the Tri-State loop. In Big Five competition the Raleigh club lost a protested decision to Duke. State filed a protest over the umpire's decision in the last inning, but as yet nothing has come out of it.

If State is "right" tomorrow, they will give the Tar Heel hurlers plenty to worry about, but the Aggies have been playing erratic ball all season. Some days they are world beaters and on others, they act like a high school nine.

Lanning, State's ace will probably be on the mound for the visitors while Hinton will work for the Tar Heels.

The rest of the Tar Heel lineup is as follows:

Peacock or Croom, centerfield; Ferebee, shortstop; House left field; Dunlap, first base; Blythe, right field; Captain Potter, catcher; Wyrick, second base; Powell, third base.

After the State game, the Tar Heels will start preparations for the gala event of the season, the two game series with Virginia. The first game will be played Friday at Emerson field and the second one at Greensboro the following day.

The Tar Heels have already carried off a 6-1 verdict over the Cavaliers in a game played at Charlottesville.

High School Baseball

The final games of the class B baseball championship will be played on Emerson field May 15. Thirty high schools entered this contest three weeks ago. In the eastern part of the state there are five schools still in the running, they are: Rowland, Erwin, Roanoke Rapids, Wilton, and Chapel Hill.

In the western section there are also five schools left in the race, they being: Mount Airy, Bessemer City, Cherryville, Shelby, and Forest City. Chapel Hill and Wilton played in Chapel Hill Saturday. Shelby won the B class championship last year, defeating Hamlet in the final game. Hamlet was defeated recently by Rowland 5-4.

The class A final game will be played here sometime in the near future. The class A schools play on the percentage plan, and at the present time, Raleigh is leading in the eastern section, and Charlotte in the western.

Chapel Hill Wins

The Wilton high school baseball team was defeated 10-4 by the local high school nine Saturday afternoon when the two teams clashed on Emerson field. This places Chapel Hill in the semi-finals.

Bob Ray, third baseman for Chapel Hill made four two base hits, and Dick Dashiell, short stop, scored a home run. "Chip" Prouty, playing first base for the local side played a good game.

To determine the victor for the semi-finals in the eastern championship Henderson will play Chapel Hill Wednesday, at the latter place.

North Carolina, present Southern track champions, will go to Birmingham, Alabama, to defend their title May 15 and 16. The Tar Heels, due to many injuries and an unsually strong field, will be hard pressed to retain their championship. Auburn, Tulane, and Alabama have powerful squads, and either one of these teams may come through.

There are an unusual number of high class sprinters in the South this season. In the century there are a number of brilliant performers. Bradley and Smith of Alabama; Wisner of Virginia, Owens of Georgia, Whatley of Tulane, Edmunds of Washington and Lee, Slusser of Carolina, Brownlee of Duke, and Kelly of Kentucky are the chief hundred yard dash men of the South. Bradley, in the meet with Tulane made it in 9.9. Smith's time was almost as good in the same meet.

The above men, with the addition of J. K. Smith, and Drane, of Carolina make up the outstanding group of the 220 men in Dixie. "Shipwreck" Kelly, of Kentucky, Brownlee of Duke, Smith of Carolina, and Sisner of Virginia, are probably the strongest in this division on the basis of their showing up to the present. Ed Hamm, last year's winner and Conference record holder in the hundred yard dash, the 220, and the broad jump, graduated last year, and is now track coach at Georgia Tech. Hamm's records, made in 1928, are: 100 yard dash, 9.8; the 220, 21.2; the broad jump, 25 feet 6 1-4 inches. The only official records that count in the Southern Conference are those made at the annual Conference meets. Smith of Alabama, who finished second in the century last year, is back, while Farmer, who finished third in the mud and rain, may or may not be in the competition. Charlie has been limbering up and taking a fair amount of work and will probably get his first try of the season at Penn State May 9, when the Nittany Lions will be met in their lair. In the 220 Farmer was last year's champion, and if he gets back into condition will find plenty of opposition from Kelly, Kentucky runner-up last spring, as well as an excellent crop of sprinters from the twenty-three Conference schools.

In the quarter mile, Joyce of Alabama ran it in 49.7 to win the Southeastern A. A. U. championship, defeating Osman of Presbyterian college, who was seen in action here in Carolina's opening track meet of the season. Woodard of Vanderbilt, Scheur of Alabama, Floyd of N. C. State, Williams of W. and L. Kelly of Kentucky, Shephard of Washington and Lee, Weil of N. C. State, Miller of Tulane, Klamke of L. S. U., and Bell of Auburn, have each turned in several high class performances this spring. In the 880 division, Captain McGinn of N. C. State, the 1930 outdoor champion and 1931 indoor champion looks as good as ever, and will be pitted against a strong field. Shaw of Vanderbilt, Laubenheimer of Alabama, Craski of Alabama, McQueen of Auburn, Klamke of Louisiana, Cary of Virginia, Watkins and Garrett of North Carolina, Bradshaw of Duke, and Wells of Tulane are all capable of running it in two minutes flat, and several of this group should better this time.

In the mile, the one outstanding man in this event is Captain Smith of V. M. I., who has fea-

Grant Bows to Mangin in Lone Singles Loss; Hines-Grant Lose in Doubles.

The University of North Carolina net team continued its perfect record for the season with a 7-2 victory over the strong Georgetown University netters. The Heels now have a season's record of seven victories and no defeats.

Bryan Grant, Tar Heel No. 1 and ranking No. 10 in the country, dropped his first match of the season to a collegiate rival, losing to Gregory Mangin, Georgetown No. 1 and ranking No. 6 in the country, 6-2, 6-2.

The Tar Heel star put up a good fight against his higher ranking opponent but had to be content with the short end of the count.

In the feature match of the afternoon Mangin paired with Mitchell, Georgetown No. 2, to defeat the Tar Heel No. 1 doubles combination of Grant and Hines after a long and hard fought battle. The first set was a long and drawn out affair which went to Georgetown after thirty-four games, the final score being 18-6. The two combinations were evenly matched with the playing of Mangin as the Georgetown margin of victory.

The second and final set of the match went to Georgetown by a 6-4 score.

In the remaining singles matches, Wilmer Hines, No. 2, defeated Mitchell of Georgetown, 6-3, 7-5. The first set went to the Tar Heel star easily but the final set was closer with the Carolina sophomore getting the long end of the count.

Captain Graham easily defeated McBride 6-2, 6-1, while Wright and Yeomans finished out the singles with victories over their respective opponents.

In the remaining doubles matches Wright and Yeomans defeated Doyle and Berberich, 6-4, 6-4, while Captain Graham paired with Lucas Abels to take the remaining match over Penguet and Ferguson of Georgetown easily, 6-2, 6-1.

This afternoon the Heels meet New York University, with matches with Army, Yale, Brown, and Harvard following in order. They will return home Sunday in time to prepare to enter the annual Southern Conference tournament at New Orleans beginning May 14 and lasting through May 16. The final match of the season will take place May 18 when the Carolina team will meet Duke University at Durham.

Summary:

Singles

Mangin (G) over Grant (C), 6-2, 6-2; Hines (C) over Mitchell (G), 6-3, 7-5; Wright (C) over Yeomans (G), 6-3, 6-3; Yeomans (C) over Berberich (G), 6-1, 7-5; Graham (C) over McBride (G), 6-2, 6-1.

Doubles

Mangin and Mitchell (G) over Grant and Hines (C), 18-16, 6-4; Wright and Yeomans (C) over Doyle and Berberich (G), 6-4, 6-4; Abels and Graham (C) over Penguet and Ferguson (G), 6-2, 8-6.

COLLEGE HUMOR STAGES SECOND GOLD CUP RACE

Colgate University, Title Holder, Will Defend Title Again With Almost Same Team.

Three sectional divisions of the colleges of the country will compete in the second annual running of the College Humor gold cup races for outboard's of all classes, according to Les Gage, sports editor of the publication, who, today, announced that the Pacific coast division will hold their regatta Decoration Day at Cabrillo Beach, Los Angeles Harbor, California.

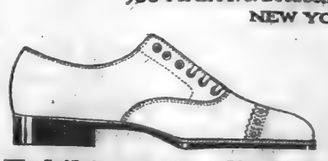
The Eastern division of the colleges hold their regatta on Skaneateles Lake, near Syracuse, New York, June 19-20. Forty drivers have signified their intention to enter. Among them are teams or representatives from Yale, Brown, Cornell, New York university, Dartmouth, Fordham, Toledo, Hamilton, St. Lawrence, and Rutgers. The entry list for the Eastern division closes June 15.

The team from Colgate, which won the team prize last year, again has been entered intact with the exception of William T. Crawford, Jr., who will race this year under the colors of Miami. Stewart Nunneley, of Detroit, who set two records last year, again will compete with the Syracuse University team.

The date for the Midwest division's regatta has not been set. It is expected that this event will be held under the supervision of either Northwestern University or Wisconsin University. Last year under the supervision of the latter university it was held at Madison, Wisconsin.

Among the colleges on the Pacific coast who have entered drivers are, Occidental, University of Southern California, U. C. L. A., Los Angeles, Ventura, California Tech, San Diego State Teachers, Whittier college, Pomona, Redwoods and Pasadena Junior college. According to Wayne Hackett of Occidental, manager of the regatta, it is anticipated that the entry list will exceed that of the Eastern division. The Southern California Outboard Association, an official sanctioning body, is cooperating as to course, timing, and officials.

Trophies valued a $3,000 will be awarded in the various events in each of the divisional regattas.



Freshman Track

All members of the freshman track squad who have been excused from gym and who have not competed in a regular freshman meet, must report for practice at 4:30 p. m. daily.

high hurdles, while Little placed third and McCallie fourth in the lows. Slusser, Carolina took second in the lows after stumbling over the last hurdle. Both Carolina high hurdlers fell in the preliminaries and were disqualified.

Smith won the 100 yard dash to account for the other Tar Heel first place. Brownlee took the 220, and Fulmer the broad jump for Duke, and McGinn won the 880, Floyd the 440, Gurneau the shot, and Cook the high jump for the Wolfpack's four firsts.

The Carolina Tar Babies won all three of the freshmen relay events and set a new record in the sprint medley with a time of 3:40.9. Charlotte nosed out Greensboro in the high school division when the Sutton brothers placed first and second in the final event of the day, the javelin to run their total to 53 points. Greensboro, in second place, scored 48.6. High Point was third with 30.6, Winston-Salem fourth with 19.6, Durham fifth with 10, Mt. Ulla sixth with 4, Barium Springs seventh with 3.6, Raleigh eighth with 3, and Oxford ninth with 1-3.

The summary of varsity and freshman events follows:

The Campus Calendar

Chemical Engineers

The local branch of the American Institute of Chemical Engineers will meet tonight at 7:30 in room 201 of Venable hall. Officers for the coming year will be elected at this meeting. In addition, refreshments will also be served.

Law School Address

Judge John J. Parker will deliver his second address to the law school today at noon in the first year room of Manning hall. His topic will be "The Relation of Law and Social Problems."

Radio Talk

K. C. Ramsay, retiring president of the Publications Union Board, will make the weekly radio talk sponsored by the student council, tomorrow afternoon between 3:30 and 3:45, over WPTF, Raleigh, at which time his subject will be "The History of Politics at the University."

Di Bills

The bills which are to be discussed in the Di society tonight at 7:15 are as follows:

1. Resolved: That all candidates for degrees at the University be made to qualify to a certain fixed standard in at least four sports.

2. Resolved: That the Federal farm board's policy of selling its surplus wheat in Europe below the market price is not for the best interests of America.

3. Resolved: That the dessemination of birth control information through regularly registered clinics to married persons only is socially justifiable.

Phi Bills

The Phi Assembly will discuss the following bills tonight:

1. Resolved: That the Phi assembly go on record as favoring the proposed consolidation of counties in North Carolina.

2. Resolved: That the Phi assembly go on record as approving the plan adopted by Cornell college, Iowa, of admitting unconditionly to the freshman class a small number of unusually capable students who have completed only three years of secondary school work.

was bitter enmity. To meet the need of better campus relations between the groups, the three alumni conceived the idea of uniting the most outstanding men of the upper classes. Consequently eight men, including the late Edward Kidder Graham and E. A. Alexander, were taken into the order.

Though the organization at first received the usual ridicule given new ideas, it flourished and won the confidence of the University and state. Membership is now regarded as a criterion of prominence on the campus.

In speaking of the organization, Dr. Williams recently said, "This body has been exceedingly valuable in promoting a spirit of comradeship, tolerance, and absence of snobbishness."

General Summerall said America never had gone to war except at the explicit demand of the people. "No groups or a combination of groups could ever bring about a war in this country," he asserted. "The voice of the people all over the country must speak out in unmistakable terms before we can have a war, and when this voice issues the command to fight, even presidents and their cabinets are helpless to prevent war." He cited the repeated efforts of President Wilson to keep the country out of war. "When the Lusitania was sunk there spread over this country a wave of indignation; the people demanded war, and no power could stay them. Other presidents and other cabinets likewise have been overriden when the people have demanded war.

"There is no case in history where a true government of the people has waged an offensive war, and wars will become less and less as true governments of the people are extended to the peoples of the earth."

Defining psychology as the most vital force of human relations, General Summerall said that standards of moral values are the guiding principles of individuals, groups and nations. It is the influence of force that protects these standards and forms the foundation of our universe, he said.

Upholding Our Rights

"Down through the ages there has gradually evolved a system of human relations which demands that people, individually or collectively, must acknowledge the rights of others. This influence is the stabilizing element of all governments, the extent depending upon the degree with which it is carried out. The Declaration of Independence would have been merely flights of rhetoric had not there been sufficient force employed to make it an actuality."

General Summerall cited the War between the States as being one of the clearest and most regrettable instances in which standards of moral values have clashed. The Spanish-American War was fought not for gain, he said, but to protect an offended sense of justice.

"Our army and navy is not aimed at any nation or coalition," General Summerall said. "We don't want to fight and we are not preparing to fight. More than half of our mobilization capacity is reserve. Ours is a wholly defensive attitude."

General Summerall said there now is overwhelming evidence that the people of North Caroline, in the Mecklenburg Declaration of Independence, took the initiative in restoring to force to secure American independence.

tured by running it in 4:23.6. In addition to this he has performed brilliantly in the two mile run. Billy Lauck of Virginia, Captain Bill Simmons of Duke, Mark Jones of Carolina, Gladden of W. and L., Wells of Tulane, McQueen of Auburn, and Bischoff of Tulane, are among the Conference distance aces who have been running consistently around 4:35 this season, and occasionally several have run close to 4:30, which is excellent time for this event.

In the two mile division, Simmons of Duke, McQueen and Roberts of Auburn, Barnhart of Georgia, Bischoff of Tulane, Cliff Baucom and Hubbard of Carolina, and Miles of V. P. I. have all been consistent performers in this difficult event. Perhaps Simmons of Duke is the outstanding long-distance runner in Dixie.

Harvard Student Paper Has Notable History

were seriously objected to. However the editors were finally convinced of the inevitableness of the situation, and in the first issue under the name of the Crimson an excerpt from an editorial reads, "We change our name that there may be no real change in our relations to the college, and, with the hope that this color may become a rallying word of victory before the summer is over, and we present to our readers the first number of the Crimson."

First Daily Started

A group of zealous students considered that it was time that Harvard had a daily, and in 1879 the first issue of the Echo was published. Its existence continued for three years, not because of its merit, but because of the failure of any competitor to appear in the field. At the end of this three year period, however, the Harvard Daily Herald started its short career, and by the energy and enthusiasm of its editors, it soon ran the Echo out of business.

As early as 1882, the Herald was given credit by the city dailies for getting out "extras" in the quickest time ever known in the newspaper world. One night the staff published an eight-page extra, containing a full report of the winter athletic-games that were being played in the gym that night, and had it running off the press a half-minute after the games were over. The copy was written up at the gymnasium while the games were in progress, and sent over to the shop in relays. All of the type was set up except the last letter in the line, "The tug-of-war was won by '8-." The winning class was signalled across the yard, the one piece of type dropped, and the press was started. Three other extras were published during the year, and brought much renown to the paper.

Board of Control

Control of this new paper was turned over to a board, which decided to unite with The Crimson if suitable terms could be arranged. The union was effected; The Crimson becoming a daily as well as assuming the title of The Herald-Crimson for a period of a year then changing back to its original name.

Financially the paper was never strong until it became a daily and was able to carry more advertising. The Magenta averaged only four pages of advertising in 16 pages, depending principally on subscriptions for its income. Since the subscription money was not collected in advance, it was often not paid at all, and in 1876 it was decided to charge $2.50 per year, payable in advance. People began to feel the lack of money in the years 1876-77 after the panic of '73. Merchants practically ceased advertising, fearing that the paper would fail. A novel scheme was adopted by the business managers who went around the campus finding out what necessities their friends were about to purchase then giving the merchants advertisements in return for the desired goods, which were thus obtained at a small discount. This method was so successful that for the year the paper was cleared of debt, and left with $200 in cash or in easily collected bills.

Departures Made

After the amalgamation, several departures from the regular system of things were tried. Instead of sports editors, the paper had "special sporting correspondents," who were athletes at the University, and who wrote articles about their special branch of sport. Then, too, the practice of The Herald of putting out sports extras was continued. The report of a football game with Yale played at Springfield was off the press twenty seconds after the game was over.

To increase circulation among the students the co-operation of the faculty was asked. Professors began to use the paper more and more as a means of communicating with the students.

The editors, influenced by the expanding habit, decided in 1885 to publish a monthly literary supplement the material of which was to be obtained from the work in the English classes. The success of the scheme was immediate, and the additional work that this caused the staff of the paper was considered important enough to be given over to a separate board.

Sinking Fund Set Up

The financial position of the paper had always been more or less precarious until the year 1884 when it began to improve. Through the efforts of C. G. Parker, business manager at that time, the financial difficulties of the paper were alleviated, and the deficit was not only cleared up, but a dividend was declared. In 1904 a new constitution for the paper was written, a sinking fund of one-twentieth of the net proceeds of the publication being established.

The problem of putting the paper on a firmer business basis was satisfactorily settled by having a committee of three graduates who should inspect the book of the business manager and report at least three times every academic year. The years 1915 through 1917 did more to put the paper on a firm financial footing than any other in its history previous to this time. Had it not been for the interference of the war, and the natural lack of interest which it caused, there is no limit to what the prosperity of the publication might have gone. It is enough to say that the sinking fund, which had been established, grew to such proportions as to make the erection of a separate Crimson building an accomplished fact rather than the dream that it had been so long.

Size Increased

The increase in the size of the paper also indicates the activity that the business staff showed during that time. In 1884 The Daily Crimson measured fourteen by eleven inches and consisted of four pages of four columns each. In a paper this size there is only forty-eight inches allowed for actual news and as a result the news articles could consist of only the most cut and dried statements of fact. This condition until the academic year 1911-1912, when a plan was adopted whereby if there was enough news to fill a six-page paper it would be published and the extra amount necessary would be paid out of a fund of $500 which was established from the sinking fund. Six and even eight-page papers became more and more numerous. In 1919 a new five column press was purchased and the four-page paper then contained more news than had a six page one in the past.

In a gigantic forty-four-page issue the 1915 board included the first pictorial section ever to be published by a college paper. The Illustrated, begun in 1899, was incorporated with The Crimson in 1919, and as a separate department of the paper began to issue bi-weekly pictorial sections.

Editorial Policy

When the paper was started, the editorial policy was conservative as befitted a new project. The president of the paper was in reality the editor, and it became his duty to write an editorial every day to fill the one column that was devoted to this department. No one man can be expected to write six editorials a week over a period of many months, and still retain a freshness of subject and diction. As this plan proved poor a board of editors was established to aid the president. It was through this department that many new men, who would not have otherwise participated in the venture, became connected with the publication.

Following the merger, the most important editorial subject which the paper took a stand on was "to condemn the action recommending the abolition of football as brutal, as hasty and to maintain that the colleges ought to be granted an opportunity of amending the rules so as to eliminate the objectionable features of the game, before the game is unconditionally prohibited." Another subject was that of "voluntary morning chapel." The editorial policy was to attack any plan that seemed to be against the better interests of the school, and any person who was considered to be out of harmony with the interests of the college.

Many Prominent Men

Work on a college paper evidently fits one for any position or any vocation that one may choose to enter, judging by the variety of selection that past editors of the Harvard Crimson have made and the success that they have met in these fields.

Some of the prominent editors of the paper during its long history have been: F. J. Stimson, ambassador to the Argentine Republic (1914-21) and special ambassador to Brazil (1919); Curtis Guild, Jr., governor of Massachusetts, (1905-07), ambassador to Russia (1911-13); Joseph Clark Crew, noted diplomat; Franklin D. Roosevelt, assistant secretary of the navy (1913-20), Democratic candidate for vice-president, 1920, and present governor of New York.

Dr. Chase's Mother Dies

Mrs. Agnes Chase, mother of former president Harry W. Chase of the University, died at 5:00 o'clock yesterday morning at the home of her son in Champaign, Illionis, after an illness of eleven days.

Mrs. Chase was well known in this state, having spent much time at the home of Dr. Chase during the twenty years he lived here.

The funeral will take place Thursday in Groveland, Massachusetts.

NOTED POLITICAL SCIENTIST TO BE WEIL LECTURER

Laski, British Economist, To Deliver First Address in Series Tomorrow.

Dr. Harold J. Laski, British economist and world famous authority on political science, will give the Weil lectures on American Citizenship, and will deliver his opening address tomorrow night at 8:00 in Memorial hall. The general subjects of his lectures will be "Democracy and Administration," the first being on "The Crisis in the Modern State," to be followed Friday and Saturday nights by "The Place of Administration in the Modern State," and "The Expert in Democracy."

Dr. Laski is professor of Political Science in the London school of economics of the University of London. He was formerly a faculty member of Harvard and is this year a visiting professor of the law school at Yale.

Established in 1914

During the years 1914-1915, an unendowed lectureship on American citizenship was established by the University. The first incumbent was ex-President William Howard Taft, who lectured on "The Presidency: Powers, Duties, Obligations, and Responsibilities." Since that time, this foundation named the Weil Lectures on American Citizenship has been permanently established through the generosity of the families of Mr. Sol Weil and Mr. Henry Weil, of Goldsboro.

OTTO STUHLMAN PRESENTS PAPER TO CONVENTIONS

Physics Professor Attends Meetings of Two Scientific Groups In Washington.

Dr. Otto Stuhlman, of the physics department, has just returned from Washington where he attened the meetings of the American physical society and the National Academy of Science on May 1 and 2. The meetings took place in the bureau of standards in three separate buildings, the industrial building, the chemistry building, and the east building.

Dr. Stuhlman presented two papers at the convention, one in conjunction with Henry zur-Burg, candidate for master's degree, on "Electrodeless Discharge Characteristics of Hydrogen and Nitrogen," and another written in conjunction with C. J. Craven, a senior, on "The Mechanics of Effervescence."

The first of these was presented on Saturday morning at the National Academy of Science auditorium. The discussion that followed the reading brought out the interesting fact that if our radio engineering friends would only supply us with an accurate way of measuring the electrical fields inside of a solinoid recited by radio waves, it would be possible to interpret similar problems in a more exact and reliable manner.

Great Interest Shown

The second paper was read at the Bureau of Standards on Friday. This reading was received with a great deal of enthusiasm and led to the asking of many

Philological Club Hears Dr. Plessow

Dr. Gustav Plessow addressed the Philological club last night in Smith building, delivering one of his special lectures on "A New Theory Concerning Middle English Dialects."

The German professor discussed the various dialects in medieval England. As a result of his study of Middle English manuscripts, he has formed a theory that the distribution of Middle English dialects conforms to the trade routes in a beetle-shaped pattern rather than to areas separated by language boundaries of the shape of an H, as was formerly believed.

Dr. Plessow hopes to obtain the assistance of a team of scholars of universities in North Carolina, South Carolina, and Virginia to prove or disprove this theory by making a paleographical analysis of the nearly 800 volumes written in Middle English.

LAWS NEEDED TO HELP EMPLOYERS MYERS BELIEVES

Institute Speaker Gives Three Causes for Trouble in Industry.

James Myers, industrial research secretary of the Federal Council of Churches, spoke yesterday morning in Memorial hall in an address before the Human Relations Institute. His subject was "Gastonia, Marion, and Danville."

Dr. Myers, an ordained minister, stated that the best method to study industrial diseases was to discover the cause of the diseases by gathering all the facts in the case. "The three causes for unrest in industry are: conditions in the mills of the south, a lack of real democracy, and a lack of business organization in industry as a whole."

Mill Conditions Poor

"The conditions in the mills caused the outbreak of strikes, and not outside agitation, as generally supposed." In Marion the mill people themselves sent outside for an organizer, after they had been forced to submit to three wage cuts and three stretch-outs in the mills. The wages were very low, ranging from six dollars and a half per week up to twenty seven dollars per week, even in Danville, where conditions are best. In Gastonia it was discovered that any person with initiative could have led the strike, not to mention Communistic agitators. The sanitary conditions in some of the mills at Marion were found to be exteremely bad.

"A real democracy is lacking in the average mill." It is an accepted fact that in Marion the management of the mills was stunned when the workers staged their walk-out, believing that the workers were well satisfied with conditions. A mill is less apt to have a strike when there is an organized union, than when the workers are unorganized."

Lack of Organization

"Referring to a lack of business organization in industry as a whole as a factor in causing strikes, Dr. Myers said, "Cutthroat competition prevents the raising of wages. Due to this, anarchy in this country has already appeared under cover. The best remedy for all these troubles is competent and fair

WILSON HONORED BY APPOINTMENT

Chosen by American Library Association as Delegate to Conference in England.

Announcement was received here yesterday by Dr. Louis R. Wilson, librarian of the University, of his appointment by the American Library Association as representative to the British Library Association Conference at Cheltenham, England, August 31 to September 5. The announcement is made by the president and secretary of the American Library Association and is accompanied by the request that Dr. Wilson present a paper before the British librarians upon the subject of "Education for Librarianship."

Heads State Association

Dr. Wilson is at present first vice-president of the American Library Association, a member of its executive board, and chairman of the board of education for librarianship which has to do with standards and curricula of the various library schools in the United States and Canada. He is also president of the North Carolina Library Association and has recently been made director of the new library school to be opened at Chapel Hill in September of this year. In June he will conclude the thirtieth year of his service as librarian of the University.

TAU BETA PI TO TAP TOMORROW

Professor T. P. Noe Will Deliver Address at Annual Spring Initiation.

The spring tapping of Tau Beta Pi, national engineering scholastic fraternity will take place tomorrow night at 8:00 in Phillips hall. Professor T. P. Noe will deliver the address. The initiation of the newly-elected members will take place Tuesday, May 19, followed by a banquet in the Carolina Inn.

Membership in Tau Beta Pi is considered the highest honor that an engineering student may obtain. To be admitted to this fraternity a student must have qualities of scholarship, character, and fellowship. The local branch of Tau Beta Pi, the Beta chapter, is one of the three national honorary fraternities on the campus, the other two being Sigma Xi, scientific research society and Phi Beta Kappa, national honorary scholastic fraternity.

Founded in 1885

The Beta chapter is one of the sixty chapters of the fraternity in the United States, having its founding at Lehigh university in 1885. Since then, 16,000 engineering students have been admitted to membership. The local chapter was organized in 1928, and the tapping Thursday will be the sixth in the history of the local chapter.

Tau Beta Pi has two tappings each year, one in the fall for seniors alone, and another in the spring for juniors and rising seniors.

Seven engineers were tapped last January, when only seniors were admitted to membership. These men were: Doc J. Thurston, John Andrews, Robert Edmund Hubbard, Giles Foushee Horney, Rankin Jones White, Howard F. Chrisco, and Raymond John Ruble.

DAVIDSON HONORS UNIVERSITY HEAD

Trustees Name Graham Recipient of Doctor of Laws Degree at Spring Meeting.

President Frank Graham, as well as five other men prominent in their fields, will receive honorary degrees from Davidson college at the approaching twenty-fifth commencement.

President Graham, who graduated from the University and taught here for several years, will be the recipient of a degree of doctor of laws. He has already been honored this spring with a degree from one southern institution. George G. Allen, of New York, is also to receive this degree. He was the business and confidential advisor of the late James Buchanan Duke, and is at present executor of Mr. Duke's will, chairman of the board of trustees of the Duke endowment, and is vice-chairman of the board of directors of the British-American Tobacco company.

Professor J. A. Tillinghast, of Spartanburg, South Carolina, will receive the doctor of literature degree. Tillinghast graduated from Davidson and later obtained a master of arts degree there. He studied at Cornell, and has taugh at Oregon; Belfast, Ireland; and Washington, D. C. He is now professor

SCIENCE GROUPS MEET IN RALEIGH

Many Papers To Be Presented to N. C. Science Academy and Chemical Society.

The program for the 13th annual spring meeting of the North Carolina Academy of Science and the spring meeting of the North Carolina Section of the American Chemical Society, which will be at N. C. State College in Raleigh this Friday and Saturday, was announced here yesterday by Dr. H. R. Totten of the botany department, who is secretary of the Academy.

At the opening sessions Friday and Friday afternoon papers will be presented, and at 4:00 Friday afternoon there will be a business meeting and the election of officers. P. M. Ginnings, vice-president of the Academy, will preside at the evening meeting at 8:30, and the address of welcome will be made by Dean B. F. Brown of the State College of science and business. Dr. W. F. Prouty of the University geology department, president of the Academy, will deliver the presidential address.

Immediately after the evening meeting there will be an informal reception at the State College Y. M. C. A.

Chemical Society Meets

The North Carolina Section of the American Chemical Society will meet at 9:00 Saturday morning with Prof. L. A. Gigelow as chairman and Prof. H. D. Crockford as secretary, and at 9:30 the mathematics and physics sections will convene. W. W. Elliott is chairman of the mathematics section and Prof. E. L. Mackie is secretary. A. A. Dixon is chairman of the psysics section and W. E. Speas is secretary.

A series of exhibits will be on display throughout the two days of the meeting.

ONLY SEVEN MEN GET HIGH HONOR

Two Hooded Figures Stalk Aisles of Memorial Hall Before Tense Crowd.

ALBRIGHT TAPPED FIRST

Seven men were honored last night at the annual tapping of the Order of Golden Fleece in Memorial hall. Judge John J. Parker, of the fourth circuit court of appeals gave the address of the evening.

Ed Hamer, Jason of the order, presided at the meeting and Dr. Horace Williams, of the philosophy department and one of the founders of the Golden Fleece introduced the speaker.

Judge Parker, who is a member of the honorary organization, gave a message calling the state to leadership. He made a plea for educated men in the open conflict of American life.

"The source of wealth," said the speaker," is the ability to develop the mental and not the physical side." He thought that the state did not make a greater investment than in the intelligence of its people. "Education is necessary for the physical welfare of the state and the state should support education for the doctrine of self-defense," said the judge. "What we need is an educated leadership in our political life, which is sadly lacking. We need leadership of trained men in our economic world. We must develop educated leadership in cultural activities, and to direct the citizenship in the use of its newly acquired leisure through this machine age. We must raise leadership in our religious life."

The speaker then showed how different was the call of leadership today in our complicated

PARKER BELIEVES LAW IN HARMONY WITH THE TIMES

Judge of Fourth Circuit Court Of Appeals Addresses Law School.

Is the law of today antiquated? This was the question asked by Judge John J. Parker, of the fourth Circuit Federal Court of Appeals, in an address yesterday morning to the law school. In answering the query he outlined the development of the legal profession and suggested possible improvements to be made by the rising generation of barristers.

The conclusion reached by Judge Parker was that the subjective law of today is in complete harmony with the times, though many alternations in the adjective, or procedural, law might be beneficially carried out.

After defining law as the force determining the conduct of citizens in their relations with each other and with the state, the speaker declared that to serve its appointed purpose and avoid the criticism so often directed against it, it must develop with the increasing complexity of civilization. In illustrating this process of change, reference was made to comparatively recent changes in the law relative to master and servant relations, labor unions and kindred problems of employment, combinations in restraint of trade, public service commissions, and phases of the modern expanded range of everyday life. Though we should at all times hold fast to the constitutional guarantees, they must change in their appli-

SPECIAL MEETING TAR HEEL CALLED

Places for Fifteen Reporters Now Available for Remainder Of Quarter.

A special call meeting of the entire reportorial and news staff of the Daily Tar Heel will take place tomorrow afternoon at 5:00 o'clock in 104 Alumni building. All reporters and news men must be present if they expect to remain on the staff.

Students contemplating work on the paper next year are requested to report at this meeting, as, according to present plans, there will be no regular tryouts next fall. There are places for fifteen reporters at present, and it is planned to continue new applicants tomorrow on the paper next fall, instead of taking on a lot of new men at the beginning of school.

Persons trying out for the Daily Tar Heel this spring will have chances for advancement in the fall, provided they do a reasonable amount of consistent work. They will also be eligible for attractive charms, and pictures in the publications' section of the Yackety Yack. No previous journalistic experience is necessary; the only prerequisites are the ability to use good English clearly, and to be willing to do a fair amount of work.

This call is primarily for those persons who are interested in the success of the paper as a student enterprise, and are willing to help further its growth.

Oh! He's A Socialist!

Mr. Norman Thomas held forth here Monday to four audiences totaling seventeen hundred a new concept of what a modern socialist is like. Scrapped was the time honored socialist ideal consisting of long hair, wild eyes, and incoherent denunciations, for that of an idealistic, efficient business man desiring in a dignified and orderly manner to educate the country into a better mode of living.

Thomas believes, along with every educated person, that democracy has broken down, that employment in a machine age and an age of easy transportation is entirely unnecessary, that each, according to his abilities regardless of his caste, should be given that opportunity which his actual worth and work entitle him to, and further that, while recognizing that private wealth in itself is not harmful that there ought to be a limit of the millions of dollars which a man can accumulate over which no one for the sake of the rest of society should be permitted to go. His socialism is predicted on the idea that no one should be paid for work-either by hand or brain—which he has not done.

In a country in which three percent of the people control more than ninety percent of the wealth, as well as the government of the nation, so that they may increase that wealth by favorable taxation and freedom from regulation, and in a country which even so much as tolerates racketeering said to be mulcting the people of these states of a sum in excess of ten billions of dollars yearly, it can not be said that democratic government is prevailing.

Russia is critized for its terrific and appaling number of state murders, but none of us can in intellectual honesty overlook the fact that Memphis, Tennessee, Chicago, and New York have respectively fifty, twelve, and eight homicides per one hundred thousand population yearly. Government which tolerates wholesale crime is undemocratic and unsocial, since crime is opposed and preys upon society.

A nation which reports five hundred and more persons yearly receiving incomes in excess of one million dollars each, and which also reports five million wage earners unable to obtain enough work to feed and clothe themselves is not a nation in which each is given the necessities of life and an opportunity of advancing as far as his ability will permit. Three percent control the machine at which all others must work. The stretch out system and unwise stimulation of the market brings millions into the pockets of few, but untold misery into the lives of millions.

Socialism is a philosophy of life—a religion. It varies little from the Christian religion in that it too seeks a brotherhood of man. If socialism be but an impractical ideal, so then is the Christian religion which should have forbidden the burning of witches in Salem, and the sacrifice of millions of lives in that great crusade to make the world safe for autocracy.

All of the socialists' ideals can not be accomplished in a world composed of humans; the approximation of the socialistic ideal—no wars, tolerance, plenty and happiness for all—would be enough.

Socialism is I have heard an artificial gesture aimed at controling natural forces beyond its control. The whole of civilization is itself artificial. We propel ourselves over the ground and through the air completely ignoring the natural means of locomotion we possess. Instead of dwelling in caves, we rear huge skyscrapers defying the laws of God. One sun is not sufficient to our needs so we build millions of suns to permit our toiling and playing while the rest of God's creatures rest as nature intended. We wear artificial clothing, we push into semi-temperate and frigid zones to live by means of artifical heat; we artifically cook and serve our food.

A return now to a natural state from which our neanderthalithic ancestors lifted themselves would be impractical now. Our only course is to face forward only. Conditions have arisen unforseen when this country and the social order we have builded here were created. The situation demands action. That action is best which least disturbs the public peace in alleviating the condition. Socialism desires to accomplish a justification of conditions by peaceful methods.

Men will stand starvation, oppression, and unrepresentative corrupt government but not for long. Balked at the polls, they will take more violent measures. It remains for the sane, intelligent, and honest people in this country to come to the realization that a change is imminent and that they should be the ones to make it, thus forestalling any such unnecessary and brutal government by ignorant men as the Slumbering Bear of Russia has been forced to undergo.

Our Universal Boredom

Youth is bored. Whether this is a pose or whether it is real does not matter, for the effects are the same. Petulance and pouting make us exceedingly sour.

Boredom has its start in imitation of their elders by children who know no better. When we are young our parents make every effort to get us to emulate them in customs, habits, dress, etc. Their efforts are successful, for children of the twentieth century are extremists—they copy too well.

After we have copied some of the virtues and most of the vices of our elders, we seek new worlds to conquer, and having conquered we are too tired to seek further. We sit back with a great sigh succumbing to profound ennui to wait for a new thrill or for something to happen.

At eighteen we say impressively, "We have lived" and put aside our swaddling clothes for the robe of maturity. "We are modern. We live fast," we say; as if being modern and living fast were the summum bonum of all existence.

The pseudo-sophistication of youth is more alarming than amusing. It caused the recent epidemic of student suicides and keeps us from getting the fullest enjoyment out from life. If we weren't so passive and would be willing to contribute to our own amusement it would take longer for ennui to overcome us.

We expect too much to be done for us, and until our attitude becomes contributory instead of passive or receptive we shall continue to be bored with a life which we have drained to the dregs too early.—A. J. S.

Weakly Said

The current Human Relations Institute has provoked considerable thought among those students attending. Political-economical questions have been discussed more frequently since Norman Thomas arrived here Monday than during any time in the past three years. Mr. Thomas possessed a personality which aided him in his presentation of the case of socialism to the institute. And his experience as a speaker and lecturer stood him in good stead.

The lack of interest among students in political and economical questions has often been deplored. Such events as the Human Relations Institute focus attention on these questions and with capable lecturers who are willing to strip political questions of their party connections students become interested.

While only one day of the Institute has passed at the time of this writing it is likely that the remainder of the sessions will prove as successful as the first day. Professor Laski who will discuss economical questions here. The last three days may show as did Mr. Thomas the close connection between politics and economics. This Institute thus far has gone far to show how much government is interested in business and with a shift in emphasis could show how greatly interested business is in government.

Municipal elections throughout North Carolina this month are becoming a cleaning up process. Newspapers in various towns are taking active parts in the elections and in Raleigh the efforts of the News and Observer may have aided in the overthrow of two of the three incumbents. Durham is having a campaign now and the Herald is active in support of one of the candidates for Mayor. Other communities show similar conditions.

Some of this renewed interest in governmental affairs is due to the financial depression. Weaknesses in the management of towns become more apparent under strain and when there is a likelihood that the tax rate will be raised then governmental heads are demanded. Taxation is a popular question at this time and candidates for office who cannot show how to reduce expenses need not offer themselves.

Why people wait until the crash comes before demanding closer management of municipal affairs is one of those inexplicable mysteries of life. Asheville rocked along contented enough until a bank crashed and then the mayor and his commissioners were forced out of office. It seems that the time to have demanded their resignations would have been when there was some hope of redemption not after the entire financial structure of the city had been undermined.

This column experimented for a couple of weeks with comments which may or may not have been worthwhile. But after a two week-trial period the wise cracks and gossip give way to an editorial discussion of news events. An effort will be made to confine the material used in the column strictly to news events.

With Contemporaries

The Next Half-Century

Fifty years ago Booker T. Washington, with 30 pupils and with an appropriation of $2,000 from the Alabama legislature, started his new "normal" school in one shabby building at Tuskegee. It is a pity that he could not have been present at the celebration of his school's semi-centenary, when its proud progress was recounted, and prouder hopes were raised for its future. Sixteen hundred students take the place of his 30; an endowment of more than $7,000,000 makes the institution secure; 40 trades are taught there; and some 132 buildings house the whole. This is good work. Tuskegee started in the black belt of Alabama when not more than a handful of Southerners would have testified that the Negro was at best anything but an irresponsible if amiable child. Fifty years of labor have demonstrated beyond question that the Negro is and will continue to be a hard-working, responsible citizen of his country. It is for Tuskegee now to recognize that the tasks of the next half-century will differ from those of the last. Having established the Negro as a responsible citizen, its task is now to educate him as such; not merely by continuing to conduct a competent trade school, but by offering all the opportunities that an increasingly educated Negro group will demand. That it is mindful of this obligation is evidenced in the John A. Andrews Hospital Clinic held at the school every year, one of the few large clinics in the country where Negro physicians and surgeons can discuss their common problems with successful white practioners. This is one direction in which the new Tuskegee is reaching out. And while we salute the old Tuskegee, it is to the new Tuskegee and to schools like it that we must look for the future of the Negro race.—The Nation.

Mordecai Johnson Speaks Tomorrow

Dr. Mordecai Johnson, president of the largest Negro college in the world, Howard University, and a leading American Negro educator, will deliver the Institute address tomorrow morning at 10:10 in Memorial hall. "Race Issues in Modern Society" will be the subject of his talk.

Dr. Johnson has for many years been in demand as a platform speaker, particularly at national educational and religious gatherings.

A portion of the east section of the hall will be reserved for some of the leading Negroes of Chapel Hill and Durham. Dr Shepard, president of the North Carolina college for Negroes will also be on the platform.

Dear Mr., Miss or Mrs.

Try a fresh Cigarette!

THAT LITTLE STING way down in the throat when you inhale a cigarette is caused by parched dry tobacco. You never feel it when you smoke fresh, prime Camels. The Humidor Pack keeps Camels from drying out or going stale. That's why they are always so cool and mild, so throat-easy. Blended from choicest Turkish and mellowest Domestic tobaccos and kept in tip-top prime condition by an air-tight wrapping of moisture-proof Cellophane, Camels are mighty hard to leave once you have tried them. If you don't believe it, switch to Camels for one whole day, then quit them, if you can.

Lanning Pitches State To Victory Over Heels In Weird Contest, 7-4

Tar Heels' Mental Relapses on Bases Count Heavily; Blythe Hits Home Run.

North Carolina fell off the top of the Tri-State League yesterday afternoon at Emerson Field when they dropped a 7-4 decission to State in a game that rivalled the V. P. I. contest for all-round rotten baseball.

This game was the first Big Five defeat for the Tar Heels, thus leaving Duke in undisputed possession of first place.

Ebery led the Wolfpack attack with four singles out of five attempts and in addition played a brilliant game at short stop. John Lanning, besides pitching a nice game, got two singles in four tries at bat.

State hammered two Tar Heels pitchers for twelve hits, including a triple by Brake in the eighth inning, while Lanning was hit for eleven hits, including a circuit smash by Blythe, and triples by Powell, Dunlap, and House.

Carolina blew away several scoring chances by doing a Brooklyn on the base paths. In the ninth inning House was held on third after a hard infield out, but tried to score when Blythe lifted a short fly to right, and was quickly extinguished by a pretty throw by Brake. As a whole, the team was very slow on the bases, everything that was done by the Tar Heels seeming to be wrong.

In the third frame, the Tar Heels bunched three errors to present State with three unearned runs. First, Peacock made a bad throw to the infield, then Ferebee caught the fever and uncorked a bad heave, and to top it off, House neatly dropped one in left field. When the smoke cleared, three runs were across, State's margin of victory.

State scored in the second inning on two hits and slow fielding by the Tar Heels. Goodman singled, stole second and scored on Fuller's single to right on which play, Blythe gave a good imitation of Babe Herman.

The Tar Heels came back in their half of the inning to score two runs. Pattisall walked but was put out on an infield hit by Wyrick, who reached first safely. Powell scored Wyrick with a long triple to left center, and scored on Brake's error in right field.

Two extra base hits by the Tar Heels in the seventh session sent two more tallies across the platter and pulled Carolina within one run of the Raleigh club. Dunlap got his third hit of the day, a long triple to center field and scored on Blythe's homer into right center.

The Wolfpack tallied twice in the eighth inning to put the game on ice for them. Lanning singled and advanced to third on Ebery's fourth hit and Brake cleaned the bases with a beautiful smash down the first base line which went for three bases.

Although the final score was 7-4, both teams only earned three of their runs, both clubs making four errors, but the Tar Heels made their errors when they counted.

Powell and Pattisall made beautiful catches on batted balls. Pat had to fight the water bucket before he pulled in a high foul, while Powell made a honey along the State bench.

Johnny Peacock celebrated his return with three hits. Powell, Blythe, and Dunlap were the other big guns in the Tar Heel attack.

State had a gala day on the

VIRGINIA TEAMS FACE BUSY WEEK

Cavalier Tennis Team Leaves Today on Four Game Northern Trip While Nine Invades Carolina.

The baseball and tennis teams of the University of Virginia have a busy week carded. The tennis team leaves today on a four game Northern trip while the baseball nine invades North Carolina in a three game series with Carolina teams.

The first match of the Cavalier netmen will be played this afternoon with Navy in Annapolis. Loyola will be met in Baltimore on Thursday, with a match with Johns-Hopkins also in Baltimore Friday and ending the trip with a match with the Baltimore Country Club on their home courts Saturday.

Captain C. Alphonso Smith, former national junior doubles champion, will lead the team. Burnett, Dame, Delafield, Martin, and Newell are others who will make the trip.

Under the tutelage of Coach Wylly the Cavalier tennis players have lost only one match to a collegiate rival this season, that to Harvard.

V. P. I. comes to Charlottesville next Wednesday for the final match of the season. Next Monday the University championship tournament will start with separate tournaments for freshmen and upperclassmen.

The Cavalier nine will head South for games with Carolina and State Thursday, Friday, and

CAVALIERS WILL MEET HEELS IN ANNUAL CLASSIC

Carolina Nine Seeks Tenth Clean Sweep in South's Oldest Continuous Baseball Classic.

With a chance to take their tenth "clean sweep" of the Virginia series, the Carolina nine, with a season record of 11 wins to 2 losses and 2 ties, is all set to hit its peak in the final games with the Cavaliers this week.

Carolina took the series-opener this year 6-1. The 38-year rivals clash again on Emerson Field here Friday afternoon, then repair to Memorial Stadium in Greensboro Saturday to stage their annual colorful classic for Tar Heel fans, Greensboro's college beauties, and for the hundreds of University students who always ride the "special" up to the Gate City. Carolina's series with Virginia is the oldest continuous baseball rivalry in the South.

The Tar Heels and the Cavaliers have been ironing out their differences on the diamond for 37 years now, but it is possible that Carolina has never wanted a series more than this year.

One reason is that Virginia has swept 11 series off Carolina, and the Tar Heels want to run their string to 10 this year. Another is that the Tar Heels have to pass Virginia for a Tri-State title. Another is that the boys want to keep Coach Jim Ashmore's record of never having lost a series to Virginia. A fourth, if more be needed, is that it's Virginia.

Out of 37 years of baseball competition, the Cavaliers have swept 11 series to Carolina's 9. The Tar Heels turned the trick in grandest style, however, in 1922, when three crack Tar Heel hurlers, Manly Lewellyn, Herman Bryson, and "Lefty" Wilson turned the Cavaliers back in three shut-out games, 6-0, 4-0, 7-0.

Jim Shields, Tar Heel slow-baller, who has won every game pitched this year, beat the Cavaliers 8-5 in the first game last year; the second was rained out; and in the Greensboro Memorial Stadium classic, the Tar Heels went on a hitting spree behind fine pitching of Frank Fleming to win, 12-1.

The Tar Heels have won exactly 8 of the last 10 games in Greensboro, and they'll be out to stretch the number Saturday with a team that is strong for such pitchers as Hinton, Shields, Edwards, and Longest, and for a scrappy bunch of hitters, led by a couple of boys, Paul Dunlap and Henry House, who have phenomenal season averages of .444 and .421, respectively.

FROSH TO TAKE NORTHERN JAUNT

The freshman baseball nine leaves tomorrow morning on their annual invasion of Virginia.

They play Woodberry Forest Thursday afternoon and then go to Charlottesville where they meet the University of Virginia freshmen Friday. The squad will stop in Greensboro on their return trip Saturday to see the varsity game with Virginia.

The frosh have won eight games so far this season while losing only two, and Coach Sapp's yearlings will be striving to stretch their winning streak at the expense of the Virginia schools.

Those making the trip are: "Mabel" Matheson, J. M. Tatum, Cecil Adair, John Phipps, Harry Phipps, Brodie Nalle, Watt Jones, V. S. Weathers, George Brandt, "Fannie" Fisher, A. J. De Rose, E. C. McIver, J. H. Cox, M. E. Strickland, L. E. Yerton, "Elon" Crouch, J. C. Frankel, and Whitley.

HEEL TRACKMEN WILL MEET PENN STATE SATURDAY

Close Battle Expected; Penn Boasts Win Over Syracuse in Only Meet of Year.

With their eleventh consecutive championship just won and their season's record for dual meets without a loss unmarred, the Tar Heel track men began work Monday for their hardest meet of the year, meeting Penn State at home Saturday. Last year the Lions came to Chapel Hill and were defeated 70 1-2 to 55 1-2 in a meet featured by Barkeley's victory in the mile over Paul Rekers, I.C.A.A.A.A. two mile champ.

While the Tar Heels were winning the state meet by a large margin Saturday, Penn State opened its 1931 season with a 69-66 victory over Syracuse. Penn State's superiority in the field events and distance runs provided the margin of victory. State swept all three places in the mile and javelin and won firsts in six other events including the hammer throw.

Musser, State javelin thrower, set a new record when he tossed the spear 199 feet 1 1-4 inches. Paul Rekers scored two firsts for the Lions by winning the half-mile in 1:58 and the mile in 4:29. Against these marks, Carolina will present Tom Watkins in the half-mile, and Jones in the mile. Watkins has been running the half-mile in a little over two minutes consistently this year, while Jones' best time for the mile was recorded last Saturday when he beat Simon of Duke in 4:32.

In addition to the one mile battle between Rekers and Jones, another great race should be seen in the two mile where Cliff Baucom, who broke the state record Saturday in 9:51.7, will meet Detwiler, who took first place against Syracuse with a time of 9:46.4. Baucom turned in his splendid time Saturday without having anyone to push him, which makes his mark all the more unusual. Running against Detwiler this week, he may step out and lower still further his existing record.

State's strength in the hurdles rests almost entirely in McDowell, who captured two first places in his first meet this season. His time for the high hurdles was 15.2 and for the low hurdles twenty-five seconds flat. Slusser, Carolina's low hurdler, has beaten McDowell's time for this event on two occasions this season, but placed second in the state meet at Greensboro as George of Davidson broke the tape in this same time, twenty-five seconds. Carolina's best performance in the high hurdles was made by Don Waugh when he won the event against Duke in sixteen seconds flat. Both he and Archie Davis failed to qualify in the state meet.

Slusser's time of ten flat in the hundred seems to give the Tar Heels the advantage in that event, and Ruble's twelve feet eight inches in the pole vault, Dameron's 136 feet 3 inches in the discus, and Weil's 50.6 in the 440 are better than the marks turned in by the Lions in their opening meet.

BURGESS WHITEHEAD

Burgess Whitehead, former Carolina shortstop and captain-elect of the 1931 nine, who was declared ineligible to compete in college ball because of an agreement signed with the Rochester club of the International league, and who later signed with Columbus of the American Association, is making good in professional baseball with a bang. Whitehead jumped into the breach as regular shortstop of the Columbus club and is hitting above .500 and fielding sensationally.

NETMEN DEFEAT TIGERS TO COUNT EIGHT STRAIGHT

Grant and Hines Lose Only Match as Tar Heels Get 8-1 Victory Over Princeton.

The Carolina tennis team maintained its perfect record for the season by defeating the Princeton Tigers, 8-1, at Princeton Monday afternoon. It was the Tar Heels' eighth straight victory and the Tigers' second defeat in seven starts.

Bryan Grant, national clay-courts champion and tenth ranking player in the country, defeated Bill Irwin of Princeton in the feature match of the afternoon, 6-4, 7-5. Grant's margin of victory resulted in his ability to pass Irwin at the net, and in the accurate playing of his ground strokes.

The Tiger's only point was scored by Strachan and Thomas in the No. 1 doubles match, the Princeton pair defeating Grant and Hines, 6-3, 6-3. Princeton captured only one set in the singles matches when Thomas extended Yeomans, for North Carolina state champion, three sets before the latter won 6-3, 0-6, 6-3.

In the remaining matches Hines easily defeated Strachan, 6-2, 6-3, while Captain Graham, Wright, Hendlin, won singles matches; Hendlin and Graham and Wright and Yeomans paired to win the doubles matches.

BURNS CHOSEN JUDGE OF NEW ENGLAND COURT

Professor J. J. Burns, of the Harvard Law School, was appointed justice of the Superior Court of Massachusetts last week by Governor Joseph B. Ely. He succeeds the late Judge J. D. McLaughlin, and is only thirty years old, being the youngest man ever to be appointed to the Superior court in the state.

Professor Burns was educated at St. Paul's Parochial school in Cambridge, at Boston College High, at Boston College law school, where he made an enviable record, and at Georgetown university, besides training received at Harvard. He became a full professor of law last March.

At Virginia and Kentucky . . . down where tobacco grows college men choose this one outstanding SMOKING TOBACCO

THE men who go to the universities of Virginia and Kentucky know tobacco . . . they see how it grows and what makes it good.

So when Virginia students, and the men who stroll down old South Limestone Street in Lexington, pack their pipes with Edgeworth, their choice tells volumes about the cool, slow-burning quality of this favorite smoking tobacco.

It's the same story everywhere—North, South, East and West. In 42 out of 54 leading colleges and universities, college men prefer the smooth, fragrant burley blend of Edgeworth. Try Edgeworth yourself. You'll find more pleasure in a pipe than you ever knew before. Every tobacco store has Edgeworth, 15¢ the tin. Or, for generous free sample, write to Larus & Bro. Co., 105 S. 22d St., Richmond, Va.

CLINARD ELECTED BAND PRESIDENT

At the annual business meeting of the University band Monday night officers were elected for next year and awards were presented for this year. The president next year will be John W. Clinard, of High Point, who has in previous years held the positions of secrtary and manager of the band. Lyddane Miller, of Charlotte, was elected vice-president, and Walter Prescott of Asheville, secretary. A manager will be appointed at a later date by the director of the band.

Awards for this year were given to the following men, all juniors: W. E. Abernethy, Jr., vice-president; John W. Clinard, manager; J. E. Wall, Jr.; S. W. Fleming; A. S. Lawrence, Jr.; J. W. Stallings, and Archie R. Davis.

Although the concert band has had, due to general conditions, very few dates, its appearances have been deemed quite successful. The baseball games this week will close the work of the band for this season, except for the commencement band, which will consist of about forty men, who will remain over to take part in the various programs.

Parker Urges Leadership at Fleece Tapping life with that of the past. In summing up he said: "The message to the state of North Carolina is that it must support higher education to develop this needed leadership."

The next part of the address was devoted to the responsibility which falls on University students after getting this education. "Three things stand in the way of students," Judge Parker said. First, that educated men are led away by the mania of specialization. Leadership depends on wider understanding, according to Judge Parker. "We need a broader conception of scholarship." Secondly, that there is a certain timidity among students. "Education would be a curse and not a blessing if a man is not taught to defend his own ideas." Then lastly, that a certain air of intellectual superiority stands in the way of students.

In concluding Judge Parker said that no men had received so much from civilization as those of the present day, and now these men must lead into safety those who gave them their education.

Following the address the lights of the hall were turned out, and the two hooded figures started down the aisle towards the front. After greeting the Jason on the stage the men reentered the hall, and the lights were switched on. After the usual amount of wandering around the hall the seven chosen men were pounced upon in the following order: Robert Mayne Albright, Beverly Cooper Moore, Frank Willard Slusser, Hamilton Harris Hobgood, Kerr Craig Ramsey, John Elwin Dungan, and Robert Aubrey Parsley.

Rho Chi Initiates Two New Members

The Xi chapter of Rho Chi, honorary pharmaceutical scholastic fraternity, held its second initiation of the year last Friday night, inducting R. H. Temple, Kinston, and J. A. Weaver of Olin, into membership.

Rho Chi was founded at the University of Michigan in 1908, and the Carolina chapter of the organization was installed in the spring of 1930 with the initiates of the 1929 class as charter members. The Xi chapter has had seventeen members since its founding.

Tryouts for the Virginia radio debate will take place tonight at 7:00 in Gerrard hall.

Gorman and Geer At Institute Today

Today's program of the Institute of Human Relations brings to the campus two men representing opposite sides of the world of industry—the workers and the owners. In the morning Mr. Francis J. Gorman, International vice-president of the Union Textile Workers speaks on "Labor Organization and Southern Industry."

Mr. Ben E. Geer, treasurer of the Judson Mills of Greenville, South Carolina and one of the most prominent manufacturers in the South will address the evening audience on "The Mill Owner's Responsibility and Viewpoint." Both meetings will be in Memorial hall.

During the last two hours of the morning class session seminars will be conducted in the auditoriums of several buildings.

cation to individual liberty, and numerous problems remain to be solved by new members of the bar.

Proposes Court Reform

In criticizing the present state of court procedure, Judge Parker proposed abolishing the formality of actions, dispensing with the grand jury except in cases of serious crimes, discarding of the distinction between actions in law and suits in equity, simplifying trials and rules of evidence, dispensing with necessity of unanimous jury verdicts, allowing judges, who are the only impartial lawyers in the court room, to express opinions on the facts of the case, and presentation of direct issues of fact to juries. The speaker declared himself heartily in favor of the jury system on the whole, however. Many of the suggested reforms have been carried out in North Carolina.

With a reiteration of the theme of the address made Monday, in which preservation and obedience to the constitution at all times was urged the talk was concluded.

LAWS NEEDED TO HELP EMPLOYERS MYERS BELIEVES

legislation and increased wages, which most mills can well afford to pay." Dr. Myers made a plea to the people to take a sane and broad-minded view of the industrial situation of today.

"I have the greatest sympathy," he said, "for the individual employer who would like to abolish unemployment and slack time, to pay a really living wage and to provide ideal conditions but who finds himself because of the competitive economic conditions and over-expansion of the industry unable to do what he knows is right. Nothing will ever completely remedy these basic difficulties in our industrial life until we apply the engineering principle of planning—not only in a single plant, but in an entire industry, in all industry, and through international cooperation in production and consumption of the world."

Laws Needed

The textile employers who recently brought about the reforms eliminating night work for women and minors and limiting the weekly hours to fifty-five for daytime and fifty for night shifts "will need the help of state laws to bring the minority into line with these more progressive policies," Mr. Myers declared.

"The history of labor legislation shows," he said, "that in the fierce pressure of competition a minority of employers will always endanger the higher standards of the others unless social legislation steps in to protect those who wish to operate under better conditions."

He expressed a hope that the pending bills to improve the child labor laws in North Carolina will be passed before the General Assembly adjourns.

The Virginia nine is especially anxious to make a good showing in Raleigh where Coach Tebell formerly labored. The first game of the series with State was won by the Cavaliers, 6-1, and they will be trying to duplicate the feat against the Wolfpack Thursday if possible.

questions because of the apparent simplicity of the problem presented and the general misunderstanding as to what actually takes place when bubbles burst in rising to the surface of a liquid. Most people are under the impression that splashing is due to bubbles breaking after they have passed through the liquid, but the paper showed that bubbles break at the surface of the liquid and eject particles of the liquid into the air.

Many Other Talks

Many other interesting addresses were delivered at the meetings, among them being one by Dr. O. Blockwood of the University of Pittsburgh. Dr. Blockwood estimated by an x-ray method that a gene of the fruit fly (dosophillo) was about six one millions of a centimeter in diameter.

Professor G. Darwin, grandson of Charles Darwin, spoke on "The Interaction of Radiation on Matter." The prime argument following this reading centered around the interpretation of how two material bodies could exist, one in a coordinate system of X Y Z in time T, and the second in X' Y' Z' in time T' and yet have an interpretation of their simultaneous existence. The consensus of opinion seemed to be that of a relativistic point of view and that the problem was not reduceable to a group of equations in which a connection existed between time T and T'.

Dr. L. V. Forster of the Bausch Lomb Optical company said in his address that the smallest particle of science was about one ten millionth of a centimeter.

In the electrical sections, one of the former physics students of this University, E. R. Mann, now teaching in Cornell university, read a paper on "High Resistences Made from Metallic Oxides." Mann received his M. A. degree here in 1929.

RAMSAY TRACES CAMPUS POLITICS IN RADIO SPEECH

Declares Future Leaders in State Get Training From University Political Factions.

"Students at the University of North Carolina learn the theories of political science and government from their history professors, but it is not theories alone they learn at the University. Campus politics gives them a practical slant on this business of selecting capable men to administer student government," stated K. C. Ramsay, retired president of the Publications Union Board, in his talk over WPTF yesterday in which he gave a "History of Politics at the University."

The speaker called attention to the fact that the University has sent out some of the ablest political thinkers and leaders of the state and nation. James K. Polk, twice president of the Di society, first got his taste of politics at the University. It was this taste that carried him to the highest position in the country.

Other men, alumni of the University who were prominent in campus politics before 1900, were William Rufus King, David L. Swain, John M. Morehead, Zebulon B. Vance, Charles B. Aycock, and many others.

He also mentioned a number of the twentieth century campus leaders among whom were President Frank Graham, Edward K. Graham, and Judge John J. Parker.

Beginning with the pre-World War days, Ramsay stated that campus politics was a fight between the several classes including the fraternity and non-fraternity groups. The retired president of the Publications Union Board went on to say that dur-

Di And Phi Discuss Single Bill Apiece

The Phi and Di societies met at their halls Tuesday night at 7:15, discussing one measure each.

The Phi, after much deliberation, passed the bill, Resolved: That the present prohibition act should be modified so as to legalize the sale of light wines and beers. Representatives Carmichael, Stallings, Greer, Kelly, Simons, and Brown attacked prohibition and favored the legalization of light wines and beers. Representatives Whittenton and Barnhill argued against the bill.

Speaker Haywood congratulated Representatives Atwood, Whittenton and Worth on their work on the dance committee which worked out the plans for the Phi dance given May 2.

The Di Senate discussed the bill, Resolved: That all candidates for degrees at the University be made to qualify according to a certain fixed standard in at least four sports. Senators Medford and Malone favored the resolution while Senators Dungan, Deitz, and Little spoke against the measure. The bill was defeated by a large vote.

After much discussion about the election of a treasurer for the Di, the members selected a treasurer for the coming college year. Charles G. Rose was chosen to fill this position.

At this session Winfield Blackwell and Arthur Valk were elected to membership.

COLORFUL PLANS MADE FOR FROLIC

Dances, Houseparties, and Banquets Are Set for Festive Week-end.

With the weather man promising a fair week-end, the campus is preparing to celebrate the second annual May Frolic, which will take place Friday and Saturday of this week.

An unusual brand of music will be furnished for the occasion by Emerson Gill and his Columbia recording orchestra who is now broadcasting from the Bamboo Gardens in Cleveland over station WTAM.

The festivities will be sponsored by the following fraternities: Delta Kappa Epsilon, Sigma Alpha Epsilon, Kappa Sigma, Beta Theta Pi, Zeta Psi, Sigma Nu, and Sigma Chi, and will be composed of three dances in the Tin Can, and one in Durham. The dances in Chapel Hill will be Friday night, Saturday afternoon, and Saturday night. There will be a luncheon dance at the Washington Duke hotel Saturday from 1:30 to 3:00.

The "13" Club will be hosts at a twilight dance Friday at 7:00, immediately following their banquet.

The Minotaurs will present their annual banquet Fiday night, and the Order of the Sheiks will give one Saturday night at 6:30.

Gala Week-end

Elaborate plans have been made for a gala week-end of festivities which will only be rivalled by the Finals. The Tin Can has been secured to insure ample room for dancing, and will be decorated for the occasion by Breen, Greene, and Albright, ballroom decorators. Black and white will be the motif, and the building will be divided into sections; one large space in the center for dancing, the end away from the entrance will be the tea garden, and along the left hand side upon entering will be seating space, with each fraternity represented in the Frolic having a separate section. The orchestra will be placed on the right. Evergreens will adorn the entrance.

There will be many entertainments outside the dances, including buffet suppers, swimming and horseback parties. Sigma Chi will be host at a buffet supper Saturday evening at 8:00 while Kappa Sigma will have one after the dance that night.

F. J. Gorman Finds Sentiment Of Universities Favors Labor Unions

Trade Organizer and Human Relations Institute Speaker Tells Story of His Rise in Trade Work to Position as Vice-President of National Body.

"I find the attitude of college students very favorable to labor and labor organization," Francis J. Gorman, first vice-president of the United Textile Workers, who spoke at one of the main lectures and two seminars of the Human Relations Institute in an interview yesterday.

Gorman went on to maintain that he had spoken at a number of universities throughout the country in connection with the duties of his office. At every college, he said, he was well received and students in general seemed to be greatly interested in the question of labor organization.

In the South, the Institute lecturer stated, the general attitude is favorable also. This was not true, however, several years ago; but within the last two years, there has been a marked decrease in opposition to organization, Gorman has noted.

Gorman is considered one of the leading textile organizers of the country. At present he is vice-president of the national organization of his trade, an office to which he was elected by representatives of textile workers throughout the country.

He was born in England but came to this country when thirteen and went to work in mills of Rhode Island, where he became active in the union.

When asked yesterday why he was a labor organizer, he gave the history of his connection with labor organizations. At the time he entered the mill, he said, he joined the union because it was part of his trade. He became active in the work of the union and received several honors; he was sent several times to national conventions after being concerned in a dispute and there gained national prominence. Since his election as vice-president, his work has carried him all over the country.

Reasons for Unions

Later on in the interview, Gorman pointed out the fact that mill workers join together just as do college students in their clubs, fraternities, and other social groups. This is done for two reasons, he said; the first was that it is natural for a man to band with other men of his kind and interests; and the second that the individual can obtain better advancement by group organization.

Columbia Spectator Fights For Rights Of Student Body Opinion

Northern Daily Founded in 1873 Upholds Traditions of Self Government in Questions Arising Over Campus Matters and Faculty Control.

(By Bob Woerner)

(The following is the third in series offered by the DAILY TAR HEEL as testimonial to the successful development and influence of some of the leading college daily newspapers throughout the country.)

The Columbia Daily Spectator is the only college daily in the country which employs the unusual gothic type in its heads. Few, if any, papers have done as much for their respective institutions as this publication has.

The editors of the Spectator have adopted the plan of editors of many other student papers when they have tried to crystallize that indefinite something which is vaguely spoken of as student opinion. Often they have been the pioneers in some idea which they continually put before the student body until it has come to be considered the opinion of the students themselves.

The editors of the Spectator have assumed the roles of stewards and catered to campus whims, using their columns as the medium for expression of student opinion. in a few cases, Spectator, in presenting ideals that emanate solely from its editorials, has been successful in attaining them.

Flays Other Publications

The attitude of the Spectator towards its fellow publications in the college has generally been a very critical one. Both the old Columbian, the literary magazine, and the Jester, the humorous magazine, were continuously flayed. The attitudes taken by the editorials may be characterized as fair in their general tenor, but as tending either completely to ridicule or wholeheartedly to praise the work done by other publications.

One of the greatest agitations which ever shook the Columbia campus occured when, in the fall of 1905, the authorities abolished football at Columbia. The said Spectator expressed itself in no uncertain terms as favoring the reconsideration of this drastic step. Mass meetings were called for by the paper; several petitions were signed by a majority of the student, and sent in to the officials. The matter hung fire for a year or two during which time the Spectator ran its famous "funeral number." Heavy black borders and thick inter-columnar lines gave the paper a strangely somber appearances. Two years after that saw a partial victory when inter-class football contests were permitted. Matters drifted until 1915 when the game again became a recognized college sport although it was put on trial. Finally the game was restored, and Columbia again took her place as a contestant for mythical championships.

Other important student problems which the Spectator backed were: the erection of sufficient dormitories to house a majority of the students and thus make the school more unified in spirit; the erection of a stadium to accommodate the crowds that attended the athletic contests; and the completion of some of the unfinished buildings on the campus.

Attacks Customs

Several of the editorial attacks on custom are rather humorous, and one in particular stands out among these. When the school was located at 49th street, the beginning and ending of classes was indicated by the blowing of a whistle by the janitor from the center grounds. Commenting on this an editorial in an issue of 1879 says: "This is a great nuisance for which, in this time of collegiate pro-

Staff Meeting

A special call meeting of the reportorial staff of the Daily Tar Heel will take place this afternoon at 5:00 o'clock in 104 Alumni building. All students expecting to work on the paper next year are requested to be present, as no regular tryouts are planned for next fall. The managing editor will announce a new assignment of beats. There will be beats available for fifteen new reporters at this meeting.

STUDENT COUNCIL EXPLAINS ACTION

Albright Declares New Council Will Punish Violators of Campus Code.

In order to clarify recent action of the student council, Mayne Albright, president of the student union, offers the following explanation.

"In dealing with the various cases which arise, the student council considers an offense against honor much more serious than any breach of conduct. The council considers offenses which reflect discredit upon the University to be of a more serious nature than any case which concerns the private morals of any individual student.

"The new council has, in its last two meetings, dealt with a case which involved violations of honor, and actions which were endangering the good name of the University. The action taken was the only one possible in the opinion of the council. That five students were suspended from the University in one case was a regrettable necessity. Our student government prides itself on the fact that it deals with each case on its individual merits and is not bound by written law; but for violations of the honor system, i. e. lying, cheating, and stealing, the council has but one course—suspension.

"It has come to the attention of the council that there has been some counterfeiting of dance tickets lately. The council considers an act of this kind to be in direct conflict to the principles of honor and of gentlemanly conduct, and sincerely trusts that no instance of such action will arise.

"Tentative date for administrative meetings have been set as follows: Student Activities committee, May 14; annual awards night ceremony, May 21.

"The Graham Memorial committee, which consists of students, faculty, and alumni representatives, has begun its work of organizing the student union building, and will report its work through the columns of this paper. The student union program will be the keynote of the Student Activities committee meeting this spring."

(Signed) R. M. Albright,
President Student Union.

Council Makes Stand

Since the new council has taken over the administration of student government it has been found necessary to discipline a number of students at the University for violation of the Carolina man's creed of honor and moral conduct.

This fact occasions mention at this time that the new regime does not intend to be more than extraordinarily critical of the conduct of the students but

UNIVERSITY GETS VALUABLE GIFTS FOR COLLECTION

Matthew Gilmour Donates Rare Egyptian Relics for Archaeological Display.

An unrolled and unidentified Egyptian papyrus has been presented to the University by M. P. Gilmour, it was announced yesterday by J. P. Harland of the department of archaeology.

Gilmour is a senior in the department of archaeology, where he became interested in the University's work along that line and decided to make the gift as a nucleus for a future collection.

Along with the papyrus he has given a string of beads, a "sacred beetle" (scarab) of faience, also a bronze mirror, and a piece of wood with a long mace-shaped compartment hollowed out of it. The papyrus is contained in this hollow, although the wooden receptacle may have served originally as a holder for some other object.

These articles were acquired by Gilmour's grandfather when he visited Egypt more than forty years ago.

Book of the Dead

As yet, the roll, which is several feet long, has not been unrolled; consequently, it has not been identified, but it is thought that it is a so-called "Book of the Dead."

Prior to the year 2000 B. C., magical formulae by which the deceased could escape the dangers of the next world and directions for the ba, or soul, and the sca, or the spiritual double, were written on the inside of the wooden coffin in which the mummy lay. There the formulae and directions became so lengthy that there was not

Medal Contestants Asked To Report

Seniors intending to compete in the Mangum Medal contest should see Professor George McKee in his office in 210 Murphey hall at once, so that arrangements for the preliminary contest may be made.

The Mangum Medal, which was founded by the Misses Mangum, late of Orange County, in memory of their father, Willie Person Mangum, class of 1815, and is continued by his granddaughter, Mrs. Stephen B. Weeks, and his great-grandson, Julian Turner, is awarded to the member of the senior class delivering the best oration at commencement.

The winner of the Mangum Medal in the graduating class of 1930 was John Albert Lang, now a graduate student.

Tapping Tonight

Tau Beta Pi, national engineering honorary scholastic fraternity, will tap for the second time this year at 8:00 tonight in Phillips hall. The men eligible are seniors and rising seniors.

Membership in this society is one of the highest honors which an engineering student can attain as it corresponds to the Phi Beta Kappa and Sigma Xi in other fields. The local chapter, Beta, was founded in 1928.

Infirmary List

There were but two confined to the infirmary yesterday. They were Miss Frances Hampton and Joseph T. Wilson, Jr.

The Fine Old Art of Heckling

As long as there have been politicians and stump speakers of any sort who depend upon lung power and huzzahs there have been those helpful and constructive individuals who not only practice their peculiar art upon charlatans but in circles less low-brow. In their smug or shallow complacency in themselves and the ideas they so fondly wall up within their minds they take unique pleasure in attending all public functions, seeking to impose themselves upon the speakers and audiences by asking extraneous questions aimed at embarrassing or ridiculing the speaker.

The University of North Carolina has been the breeding ground of gentlemen of an extraordinary high type. We have yet to witness Carolina men engaged in this rather uncultural but time worn practice.

Any speaker deserves a hearing on any subject. Extra-curricular addresses are purely optional. Those who rebel at either the subject matter or the speaker have that most august privilege of staying away from such meetings. There is also that altogether justifiable device of leaving the lecture hall in the event that the person holding forth there becomes too boring or too irritating; this can be accomplished in a dignified manner which is no particular reflection upon the ability of the speaker or the breeding of the auditor.

Open Forums in themselves are excellent fields of human occupation which, if seriously conducted, lay foundations for that mythical open-mindedness we have long heard heralded. Questions aimed at elucidating points relative to the subject under discussion, and asked in a fair manner are legitimate, but all too often these open forum discussions degenerate into a byplay of wits and half-wits.

Yesterday at noon a speaker was allotted time by the Human Relations Institute to be heard on a controversial subject by students enrolled here. In the midst of his address a professional representative of an opposing side interjected unnecessarily. When questions were the order of the day, he monopolized the speaker's time as well as that of students, who would have cared to question, by queries unfairly aimed at ridiculing the speaker and by making statements as to the transportation cost of wheat from Kansas City when the subject under question was the scale of wages in the textile industry.

Upon questioning the permanent secretary of the organization sponsoring the Institute, we were quite startled to learn that the management of the Institute had organized the whole affair as a result of an editorial appearing in The Daily Tar Heel Tuesday which asked for the appearance upon the same platform of speakers representing two sides of controversial questions in public and formal debate to be followed by equally formal rebuttal.

The Daily Tar Heel and the University of North Carolina student body has not or ever will (we sincerely trust) countenance such barbarous acts as heckling, and we wish now to wash our hands of such responsibility.

Reaching For The Millenium

Somehow the establishment of some sort of socialistic order seems to a great many people to be an inevitability. The tenuousness, the interdependence, the speed, the mass of things today must demand a control, an expert and intelligent control which will rise above the haphazard and unseeing competition of smaller, more selfish interests. Mr. Thomas suggested a few of the ideals of the Socialist party. Among them are the ideals of cooperation, economic security for all, honesty, openness, and peace. Mr. Thomas is a "rugged" idealist and he is making these ideals more tangible than mere nebulous fancies. Capitalism bears the brunt of his kindly belligerency.

In this connection it is interesting to try to determine what capitalism is doing toward accomplishing the aims of socialism. There are those that believe that capitalism is gradually tending towards the ends of socialism paradoxical though it might seem.

The International Chemical Combination in all of its ramifications controls almost $30,000,000,000. Dupont, Morgan, Mellon, of America, the Bosch interests in Germany, Interessen Gissel, and the Imperical Chemical interest in Great Britain hold controlling interests in practically every large business or industrial control (except Ford) in the three countries and that practically means the world. To show the scope of this control one needs but to know that it controls Kodak, Agfa, General Electric, General Motors, Fisher Bodies, Scheider, Frigidaire, R. K. O., N. B. C., the U. S. Tire Co., and so on far beyond the comprehension of even the wildest imagination. Mellon is the state, is a claim comparable to the terse yet justifiable assertion of Louis XIV, "je suis l'etat." Mellon is the government; the Imperial Chemcal interests are parliament; the Bosch interests are the Reichstag. Even in this day of depression these enormous interests have stood for high wages—the ideal of livelihood. With their interdependence, economically, and their preponderant control in their various assemblies the event of another international holocaust would be, it seems, a preposterous, suicidal impossibility. The towering mass, the pressing power of such an economic and social force has demanded of necessity precise and infinitely complex cooperation and understanding—the ideal of mutually interested organization. Why, then, isn't capitalism already socialism of a sort under a banner of a different color?

Capitalism is materialism. Capitalism is self-centered despite its occasional enlightenment. Capitalism is after production. And what has it led us to? Capitalism is accountable for the present unemployment situation. Capitalism is accountable for overproduction. Capitalism is letting one man do the work of three, the paying for words with high wages and the ignoring of the other two men who must go a-hunting for other jobs which do not exist. It may be true that capitalism is tending toward some of the ideals of socialism, but it can never reach them. It will be the socialist with his different basic philosophy who will have to interpret anew the machines that capitalism is giving us.—R.W.B.

Something For The Human Relations Institute

In general, students are too shy of their instructors, and professors do not care enough about undergraduates to desire any contact outside the classroom.

The attitude of students is based upon two things: first, a natural aloofness from what they think are his intellectual superiors and a misconception of what professors are really like when off the pedagogical dais; and, second, a fear of running against the current sentiment, which holds "booting" in such disfavor—and rightly. This misconception is, of course, not entirely the fault of students, for they frequently do not have the opportunity of becoming better acquainted with the faculty nor are they always encouraged to do so.

The student who is genuinely interested in becoming better acquainted with his instructor should have the moral backbone to weather any adverse criticism; the professors usually have the acumen to differentiate between real and superficial interest.

The professors themselves are almost as much to blame for the lack of contact. They do not wish to be bothered with their intellectual inferiors—perhaps after a number of disappointments, and prefer to seek each other's company.

Both parties have something to contribute, if these "ancient prejudices" could only be removed. Professors aren't so terrible if you get to know them, and students aren't entirely slothful intellectually. Perhaps here is another problem for the "Human Relations Institute."—A. J. S.

Columbia Spectator Fights For Rights of Student's Opinions

gress and improvement, some susbstitution should be made. The whistle is noisy, unmusical, and ought to be abolished. Besides all this, there is an old law, which positively forbids the blowing of any whistle on the college grounds; this should be taken in hand by the faculty, and the janitor should be severely punished for the non-observance of a statute. In advocating a change, we would suggest the advisibility of substituting in the whistle's stead an electric annunciator. We would call the attention of the trustees and the faculty to this suggestion, and earnestly hope that this last relic of barbarism may be forever banished from the classic halls of Columbia."

Conducts Bureaus

During the years 1914 and 1915, an interesting part of the newspaper's work consisted of the conducting of bureaus. Cut-rate tickets to athletic games were sold to the undergraduates. A regular travel bureau was instituted which arranged special tours for students to various other colleges for important athletic contests. Special trips during holidays were planned and executed, one of these to Burmuda at Christmas, another to Old Point Comfort at Easter. A special car was chartered for a trip to the Panama Pacific Exposition in 1915. Two summer tours were also conducted, one to the Thousand Islands, and the other to Alaska. It was on the Christmas trip to Burmuda that a special mid-ocean number of the Spectator was published.

At its conception, the Spectator, like most of its early contemporaries, was more of a pamphlet than a paper. Its sixteen pages were but two columns wide, and, as the headlines in current newspapers were unknown, stories were separated by bold face single line titles of one or two words blocked off by black lines. Today there are four pages of six columns each.

First Paper

The first publication at Columbia sprung from the two literary societies, Philolexian and Peithologian. These were the only two extra-curricular activities during the early eighteen hundreds which were actually organized. Since writing was their raison d'etre, it is natural that there should have been some publication growing out of them, and the first indication of student publications was a sheet of closely written foolscap. This was the Philolexian, and was especially intended to be read before a meeting of that society.

The Philolexian Observer made its debut in 1815, the same year as the previous publication, but later. It was annonomously edited and appeared about twelve times during the next four months.

The other group began its literary magazine two years later, and, instead of confining its distribution as the other had done, it was published for the entire college. Academic Relations, as it was called, confined its contributors to men attending the college. One of its editorials says: "Our essays are not confined to any particular branch of science, but include the whole of polite literature . . . If we cannot instruct, we will endeavor at least to amuse. We will strive to keep on the flowery path, nor to deviate into the thorny and rugged road. We will enter upon the vernal fields and blooming meadows of classical literature, and draw, from the sources of nature and of art, profit and delight."

Cap and Gown was published in 1868 on strictly undergraduate lines. In 1873 it was forced to ask the school of mines to subscribe and new editors were added from this department, the paper becoming Acta Columbiana. Dissention arose among the editors when one of their number on not being chosen editor for the following year favored bi-weekly publication rather than monthly issuance which then prevailed. The Spectator was begun, and in 1885 the college was so wholeheartedly behind the new publication that the Acta Columbiana was forced to combine with its eight year old off-spring.

It was not until 1902 that the paper became a daily, publishing five times a week. Only during the football season is a paper printed on Saturday.

COLORFUL PLANS MADE FOR FROLIC

STEPPING INTO A MODERN WORLD

"THE THINKER"
. . . a telephone version

The name Electrical Thinker might be applied to one unit of telephone apparatus. Technically it is known as a Sender and is brought into action each time a call is made in a panel dial central office. By means of electrical mechanism, it records or "remembers" the dialed number and routes the call to the proper line.

The steady expansion of the Bell System — in volume of calls, number of telephones and miles of wire — cannot be taken care of merely by an enlarged use of existing types of apparatus.

To serve the continually growing telephone needs of the nation, it will always be the task of Bell System men to devise, refine, perfect and manufacture new kinds of equipment such as The Thinker.

Heels Meet Cavaliers Tomorrow On Emerson

Five More Games Remain on Schedule; Carolina Favored To Take Virginia Series.

Announcement today that Carolina's home game with Duke, rained out April 25, would be made up on Emerson Field Monday afternoon, May 18, brought home the realization that the season's end is approaching for the Tar Heels.

The big series with Virginia involving a game here tomorrow and a game in Greensboro Saturday, holds the spotlight, of course, for this week. After that the Tar Heels will play but three games, all of which will be in the state championship race.

Two of the games will be with Duke, the first in Durham Saturday afternoon, May 18, and the second with Duke here the following Monday. Then N. C. State will be met at Raleigh Monday afternoon, May 20 in the season's finale.

The Tar Heels have a fine season's record of 11 wins to three losses and one tie, but showed a bad reversal of form in losing their first Big Five game to State Tuesday.

The hits continued to boom off the bats of the heavy hitting Tar Heels, eleven of them in fact, including one circuit smash and three triples, but they came out inopportunely and untimely, netting only four runs.

There were also several errors, four bunched in the third inning, in which State was presented with three runs. Coach Jim Ashmore thinks it may have been best that way, however, for he'd rather have the Tar Heels get the errors out of their systems against State than in the classic Virginia series.

The Cavaliers and the Tar Heels have been fighting it out on the diamond since 1891 in a rivalry that's older than even the Carolina-Virginia football series. Both teams stand deadlocked now at forty-two wins apiece, and Carolina is anxious to hang up its fourth straight series win and forge ahead in total wins.

George Hinton and Cecil Longest, stars of the Tar Heel mound corps, have been saved especially for Virginia, which has been doing big things of late in the Tri-State League. Hinton pitched the Tar Heels to a 6-1 win over the Cavaliers earlier this season in the first of the three game series. Virginia will probably use either their latest flash, Leo Fred, or the veteran, Brewer, and it looks like there'll be big doings when the forty-one year rivals clash here Friday and at Greensboro in the annually colorful Memorial Stadium classic Saturday.

COLLEGIANA

By THOMAS H. BROUGHTON

Upholding an ancient custom, Syracuse university students, alumni, and faculty gathered in Archbold gymnasium to do honor to the guests of the evening—the Block—(letter men of the campus) and Coach Tom Keane. A sizeable purse has been collected from former track pupils of Keane and other interested alumni which will be given to him by Raymond Barbuti, former football captain and track star. At the same time awards will be given to the outstanding track and crew men on the campus.

Frank Dixon, alias "Strings," alias "Sigma Alp," has been a follower of Kansas football history for the past twenty years and expects to be a Kansas booster at least twenty more years. Dixon is the water boy, supply keeper, and general all-round handy man. Rain, shine, or snow, "Strings" has never missed a practice.

No greater tribute can be paid "Strings" than what each member of the coaching staff thinks of him. They unanimously agree that, "We don't know what we would do without him."

Clyde Coffman, University of Kansas sophomore track star, is considered a good prospect for the 1932 Olympics. Coffman was one of the outstanding performers in the Drake Relays held recently. The youngster took second place in the pole vault, and was also a member of both the 440-yard and the 880-yard relay teams, which took first and second place, respectively.

Here's another for "Ripley." Forty-one out of fifty-six lettermen at Oklahoma A. and M. defray their own expenses. Waiting on tables seems to be the most popular form of employment, though the list of occupations range from bus driving and janitoring on to insurance salesmanship and newspaper work. One athlete and his wife act as host and hostess at one of the town's leading apartment houses. One carries papers for a livelihood and still another is a bell boy in a local hotel.

Among these are three varsity captains. Jack Baker, football captain and All-Missouri Valley conference fullback, waits on tables. Jack VanBebber, wrestling captain, works in the kitchen of the Acacia house; Alvin Jenkind, cross country captain, is employed as a waiter; Chester Dotter, football captain-elect operates his own garage; while Bobby Pearce, captain-elect of the wrestling team, is employed as janitor of the daily paper.

Will Compete

Charlie Farmer, holder of the Southern Conference record in both the 100 and 220 yard dashes, will compete in the Carolina-Penn State meet which will be held at State College, Pennsylvania, Saturday. Farmer suffered a recurrence of an old leg injury in the Southern Conference Indoor meet held here last quarter and has been on the injured list ever since. It is almost a surety that the coaches won't risk him in the 100 at Penn Saturday but if his leg responds to heavier work this week, he probably will enter the 220.

NET TEAM BEATS NEW YORK U. 8-1

Hendlin Sole Loser as Tar Heels Get Ninth Win of the Season.

The undefeated Carolina tennis team won its ninth straight victory of the season and its third of their invasion of the North, defeating New York university, 8-1.

H. H. Hendlin, former North Carolina intercollegiate champion, dropped the only loss of the match, losing to Sidney Berger, Violet No. 4, 8-6, 6-3.

Grant and Hines, aces of the Tar Heel net team easily won both their singles and doubles matches, while Ed Yeomans defeated Sidney Seligson, 7-5, 6-3, in the feature match of the afternoon.

Yeomans and Wright paired to win their doubles matches after the latter had defeated Rosenbaum, 6-4, 6-2. Hendlin, after losing his singles match, paired with Captain Graham to win the final doubles match of the afternoon after a hard fight which went three sets before the Carolinians emerged victors, 8-6, 8-10, 6-1.

The Heels engage Yale today, with matches with Brown and Harvard following in order on successive days before returning home to enter the annual Southern Conference tournament held in New Orleans, May 13 through the 16.

Summary:

Singles

Grant (C) over Harte (N. Y.) 8-6, 6-4

Hines (C) over Swaybill (N. Y.), 6-1, 6-3

Yeomans (C) over Seligson (N. Y.), 7-5, 6-3

Berger (N. Y.) over Hendlin (C), 8-6, 6-3

Wright (C) over Rosenbaum (N. Y.), 6-4, 6-2

Graham (C) over Bottaria (N. Y.), 6-4, 6-1

Doubles

Grant and Hines (C) over Harte and Swaybill (N. Y.), 6-1, 7-5

Yeomans and Wright (C) over Seligson and Bottaria (N. Y.), 6-4, 6-4

Graham and Hendlin (C) over Berger and Underwood (N. Y.), 8-6, 8-10, 6-1

Johnson Speaks Tomorrow

Dr. Mordecai Johnson, president of Howard University, the largest Negro college in the world, will speak tomorrow morning at the 10:10 session of the Human Relations Institute on the "Race Issues in Modern Society."

FARMER TO RUN AGAINST NITTANY LIONS THIS WEEK

Sprint Star, Hurt in Indoor Meet, Will Race in the 220 Saturday.

Charlie Farmer, Southern champion in both the sprints, is going to try to return to competition as North Carolina competes at Penn State Saturday.

The grand old race-horse of the Tar Heels, who have won both the last Southern Conference outdoor and indoor meets, has been out since the Indoor championships, in which a recurrence of a pulled leg muscle mowed him down in a preliminary heat.

Farmer had made a gallant effort because his team needed him, but the second preliminary heat taxed the pulled muscle too much, lay back as he did, and Farmer went down with set face.

The crowd was all with the boy who'd tied both Southern dash records last year and who'd tried so nobly, and they'll be behind him as he tries to come back this week.

Whether the leg will stand the strain of a dash like Farmer's remains to be seen. Coach Bob Fetzer thinks chances no better than 50-50, but Farmer wants to try, because he knows he won't be able to run at the Southern Conference next week unless he runs at Penn State this Saturday.

It is almost definite that the coaches won't risk him in the 100 at Penn State Saturday, but if the leg responds to heavier work this week, he may get to run a 220, but not too hard.

Besides tieing both Southern dash records and setting a 60-yard indoor mark, Farmer has run next to Simpson, Leland and Tolan in some of the country's biggest meets and rates among the nation's 10 fastest men at the distance of 220 yards.

His best times are 9.8 seconds for the hundred, 21.2 for the 220. He is a natural runner, reminding one, with his 6 feet 2 and 170 pounds, of a Kentucky thoroughbred when in full stride.

GREENSBORO BOY WILL EXPLORE IN ALASKA

Dick Douglas, 18-year-old junior at Georgetown university, is ready for another summer of adventure. Dick left school Monday for Alaska, where he will spend the warm months exploring volcano craters.

Dick, known at his home in Greensboro as Robert D. Douglas, first gained fame as one of the Boy Scouts who accompanied the Martin Johnsons to Africa, to hunt big game.

The boy in writing of his trips during off seasons, in preparation for a career as an author when he finishes college. On the coming expidition, he will join two other boys at Seattle, continuing 2,000 miles by boat to Chignic, near the tip of the Alaskan peninsula.

Father Bernard Hubbard, "the glacier priest," will act as host to the three boys. Father Hubbard, who visisted Georgetown last fall, is preceding them by seaplane, landing on the lake that fills the crater of Mt. Aniakchack, fifty miles inland from Chignik.

Young Douglas and one of the companions whom he will meet at Seattle, Kenneth Chisholm, of St. Ignatius college, both were in Alaska last summer.

TAR BABIES WIN OVER DEACONS 7-5

Brandt and Adair Lead Attack for Victors; Frankel Hurls Steady Ball.

The Tar Babies journeyed over to Wake Forest Tuesday afternoon and returned with a 7-5 verdict over the Wake Forest frosh.

Both teams collected twelve safeties each, but the Tar Babies bunched their hits to win. Six of the Carolina bingles went for extra bases, Adair leading them with two singles and the same number of doubles in five times at bat. Brandt, first baseman, slugged out a single, triple, and a home run in four attempts.

Frankel, starting pitcher for the yearlings, pitched good ball, bearing down in the pinches. Frankel allowed nine hits, only one going for extra bases, a double by Humphreys in the eighth inning. Crouch, who relieved him in the eighth, allowed three hits in the last two innings.

Mulhern, third baseman for the Deacons, and Perkins, centerfielder, led the Wake Forest attack with three singles in five trips to the plate apiece.

The frosh's greatest scoring flurry came in the seventh frame when they tallied three times on as many hits. Brandt, leading off for the Carolina club, blasted a home run off Hill to deep center field. Tatum singled. Fisher walked, both men advancing when Coxe received a life on an error. Adair's third hit of the day, a long double to left center, scored Tatum and Coxe.

CAROLINA TO BE HOSTS AGAIN FOR SCHOOLBOY MEET

Fifth Annual Running of Track Games Expected to Draw Record Field.

The annual southern interscholastic track meet will take place at Emerson Field May 16.

This year, Coach Bob Fetzer expects the greatest number of institutions to compete than ever before. Among the entrants will be: Augusta Military Academy, last year's titleholder, Woodberry Forest, Monroe A. & M., Staunton, Asheville School, Fishburne, Danville, McCallie, and Devitt Prep.

This will be the fifth running of these track games, the meet starting in 1927 when it was taken by Asheville School for Boys. Monroe A. & M. won it in 1928; Woodberry Forest in '29; and Augusta Military Academy in 1930.

The records set in this annual classic are worthy of any school boy meet. For instance, Weisker of A. M. A. ran the century in 9.8, tying the Southern Conference mark for that distance.

Other records set by these leading cinder path artists are:

Event	Time
220 yard dash	22.4
Barron (Monroe A. & M.) Stokes (Woodberry) McAinich (Staunton)
440 yard run	51.6

EVIDENCE PROVES AL CAPONE TO BE FAKE GANG LORD

Investigators Obtain Testimony Concerning Death of the Real "Scar-Face Al."

(By Bill Biesel)

Al Capone is dead!

I have documentary evidence in the vaults of the Real Detective magazine proving that the smiling good-natured "apple-blossom" now reigning as king of the underworld is no more Al Capone than I am. The publisher, J. M. Lansinger, showed me the documentary proof.

For two years now there has been an artificial scar on the face of "Scarface Al," for two years a man with ears as oval as a clam shell has been taking the place of a man whose ears tapered to a narrow lobe, for two years Giacomo Calabrese, illegitimate half brother of Al Capone has been posing as his famous dead half brother.

Brown eyes have suddenly turned clear, cold blue, a terse, hard, unfriendly character has suddenly become affable and smiling. And yes, believe it or not THE ONLY RELIABLE SET OF FINGERPRINTS, THE ONLY SET THAT COULDN'T BE "FIXED" SHOWED THAT THE REAL CAPONE IS DEAD.

Capone Shuns Lingle

Why wouldn't "Al Capone" meet his pal Alfred (Jake) Lingle assassinated Tribune reporter when Jake went all the way to Philadelphia to greet the big shot at the moment he was freed? Why did he slip out the back way when he knew Lingle was waiting for him at the front door and naturally wanted a story?

Why did Capone let a couple of Philadelphia flatties pick him up like a common hood on a charge of carrying a rod? Why did Al Capone who could put the fix on any judge this side of the Supreme Court take the rap and go to jail for a year? Why wouldn't Al see his mother and sister when they came from Chicago to see him?

Why did Capone make only one request of the prison authorities: That Frankie Rio be transferred to his cell.

You've guessed it. It wasn't Al Capone. The imposter needed a year of schooling to take the part of the famous booze baron and brothel keeper. Frankie Rio was his tutor. He didn't want to be exposed by meeting either Lingle or his mother and sister.

Investigator Finds Clues

And these are but a few of the clues uncovored by Bruce Pope, one of the investigators on the case who for over a year has been eating, sleeping, and thinking Capone.

"Al Capone was shot early in May, 1929," Pope began. "He was murdered at the instigation of Torrio near Atlantic City, N. J. I have talked with a man who was at his death bed."

"Terrible Johnny Torrio is still the undisputed king of the entire crime world. He is stronger than he ever was during his entire twenty-five amazing years under Colisimo and as millionaire gang lord in Chicago.

"Our investigators have been watching Torrio's movements for months. We have checked telegrams and telephone calls. We know where he is at this moment.

Capone Put on the Spot

"Just as Torrio outgrew Colisimo, so Capone outgrew Torrio. This, of course, is known to the entire world. What is not known is that Torrio finally got Capone and substituted his illegitimate half brother whom he had imported from Naples for that purpose. The year in prison was framed to take care of any changes that might be noticed.

"The present 'Al Capone' is at the beck and call of Torrio."

This quietly told tale which staggers the imagination with its significance means another ten years war in Chicago according to Pope and the four other investigators on the staff of Real Detective Magazine whose June issue out today starts the six part story of the great Capone Hoax.

The Campus Calendar

Spanish Club

A. K. Shields, of the Romance language department, will present an illustrated lecture to the Spanish club Friday evening at 7:30. The club will meet in 314 Murphey instead of the Y. M. C. A.

Jewish Students

Rabbi Freund will hold office on the second floor of the Y. M. C. A. today and Saturday between the hours of 2:30 and 5:30 for the purpose of interviewing Jewish students at the University.

Physics Department To Present Theses

Four papers will be presented by the physics department at the annual meeting of the North Carolina Academy of Sciences which will convene in Raleigh on May 8 and 9.

The first of the papers has been written by Henry zurBurg and Dr. O. Stuhlman of the physics department on "Electrodeless Discharge Characteristics of Hydrogen and Nitrogen." Dr. Stuhlman read this paper in Washington at a meeting of the National Academy of Science.

Dr. K. Fussler will present a paper on "The Electrical Resistence of the Human Body." The body of this work was done by Dr. Fussler in the University of Iowa where he taught previous to coming here.

The third paper will be a mathematical discussion by Dr. Otto Stuhlman.

The last paper to be presented entitled "The Motion of Bursting Bubbles Rising through Liquids," by Dr. Stuhlman and C. J. Craven, a senior, will be a similar paper read last year at the meeting.

Chemical Fraternity Entertains At Inn

The Alpha Chi Sigma, chemical fraternity, entertained a number of faculty members at a formal banquet in the Carolina Inn Saturday evening at 7:00 o'clock. Frank Thomas acted as toastmaster for the occasion.

Dr. J. M. Bell, dean of the school of applied science, made the address of the evening. He chose as a subject the advantages of fraternity life to the average college student. The main advantage, according to Professor Bell, is the contact a fraternity man has with his fraternity brothers. Friendships formed in social organizations are much more intimate and profound than those ordinarily formed outside the fraternity, said Dr. Bell. After Bell's talk each of the professors made short talks.

Guests at the dinner were: Dr. F. P. Brooks, Dr. F. H. Edmister, Dr. A. S. Wheeler, Dr. F. K. Cameron, Dr. J. M. Bell, Dr. A. M. White, all of the chemistry department, and Dr. H. M. Taylor, of the Duke medical school.

Graduating Seniors

All seniors who expect to graduate in June are earnestly requested to make their application at the registrar's office as soon as possible.

LIBRARY EXHIBITS EGYPTIAN RELICS

The current display in the main lobby of the general library deals with Egyptian writing materials and art. The University library has just received from Cairo, Egypt, a shipment of Egyptian writing materials and papyri for the Hanes foundation for the study of the development and origin of the book. This material was purchased for the Hanes foundation by Dr. Wallace E. Caldwell of the history department who is spending a year in the Mediterranean countries.

This new collection contains several fragments of papyri written in both Greek and Egyptian characters, dating as far back as 1500 B. C. One of the most interesting articles is a leather roll from a Jewish synagogue at Cairo containing the Book of Esther written throughout in Hebrew characters. A pen and ink holder of white metal designed to be thrust through the sash of the scribe so that he might have the tools of his trade always handy has a sheath to contain the reed pen used in Egypt and a small ink well with an ink-tight top.

Another exhibit case is devoted to examples of Egyptian painting, sculpture, and pottery. The colored reproductions of Egyptian wall painting display their fragile character and highly conventionalized drawing. Six illustrations from the Carnegie art collection illustrate Egyptian artists' ability with the type of small pottery sculpture known as faience. This type of pottery is characterized by its brilliant and transparent glaze which gives it the glittering quality and color of jewels.

Eighty Students Compete In Typewriting Contest

The finals of the state high school typing and short-hand contest were conducted in the Tin Can Saturday morning, May 2. Eighty students from nineteen schools competed. The results follow: Typewriting: Class A, Durham, first and second; Class B, Charlotte, first, Raleigh second; Class C, Charlotte, first, Winston-Salem, second; Class D, Winston-Salem, first and second.

The new North Carolina high school champion typist is Miss Ruth Martin of Charlottee, who typed sixty-two words per minute. The accuracy contest was also won by a Charlotte girl, Miss Lucile Statin, who typed sixty-seven words per minute, making only four errors.

The winners in the short-hand contest follow: Beginning team, Durham, first, Kinston, second; advanced team, Durham, first, Winston-Salem, second.

CARDS FOR FINALS MAY BE OBTAINED THIS WEEK

Cards for finals may be obtained any time this week, it was announced yesterday by Will Yarborough, from him at the S. A. E. House. The assessment for members will be six dollars.

Seniors, who expect to attend finals and who are not returning next year may obtain cards for twelve dollars this week only. After Friday no cards will be given out except to members who have previously paid their yearly dues.

KOCH'S CLASS HEARS RUSSELL'S NEW PLAY

A play giving the actor more latitude than the dramatist usually allows him has been written by Phillips Russell and was read to Professor Koch's playwriting class yesterday.

COLLEGIANA

When confronted by the Yale Daily News with a request for comment on tennis as played in colleges, William T. Tilden, former National Singles champion, replied that he had formulated definite ideas on the subject.

He stated that it would be a great advantage to college tennis if a first class player was engaged to fill the position of a thoroughly experienced coach. A college tennis coach should be able to take on any member of his squad and defeat him decisively. He continued.

He contended that it was an exceedingly bad thing for a tennis player to be able to beat his coach, saying that the vast majority of coaches that he had encountered could be easily beaten by half the members of their team.

Columbia has followed a good lead; it has decided not to differentiate between one sport and another in the awarding of the varsity insignia. What matters whether an undergraduate gives his best in a football game or a tennis match? He should receive the best award that his school can give him.

Recently the Daily Californian of the University of California picked their own Golden Bears as favorites to win the dual meet with Southern California. In retaliation the Daily Trojan of the University of Southern California in a late issue took up each event separately, picked the winners in each, and found that three Trojans would emerge victors by a 76-55 margin. Next the Stanford paper will probably pick St. Mary's to win the annual Golden Bear-Trojan meet. At least they should all get together when picking the winner.

PAUL GREEN WILL MAKE POETRY CONTEST AWARD

Professor Paul Green, of the department of philosophy, will judge a contest sponsored by the South Carolina poetry society. Several volumes of poetry by prominent southern authors have already been submitted for the contest.

The award, which is considered an important one in American letters, will be announced soon by Mr. Green.

RAMSAY TRACES CAMPUS POLITICS IN RADIO SPEECH

ing the past decade there has been a trend toward definitely outlined party government and toward the Australian ballot system of voting.

Tracing the campaigns from the one conducted in 1921 to the most recent one the speaker mentioned the leaders of each campaign, calling attention to the birth of the All-Campus party in the election of 1931.

This party, strictly speaking, was ten years old up to that time secret methods of organization were used. The name All-Campus Party, according to Ramsay, is a correct name for the group as the organization reaches every sector of the campus. He brought in the work of the Non-Fraternity party which was in opposition to the All-Campus Party.

The overwhelming victory of the All-Campus group in the last election was mentioned and the speaker stated that the cause of it was strong organization and the sound principles for which it stood. John Lang of Carthage, who is president of the North Carolina federation of students and treasurer of the national student organization, was the central figure in this campaign.

Concluding his speech, Ramsay stated that Carolina student leaders of the past few years will no doubt be governors, senators, and even presidents, since the majority of them have proved themselves true democrats and leaders.

UNIVERSITY GETS VALUABLE GIFTS FOR COLLECTION

enough room on the inner walls of the coffin, and consequently they came to be written on rolls of papyrus dating from 2000 B. C.

In the time of the Empire, they attained great length, averaging thirty feet and longer. Several scenes also appear with the text, for example, that which shows the trial before Osiris, the Egyptian god of the underworld. Although its exact nature is not yet known, it is possible that the roll presented to the University is one of this type.

Papyrus to Be Unrolled

A friend of Mr. J. P. Harland is assistant curator of the department of Egyptian Art at the Museum of Fine Arts in Boston. He is going to have the papyrus unrolled, a tedious process requiring great care and facilities which this University does not possess.

Dr. L. R. Wilson, director of the University library, is arranging for the financing of the piece of work, and on its return he will exhibit it in the library, probably with the Hanes collection, as it illustrates writing. Gilmour, however, wishes it to be considered as a part of a future archaeological collection.

that it will severely punish any breach of the honor system or campus code.

Two Cases Tried

The secretary of the student council, according to the policy outlined by the president of the student body, has submitted a report to the Daily Tar Heel of the action taken by the council at their last meeting.

Case No. 29 (cont.): Mr. X., a senior, was indefinitely suspended from the University for having a woman in his dormitory room, and for lying to the council in reference to this case.

Case No. 29 (cont.): Mr. X., and Mr. Y, a senior and a freshman, were suspended from the University for one quarter for having lied to the council in connection with this case.

UNIVERSITY GIVEN WOOD STATUE OF WALTER RALEIGH

Gift of Owen Hill Kenan Is Rare Carving of State Colonizer.

The University was the recent recipient of a life-size statue of Sir Walter Raleigh through the generosity of Colonel Owen Hill Kenan, of the class of 1894. Colonel Kenan, who makes his home in Kenansville, and New York City, was recently attracted by the statue at a public sale and purchased it.

"It is unnecessary in this section of the country to emphasize the debt of the state of North Carolina to Raleigh and the fitness of the fact that this statue has finally been secured by the University of one of the commonwealths so closely related to the centre of his activities in America," says Dr. George Coffin Taylor, of the University English department, in an article in the May issue of the Alumni Review.

Statue Not on Exhibit

As yet the statue has not been placed on exhibit. It is in the library, but the left foot is cracked in such a way that it will not stand. Donald Coney of the library staff thinks it will be placed in the North Carolina room on the first floor. It will not be placed there, however, until some means of support has been devised.

The following description of the statue is given in the latest Alumni Review: "This elaborate, early seventeenth century carving is from a solid pine log. The superb carving is full life-size, in a costume of the period, with ruffed collar and cuffs and bodice trimmed with baline motif. Robes ornament the neck, from which hangs a decoration of the Cross of Malta. There is evidence of a master hand in the remarkable modeling, and the statue is unquestionably of the famous school of Grindling Glibbons."

FRENCH ETCHINGS TO BE DISPLAYED

Exhibit in Smith Building Will Include Pictures of Old Sections of Paris.

Students of French and anyone interested in France should find a bit of the charm of old Paris reflected in the exhibit of French etchings being displayed in the lounge of the graduate club today, tomorrow and Sunday by Ralph Lyon and Cecil Abernethy, graduate students in the University.

Consisting of the work of Donnat, Tournier, Lambrat, and Victor Valery the display represents four outstanding French etchers who have gone into the quainter sections of Paris for their inspiration. Street scenes, artistic gateways, ancient cathedrals, and even the boulevard cafes are here portrayed by Parisian artists who know Paris in all her moods.

Considered Beautiful

Extraordinary in their grace and delicacy of line, several of these etchings are considered to be among the most beautiful ever exhibited at the University. Some of them are marvelously tinted; Tournier's "Cabaret du Lapis Agile" and Donnat's

INSTITUTE MEN'S VIEWS CONFLICT ON MILL TOPICS

Different Sides to Textile Industry Are Presented by Geer And Gorman.

Two opposite points of view regarding labor in the textile mills of the South were presented Wednesday before the Institute on Human Relations.

The speakers were Francis S. Gorman, international first vice-president of the United Textile Workers, who spoke at the morning session, and Ben Geer, chief executive of the Judson Mills, of Greenville, South Carolina, and retiring president of the American Cotton Manufacturers association, who spoke at Wednesday night's session.

Views Conflict

Mr. Gorman declared that until recently textile workers in the South had received but little consideration, that they were the victims of long hours and low wages, that the labor unions had been grossly misrepresented, and that the hope for the workers in the future will depend on educated leadership capable of representing labor's interests in the best possible manner.

Asserting that he had no quarrel with any man differing with him in his views, "provided he's honest in his opinion," Mr. Geer made a plea that the public should not judge the textile industry by its deficiencies but "by our attitudes toward our problems and the controversial aspects of these problems. You don't judge an individual by his weaknesses and deficiencies," he declared, "but rather by his attitude toward his weaknesses and deficiencies, for if he recognizes his shortcomings and works at them, the chances are for improvement."

"The textile manufacturers recognize their deficiencies and problems and are progressively solving them in the way that is commended by the people," he said.

Quotes Wage Statistics

Mr. Gorman in his address said that a survey over the past two years showed that the average wage of the textile worker on the basis of a fifty-five hour week was twelve dollars.

"Some manufacturers have taken steps toward relieving the situation by curtailing night work for women and minors," he said, "but the real relief will come when the workers organize and choose as their leaders

FINALS PROGRAM NOW COMPLETE

Guy Lombardo Will Play for Six Dances Sponsored by German Club.

Six dances and a concert will be given at Finals, it was announced yesterday by the German club. Guy Lombardo and His Royal Canadians will play for the entire set in the Tin Can and for the concert in Memorial hall. The first dance will begin at 9:30 Tuesday evening, June 9, and will continue until 1:00 o'clock.

There will be three dances Wednesday and two Thursday. The concert will take place Thursday afternoon for two hours during which Lombardo will play request numbers.

The commencement ball managers and marshalls will have their figure Wednesday night. Thursday night the regular German Club figure will take place with officials of the club and members of the old and new executive committees participating.

Cards for Finals and for the concert are being distributed this week. Members of the club who secure cards this week will be given cards which will admit the member and his escort to the concert. Concert cards obtained after this week will be for single admissions and will be sold for one dollar each. Finals and concert cards for members may be obtained from Will Yarborough, treasurer, at the S. A. E. house immediately after lunch and dinner today.

Quartet to Broadcast

A string quartet composed of Arlindo Cate, Bob Barnett, James Pfohl, and Thor Johnson will present a program of popular and semi-classical selections tonight at 7:30 over WPTF.

No Chapel

There will be no regular Friday chapel for the school of commerce freshmen this week.

SENIORS PLAN TO WEAR BEER SUITS

Senior Week Program Offers Many Honors to Graduating Men.

The senior week committee has just announced their plans for the week of May 18-25. The age-old tradition in vogue at Princeton of having the seniors wear beer suits has migrated south and will be adopted by the university seniors.

Pat Patterson, president of the senior class, has announced that not only men students but also co-eds are to have the privilege of wearing this novel regalia. Each suit will have a large maroon '31 sewed on the back of the coat. Orders for these suits may be placed at Randolph-MacDonald's clothing store at any time during the entire week.

Free shows at the Carolina theatre through the courtesy of Mr. E. Carrington Smith, free drinks at Pritchard-Lloyd's drug store, and other similar honors are planned for the seniors during that week.

The committee which has arranged the program for senior week is composed of Clyde Dunn, chairman, Charles DeWolfe, Fred Ferguson, Bill Lindsay, Bert Haywood, Will Yarborough, and Pat Patterson.

Senior Class Invitations

The committee in charge of orders for senior invitations reports that less than half of the members of the senior class have put in orders. All orders must be in this week. Orders may be placed in the lobby of the Y. M. C. A. or at Pritchard-Lloyd's drug store. Orders may also be given to John Idol and Ed Hamer.

Memorial Exercises

President Frank P. Graham is scheduled to speak at 8:00 o'clock Sunday night, May 10, in Gerrard hall, at a union service of all churches, as the local observance of Confederate Memorial Day.

Negro Educator

LASKI DISCUSSES DEMOCRACY RULE IN UNITED STATES

Weil Lecturer Delivers First of Series of Addresses on Citizenship.

"In the period since the World War, the attack on democratic government has assumed wider proportions than at any time since 1848," Harold J. Laski, professor of political science in the London school of economics of the University of London, who is this year visiting professor in the Yale law school, declared in an address last night before the University's Institute on Human Relations.

Weil Lecturer

Professor Laski was delivering the first of the annual series of Weil lectures on citizenship, which are this year being made a feature of the Institute's program. The lectures were endowed in 1915 through the generosity of the families of Sol and Henry Weil of Goldsboro.

In his prefatory remarks Professor Laski, who is not given to flattery, took occasion to say that in England the University of North Carolina is regarded as one of the half dozen leading institutions in America.

The morning speaker on yesterday's program of the Institute was Ben E. Geer, chief executive of the Judson mills, of Greenville, South Carolina, and retiring president of the American Cotton Manufacturers association, who criticized what he described as "Intimidation methods" employed by labor unions in causing strikes.

Cites Result of War

Describing the attack on democratic government since the war, Professor Laski said it was due in part to "definite dissatisfaction with the results of the war, and in part it is the consequence of profound industrial changes to which modern institutions have not yet had time or opportunity to adapt themselves.

"It is, moreover, certain," he said, "that the negative state of the nineteenth century cannot solve the problems of the modern time."

These are so profound in their complexity that they involve not only collectivist action within the state, but also organized international action without.

Universal Suffrage

Universal suffrage, he said, means satisfying wider de-

FOUR CHOSEN IN SPRING TAPPING OF TAU BETA PI

Honorary Engineering Fraternity Selects Two Professors And Two Students.

Four men were tapped last night by the Tau Beta Pi honorary engineering fraternity, in Phillips hall. The men taken into the organization were Thorndike Saville, professor of hydraulic and sanitary engineering; John E. Lear, professor of electrical engineering; E. O. Bryant; and D. G. Robbins.

Thomas P. Noe, instructor in civil engineering, spoke to the group and discussed the economic and socialogical problems that confront engineers of today. He pointed out that engineers have been blamed for much of the economic trouble, although they are not responsible entirely. Mr. Noe closed his talk by advising engineers to take advantage of all new inventions, so as to further engineering progress.

Membership an Honor

Membership in this fraternity carries with it a distinct honor, and to become a member a student must have qualities of leadership, fellowship, scholarship, and character. The student must show an interest in engineering and make at least a Phi Beta Kappa average in his work.

The Beta chapter of Tau Beta Pi is one of three honorary fraternities on the campus, the other two being the Sigma Xi, honorary scientific research society, and Phi Beta Kappa. The first Tau Beta Pi chapter was organized at Lehigh University in 1885, and since that time more than sixty chapters have been established in the colleges and universities of the country. The University of North Carolina chapter was organized in 1928, and last night's iniation was the sixth in its history.

DINNER DANCE TO START WEEK-END SOCIAL FUNCTIONS

"13" Club's Annual Dinner Will Take Place Tonight in the Carolina Inn.

Starting the social festivities of the week end, the "13" Club, sophomore order, will give a dinner dance in the Carolina Inn ballroom tonight between the hours of six and nine.

The dance is an annual affair following the annual Virginia-Carolina baseball game here. The dinner proper, for the members of the club will last from six to seven-thirty. Following this, invited guests will attend the affair.

Gill to Play

Emerson Gill and his Columbia recording orchestra will furnish music for the occasion which will be the first part of the elaborate May Frolic.

The officers of the club are Bert L. Haywood, Chi Phi, president, and Ted Newland, Phi Delta Theta, secretary and treasurer. Willis Henderson, Sigma Nu, chairman, Nut Parsley, Sigma Alpha Epsilon, John Blue, Pi Kappa Alpha, and William Draper, Beta Theta Pi, are on the committee for the dance.

The official chaperones will be President Frank P. Graham, Miss Kate Graham, Dr. and Mrs. W. S. Bernard, Dr. and

British Professor Advocates Course Examination Abolition

Dr. Harold J. Laski Says That English School System Is More Advanced Than America's, the Difference Being Frequent and Needless Examinations.

Abolition of course examinations in American universities, and the extension of the "dole" system to the United States, were advocated by Dr. Harold J. Laski, British economist and world famous authority on political science, in an interview yesterday.

Comments on Colleges

Asked what differences he noticed in the American university system from the English, Laski stated that he believed too much time is wasted in lectures and frequent, useless examinations. "American students are more interested in taking notes on lectures than in studying the information collected," he stated.

Dr. Laski, professor of political science in the London school of economics of the University of London, now a visiting professor of the law school at Yale university, stated that the English school system is far more advanced than the American system. He pointed out that the main drawback to American universities and differences between the two systems is the frequent and needless examinations given to students.

Discusses Unemployment

Declining to call the present English system of unemployment relief the "dole system" as it is popularly dubbed, Dr. Laski favored the name of "social insurance." "Social insurance is inevitable in the United States," he stated, "and it is the best solution to the present situation."

"There are at present, some six million unemployed in this country. No English party would give it up now, for it has proved exteremly successful in England. Investigations have shown that the desire of persons benefiting from the system to evade work is infinitesimal. Acceptance of the dole does not show any deterioration in the character of the individual."

Commenting on the recent action of the Labor party on the dominion status of India and the success of the round table conference, Laski believes that both parties in the controversy have been satisfied. Lines laid down by the conference, he said, should prove effective and are the best solution of the problem.

A Well Dirge

In next week's New Republic, there will appear an article by a Yale senior, William Harlan Hale, entitled "A Dirge For College Liberalism." In this one short contribution, Mr. Hale has, with remarkable precision and conciseness, correctly analysed the condition of liberalism existing in the colleges and universities, but more than that, he predicts the sorry plight that such a stern conservatism will inevitably lead to, unless some new means are used to resusicate the dead undergraduate.

The writer restricts his observations to the colleges with which he is most familiar, namely those of the Big Three in the East—Yale, Harvard, and Princeton, but his remarks upon those schools can apply most aptly to this campus as well. He states, and we believe with accuracy, that "to be a college man today, is to be a collared conservative." Certainly if we are not conservatives, we are nothing at all. Which is worse than being conservative or reactionary; we are merely apapthetic to the entire issues that are so important in the political and social-economic life of the nation. We have lost that interest in things that savoured of change, progress and development, however radical, or the more radical, the better, and in place for that dress and deportment. He finds that this characteristic is deftly illustrated in matters of dress.

But after all, the criterion of conservatism is not to be found in dress, and the young Yale contributor realizes this, because he states that "in his publications, through which he expresses himself most directly, the Eastern undergraduate reaches the summit of his acquiesance." And the author goes on to point out how the leading college newspapers, with the exception of the Harvard Crimson, have continually placed the soft-pedal on controversial matters, and centered its activities on excellent reporting of athletic and social events. The various liberal, strange at times, often freakish, but sometimes well-written literary magazines that periodically crop up in the colleges, have all languished and are already in a comatose state, or are fast becoming so. We know on this campus, at the University of North Carolina, that the various liberal clubs, international groups of one type or another, have met not with organized or guerrilla opposition, but with apathy. The students were not, and certainly are not interested in these efforts at thought upon matters removed from athletics, or such. Anything different, new or unlike to that which they are accustomed, meets with sneers, laughter, and deriding sniffs. We are true conservatives.

As to the result of this polite disinterestedness, we can do no better than to reprint the last two paragraphs of this excellent read.

"Is this suspended state of college liberalism a sign of a new tendency in American society? One wonders. Can one fit it in with the delicate and conservative classicism of many young writers, or perhaps with the somewhat Victorian fashions now dominant in women's attire, or with a dozen hints one hears of a return to form and formality, to decency and old-fashioned aristocracy? One wonders. They will run into trouble, these young classes of bankers. They will become more and more isolated from the new world and its movements. And as for leaders, they will produce no improvement over Coolidge and Hoover.

Perhaps, indeed, their hands are not fated to hold the destiny of the future. Possibly the center of power will have moved away from them, and the real leaders come from a far different sector of society."—F. M.

"One Will Always Stand Out"

So long as this world is inhabited there will be those persons who are seeking the easy road to success, who are trying to get something for nothing, who waste their time on "30 day wonder" advertisements, and who are always on the lookout for a paved road to the top without detours. You find them in every vocation—whether law, medicine, business, trade, or even education. No matter where you turn you will be confronted with them.

On this campus, and on every campus, they are the pupils who are usually found on the front row of the lecture room, who make sophisticated remarks about the questions of their fellow-classmates, and who have daily problems to discuss with the professor after class. Some of them even go so far as to make a personal study of the idiosyncrisies of the professor so that he may bring up a question which the instructor will be "nutty" on.

These class-room "shines," however, are not to be conflicted with the students who ask questions for the sole purpose of securing a further understanding of the subject. Some of these happen to choose to sit on the front seat in order to get all that the professor has to say, but in no other way may they be compared to the "front-seaters" who make a special effort to sit near the instructor to make a good mark.

Sad to say some of these "booters" usually are skillful enough in "pulling the wool" over the eyes of the teachers to such an extent that they make the best marks in the class. It is quite often that such accidents are allowed to pass, and the schemers go on about their courses contriving more plans with which to trick the professor.

At graduation the "bootlicks" are not only hurting themselves by getting a diploma which they have not rightfully earned, but they are bringing disgrace to their fellow-classmen. They are taking something which they have gotten under false pretense, while their class mates receive the same reward for four years of hard work.

The fault lies in the faculty. Until they are able to distinguish between these two classes of students, this practice will continue—to the detriment of the guilty students as well as those who do their work from day to day.—C. G. R.

A Senator On Trial

The recent action taken by the federal court judges to impound the ballots of the 1930 North Carolina senatorial election, although declarcd illegal by Governor Gardner, will lead to no small controversy before it is finally completed. Unless the question is definitely settled by the time of the next Congress, it will have to be decided upon the floor of Congress.

The mere fact that there is even the slightest doubt as to the fairness of his election will place Senator Bailey in such a position in the eyes of his fellow congressmen that all of his actions thenceforth would have to be entirely without blemish before they will be favored by the Senate. It is quite regrettable that a man of Senator Bailey's character and calibre must be stigmatized from the first of his senatorial career. Regardless of the fact that he might be declared innocent of the charge, the possibility of crooked dealings on his part will be remembered for years to come.

As we have once said, it is regrettable that such an accusation is brought against a man, whose future as a civil officer depends on the outcome of this charge. If he is guilty he, of course, will be given his just reward, but in the event of his innocence, which we believe to be the case, he will be unfairly black-marked.

It is our contention, therefore, that before this charge should have been made public, it should have been secretely investigated. Had this been done a possible innocent man would not be brought before the public in a false light and would not have been unjustly accused of acts which he undoubtedly did not commit.—C. G. R.

Education Vs. Athletics

Collegians have long been accused of concentrating scholarly pursuits in the field of football, baseball, tennis, and a dozen or so other sports. Writers and self-styled educators have bemoaned the fate of the class room and library forsaken for the athletic field, but an editorial-cartoon which appeared recently in a Chicago newspaper and has since been reprinted in numerous publications throughout the country, repudiates this theory.

In one corner of the cartoon stands a huge sign board with the head line "Educational Announcement" and "University of Chicago, After Years of Study, Inaugurates New Educational Program. Moss Grown Traditions and Customs Discarded. An Effort to Justify the Time and Money Spent in College Work. Makes Learning an Opportunity Rather Than a Compulsion." About this bulletin board is gathered a huge crowd of people. In the lower right hand corner is placed a similar sign, but with the inscriptions "College Athletics Announcement" and "University of Chicago Team Ends Season at Bottom of Big Ten." A bare handful of partially interested spectators survey this.

There is no doubt that athletics has become an important feature in the life of the average collegian today, but the significance of the huge crowd surveying the educational announcement in the cartoon indicates that American youth is not over-emphasizing athletics and similar extra-curricular activities. There are just as many Phi Beta Kappa men today as there were thirty years ago, and many of these are football captains and stars in many fields of sport.—D. S.

MOORE BRYSON

The recent tapping reminded me that I had a copy of an old Yellow Journal in my trunk so I got it out and read it over. I am almost tempted to write another Gilden Fuzz, but remembering the fate of the last one who attempted such a venture, I think that it will be best for me to continue in my same placid manner.

Wednesday some of the law students in an attempt to rag Malone hollored "Ba-a-a" at him while he was walking with Martha Delaney. Just at the time the noise began "Rip" Slusser walked across the campus with the ribbon signifying his recent pledging to Golden Fleece pinned on his coat. "Rip" took the "Ba-a-a" as a joke on him and ducked his head and hurried on to class.

Speaking The Campus Mind

Lest there be some misunderstanding as to the attitudes taken by various persons at Mr. Gorman's seminar on Tuesday morning I should like to say a word in explanation.

I feel sure that everyone present would agree with the statement that the spirit evidenced by Mr. Geer, Mr. Gorman, and the audience was most fair and impartial—applause being accorded to both speakers and never anything but the most genial sort of laughter.

The twelve o'clock session was specifically of a seminar nature. The latter part was specifically devoted to questions and answers which should quite naturally cause a bit of debate. Mr. Gorman made a statement which Mr. Geer felt should be challenged since he felt that it involved an unjust accusation of vital importance against employers and that the wrong impression would be left in the minds of those in the audience.

Those who attended Mr. Geer's lecture Wednesday evening must have been impressed with his fair and sincere attitude as well as with the genial attitude of fair play shown by the entire audience. Also it will be recalled by those attending that Mr. Gorman took up just as much of the audience's time questioning Mr. Geer as Mr. Geer had taken in the morning seminar questioning Mr. Gorman. Please do not misunderstand me. I do not think that time was wasted. In fact this afforded the most fascinating part of the evening's program. I feel sure that the audience much preferred to have the time used in this way than to have it used by individuals asking many questions—often of real significance but very often of more personal interest and less general interest than those brought up in the discussions entered into by Mr. Gorman and Mr. Geer—both of whom are most worthy representatives of their respective sides. We only wish that all persons connected in any way with the respective sides would maintain as wholesome and friendly an attitude toward problems arising as do these two able leaders.

House Will Address Boy Scout Council Saturday

Mr. R. B. House, executive secretary of the University, will speak in the Duke university stadium Saturday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock. At this time 500 boy scouts from this section of the state will assemble for the Occoneechee council round-up for boy scouts.

The council will begin at 2:00 and continue until 4:00 o'clock. Contests in all scout maneuvers are to take place.

Heels Meet Virginia In 'Annual Classic'

Carolina Seeks Tenth Straight "Clean Sweep"

Shields, Longest, and Hinton to Divide Mound Duty in 2-Game Series With Cavaliers.

Carolina will meet Virginia this afternoon in the eighty-seventh game between the two institutions. Of that number, both the Cavaliers and the Tar Heels have each carried off forty-two victories with two games ending in a deadlock.

This year the Tar Heels will be favored to make a clean sweep of the series, Coach Ashmore's charges having already taken a 6-1 decision at Charlottesville earlier in the season. This season the Cavaliers have enjoyed, or perhaps suffered, one of the worst seasons within the last decade. Virginia has won only two games, victories over Harvard and N. C. State, meanwhile losing contests to Yale (2), Princeton (2), Virginia Military Institute (2), Dartmouth, Washington and Lee, North Carolina, Virginia Tech, and Maryland. In these games the Cavaliers have had their share of bad luck, dropping several of these contests by one run.

Since the last trip that the Tar Heels made to the Cavalier stadium, the Old Dominion nine has uncovered two real finds in Buck Poss, catcher, and Leo Fred, pitcher.

Poss, also the varsity left tackle, has played in only three games but is hitting at an .800 clip, having knocked two home runs in the last game with V. M. I.

Leo Fred, sophomore sensation, has won half of the Virginians' victories—a 6-1 decision over the hard hitting Doakmen from N. C. State. Only last Tuesday, Carolina dropped a 7-4 decision to the Raleigh outfit.

The fact that the Virginia state track championships will be held at Lexington, Saturday, will deprive Virginia of the services of one of the sweetest right fielders in the Old Dominion state, Pug Bryant. The slugging rightfielder will have won letters in four major sports at the end of the school year. Pug has won monograms in boxing, football, baseball, and is one of the leading scorers on the track team. Bryant, like Leigh Williams of W. and L., hurls the discus between innings, with great success so far.

The Old Dominion nine arrived in town late last night with sixteen players in tow. They are: Buck Poss and William Brenner, catchers; Frank Sippley, first base; Harry Steinberg, second base; Clarence Dent, short stop; Ben Pender, third base; Sam Lee, Cooper Dawson, Roger Charles, Leslie Cheshire, and Lewis, outfielders; Ward Brewer, George Fletcher, Leo Fred, Bob Townsend, and Andrew Peters, pitchers.

Sidelights

By Phil Alston

Tomorrow will see Chapel Hill practically deserted, all because N. C. C. W. and Greensboro college are going to have open house for the visiting collegians. Of course, there's going to be a ball game too, but that seems to have been more or less incidental to most of us for the past several years. But this ball game is not really so unimportant after all. When two old rivals like Carolina and Virginia get together in any sort of a contest, something exciting may happen at any moment and probably will. The Virginians have been trying to win a baseball game from the Tar Heels for several years now without any success, and it is always interesting to watch one team try to break a jinx, while the other team tries to prolong its string of victories.

The Tar Heels have been playing good ball this season, with such boys as Henry House, Tom Blythe, "Smokey" Ferebee, and Paul Dunlap standing ready to slam one out of the immediate vicinity at the first opportunity, they present a team that can do things if necessary. Of course, little spells of absent-mindedness on the base paths, such as occurred here against N. C. State earlier in the week, don't make watching them perform any more enjoyable, but things like that happen every now and then to almost any team, and needn't be looked upon as criminal.

The American fight public is scheduled to find itself in a state of great bewilderment this summer when there will be two heavyweight champions, both with apparently perfect claims to the championship. With Jimmy Johnston promoting the Sharkey-Carnera match and Madison Square Garden promoting the Schmeling-Stribbling battle, both for the world's championship, things are going to be rather complicated. Maybe the high moguls of boxing remembered that the fans didn't seem to like the idea of not having any champion at all following Tunney's retirement, and are trying to make up for it by giving us two at the same time.

TO LEAD TAR HEELS AGAINST VIRGINIA

Pictured above are the veteran members of the 1931 Tar Heel baseball team who will bear the brunt of the Carolina attack in the eighty-seventh game of what has become the South's oldest continuous baseball classic. Shields, veteran pitcher, defeated the Cavaliers, last year, 6-1, and will be ready Saturday in case he is needed.

TRACKMEN CLOSE SEASON AT PENN STATE SATURDAY

Jones Expected to Give Rekers Great Run in Mile; Farmer to Enter Final Dual Meet.

The Carolina Tar Heels, Southern Conference track champions and eleven times winners of the State championship, will leave here today for State College Pennsylvania where they will meet the Nittany Lions of Penn State tomorrow afternoon in their seventh dual meet of the year. The Tar Heels chalked up a 70 1-2 to 55 1-2 win over the Lions here last year, but indications are that this year's battle will be much closer.

Last year the feature event of the meet was the one mile run in which Minor Barkely defeated Paul Rekers of Penn State in one of the most thrilling races ever seen in Chapel Hill. Again this season, the mile run gives promise of furnishing quite a few thrills. Rekers is again running the mile for the Lions, while Minor Barkely's place has been filled by Mark Jones, brilliant sophomore runner, who turned in a time of 4:32 in the State meet Saturday. Rekers has run only once this year and finished the mile in 4:29 against Syracuse. He also placed first in the half mile with a time of 1:58.

Carolina will have Charlie Farmer in the 220 yard dash for the first time this year, and, with Bob Drane and J. K. Smith, also running in this event, the Tar Heels will have an excellent chance to take first place. Farmer's leg injury has kept him out of competition all season and his return will strengthen the Tar Heels considerably.

In the broad jump, Carolina will have Bill Howard and Theron Brown. Howard placed second to Fulmer of Duke in the State meet and has been doing consistent work all season.

Carolina's only loss in dual meets in the past eleven years was suffered last spring when the Princeton Tigers defeated the Tar Heels on their northern trip. Carolina's record for wins in the South is still intact, however, and the Tar Heels will be fighting to keep their 1931 record clean.

Carolina will probably enter Weil and Ken Marland in the quarter mile with Tom Watkins, Wallace Case, and Dick Garrett in the 880. Watkins has been the most outstanding among the half-milers this year, but his best time, a fraction of a second over two minutes, hardly compares with Rekers' time of 1:58 for the same event.

The hurdle events will also see some keen competition when

Tar Heel And Cavalier Nines To Renew Forty Year Rivalry

Pursuant to a rivalry that antedates even the classic Carolina-Virginia wars of the gridiron, the baseball teams of the universities of these sister states will clash here Friday afternoon and in Greensboro's Memorial Stadium Saturday, and thereby hangs a tale, a lot of tales. The game here will be called at 4 o'clock.

Carolina and Virginia staged their first baseball epic in 1891, one year before the first Carolina-Virginia football game, and though they have clashed 86 times over the intervening span of 41 years, they are still deadlocked. Carolina's 6-1 victory in the series-opener this year gave the Tar Heels their 42nd victory. Virginia has had 42 wins too, for two games have been ties.

In Chapel Hill Friday they will be playing a game that will count in the Tri-State League standings, and the Tar Heels, with their season record of 11 wins, 3 losses and 2 ties will be very much out to boost their lead in the conference loop.

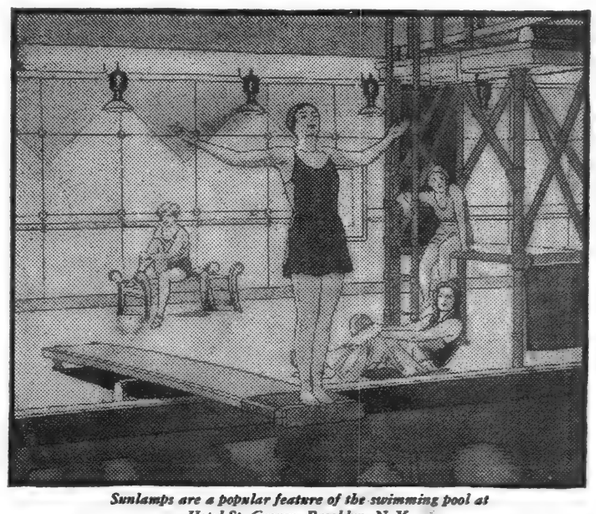
At Greensboro Saturday they will be reviving what is probably the oldest, and certainly the most colorful, college baseball classic in the South. The game draws crowds from far and wide, and the high calibre of the Carolina-Virginia rivalry and the fine games that have resulted, the spirit that is lent by the University's band and cheering sections, up on their special train, and by the large delegations of beautiful debutantes from N. C. C. W., Greensboro College and the other girls' schools of the section, explains why this game in other years has drawn as many as 11,000 fans, the biggest baseball crowds Tar Heelia has seen.

Virginia still holds a slight lead in number of series won over the period from 1891 to 1931, but post-war Tar Heel teams have won much more than their share of games, while inching up on the Cavaliers step by step, and this week the Tar Heels will be out for another series sweep, as in 1928, 1929, and 1930.

Since 1891, from one to four games have been played each year except from 1898 to 1900. Five series have been tied, while Carolina has won 14, 11 by sweeps, and Virginia has won 18, 12 by sweeps. Total wins show each team 42, with 2 games tied.

The high-water mark for the Tar Heels came in 1922, when Herman Bryson, Captain Manly Lewellyn, and "Lefty" Wilson, Carolina's greatest pitching trio, took every game from Virginia by a shutout. Virginia won the first game back in 1891 by 6-1, and Thornwell Haynes, now an Oxford lawyer, had the honor in 1892 of pitching Carolina's first win over Virginia, 7 to 3.

Over the four-year period from 1921 to 1925 Carolina won 11 of 12 games. Johnny Johnson's homer gave the Tar Heels the first game in 1925 by 8-6, but Holland and Darlington hurled Virginia to wins in the last two games. Virginia settled the series in 1926 by taking the final Greensboro classic 6-2, but the Tar Heels have won every Greensboro game, and every series since, and have won every game in 1928, 1929, and 1930.



Fulcher, Ellison, and Westmoreland's pitching carried the 1928 series, and in 1929 it was the pitching of Lefty Ball and the hitting of Henry Satterfield, diminutive shortstop from Durham, and of Jimmy Maus, Greensboro boy, now playing with the Pats, who in the final game at Greensboro, hit three for three and featured Carolina's 4-2 victory. Last year, Jim

Sunlamps are a popular feature of the swimming pool at Hotel St. George, Brooklyn, N. Y.

at College at Home
at Play

COLLEGE-TRAINED electrical engineers coöperated with the medical profession in developing G-E products that safeguard health. Notable among these are the x-ray tube, the G-E refrigerator, and the G-E Sunlamp. Of these three, the Sunlamp is the latest development, but it has already been acclaimed for its service in helping build that vitality which maintains the happiness of good health.

At Cornell University, members of "cold-prevention classes" (under daily, brief, ultra-violet-ray lamp treatments) reported 40 per cent less colds than were reported by classmates in a group without this treatment. Beyond home and college, the use of Sunlamps has extended to swimming pools and indoor golf courses. In the future, you may enjoy the Sunlamp as a standard fixture in offices, trains, clubs, and many other places where people gather.

And you may continue to expect new, unusual, and useful developments from G-E engineering and research. Among such products, there will doubtless be further contributions to personal health, comfort, and convenience, as well as to the promotion of industrial efficiency.

FANS GATHER AT GREENSBORO FOR SATURDAY'S GAME

Southern Railway Will Conduct Special Train to Greensboro And Return.

All roads will lead to Greensboro Saturday, and from the village there will be a special train. For Saturday is the date for the annual Carolina-Virginia classic in Greensboro, closing the thirty-eighth series of the ancient baseball classic in the South.

This game, long acknowledged as the outstanding attraction of the Dixie collegiate season, has filled Greensboro's beautiful Memorial stadium with crowds of as many as 11,000 people in other years, the biggest crowds ever to gather for baseball in the State, and this year it is expected to hit a new high mark. More than 10,000 are expected, and probably 2,000 of these are expected to be Carolina students.

Special Train to Run

The special train, put on by the Southern Railway, will leave Chapel Hill at 9:00 Saturday morning and arrive in Greensboro at noon. It is scheduled to leave Greensboro at 11:59 Saturday night for the return trip. Many students will follow their team, which has a brilliant record of eleven wins to three losses. Excursion rates for the special train will make it possible for practically everyone to go.

Plans are already laid for a colorful pilgrimage, and once more the University's band and cheering sections, and the large delegations from N. C. C. W., Greensboro College and the many other girls' colleges in the section will make a colorful scene.

comes after winning 114 bouts and losing three. During his ring career he has piled up a nice little sum of money, and feels that there is no longer any immediate need of taking a facial massage from unfriendly opponents every few nights. He has decided to go from the ring to the track, and is now an apprentice jockey.

The Tar Heel track stars will meet what is probably their stiffest competition of the year tomorrow when they run up against the Nittany Lions from Penn State. The Tar Heels' chances look a great deal brighter now than they did a week ago. Carolina runners turned in about their best work of the season Saturday in winning the State meet, and as a result, the Lions seem due for a rather strenuous afternoon. Sandy Dameron's 136 feet 3 inches in the discus should be enough to win that event easily, and Ruble's 12 feet 8 inches should give the Tar Heels five more points in the pole vault. Cliff Baucom, who set a new State record in the two mile Saturday, will have plenty of competition from Detwiler who ran the distance in 9:46 last week to beat Baucom's record by 5 seconds. Although Baucom now holds the State record for the two mile run, two other Carolina runners, Hoyt Pritchett and Johnny Henderson, have beaten his time.

GERMAN CLUB RULES

The attention of members of the seven fraternities giving the May Frolics is called to the following rules of the German Club:

The executive committee shall be empowered to suspend from all dances given under the auspices of the German Club, for a period at the discretion of the committee, any student, visitor, or alumnus for any misconduct whatever in any period during which the dance or dances are being held, regardless of whether the misconduct is before, during, or after the dance.

The following are the rules governing the house-parties:

1. The girls must be in their respective lodging places within an hour after the close of each night dance. There are to be no late dates after that time; the boys are to leave the girls, and the girls are to be under the supervision of their respective chaperones.

2. Permission to give a house party must be secured from Mrs. M. H. Stacy, chairman of the house-party committee, in South building.

3. A report must be made to Mrs. Stacy after the house-party.

The following rules shall govern conduct on the dance floor:

1. No smoking on the dance floor.

2. No one showing signs of drinking will be permitted to remain on the floor.

3. No girls will be allowed to leave the hall during an evening dance unless accompanied by a chaperone.

LASKI DISCUSSES DEMOCRACY RULE IN UNITED STATES

mands than at any previous time. "This, in turn, means at least the social service state and, possibly, a state even more collectivisit in temper. The theme of such a state is equality in which is implied, first, transformation of the existing rights of property and, secondly, a development of administration by the state on an increasingly wider scale."

Professor Laski said the first problem goes to the foundations of society. It means "a settlement of the ultimate questions of social value upon that about which men feel most keenly." The second problem, he said, "raises the question of how demands are to be satisfied. For to be satisfied they must be made known and they must be satisfied efficiently.

"This requires in the modern state a recognition that the civil service is the heart of its life. A civil service today, properly to perform its task, must be highly expert in character. Can it practice expertness and yet remain democratic? Modern experience tends to doubt of the issue. Yet a bureaucracy is of all forms of government in the end least able to raise the moral stature of a people."

Geer Praises Institute

At the outset of his address Mr. Geer, the cotton manufacturer, praised the University for holding such an institute. "Here on a common meeting ground, people with beliefs as far apart as the two poles can come together in an atmosphere of calmness and sanity and have the opportunity to iron out their differences," he said. "Under other circumstances, if the two factions should come together face to face, they might be at each other's throats."

Francis Gorman, first international vice-president of the United Textile Workers, another Institute speaker, was in the audience on two occasions when Mr. Geer spoke. When the time came for questioning, as is the custom at each meeting, the labor leader arose and shot a number of pointed questions at the cotton manufacturer, to which the latter readily replied. Both were in good humor. The audiences was greatly amused by the cross-fire.

Not more than fifteen percent of the workers who went on strike in the recent disturbance in Gastonia, Marion, and Danville were in favor of such action, but the other eighty-five percent walked out because they were intimidated by the strike organizers and the fifteen percenters, Mr. Geer said.

Intimidation Method

Asserting that the textile manufacturers "recognize their problems and their deficiencies and are progressively solving them in the way that is commended by the people," Mr. Geer criticized what he described as the "intimidation methods" employed by the labor unions.

"I am not opposed to labor unions as such," he said. "I belive that labor has a right to organize, but they should be organized and directed by southerners who understand our kind of people and our kind of problems and not by outsiders and foreigners."

"Strikes are usually settled by the workers themselves who get impatient and tell the labor leaders where to head in."

Mr. Geer said education would provide the panacea for textile ills. He told of what some of the mills are doing to provide what they regard as the right kind of education for their people.

He said that conditions in the textile industry are improving and that there is a better balance of production and demand than last year. "However the necessity for continued curtailment in order to balance production and demand is still upon us," he said.

Tar Heel And Cavalier Nines To Meet Today

Shields, who will likely work again this season, pitched Carolina to an 8-5 victory in the first game at Charlottesville; the second was rained out; and at Greensboro the Tar Heels went on a hitting spree behind fine pitching of Frank Fleming, now graduated, to win 12-1.

The Cavaliers lost but one man from their infield this year, but their veteran team has been in a slump, winning only from Howard and N. C. State this season. The Tar Heels, young and weak, at season's opening, have astounded everyone by rolling up a record of 11 wins to 2 ties and 3 losses. George Hinton and Jim Shields have perfect pitching records, and Paul Edwards and Cecil Longest have lost but one apiece, while the scrappy hitting club has been led by Paul Dunlap, first baseman, who has a .444 average, and Henry House, outfielder, whose mark is .421.

French Club

The French club will meet for the last time this year this evening at 7:30 in the Episcopal parish house.

INSTITUTE MEN'S VIEWS CONFLICT ON MILL TOPICS

men capable of representing their interests to the best advantage.

"The labor unions have been grossly misrepresented. We had nothing to do with the strike at Marion, but we could have settled the affair if the Manufacturers association had permitted us. At Danville we did call a strike because the workers could not endure the conditions to which they were submitted.

"In almost every case the dissension has been caused by unscientific management on the part of the manufacturers who in their struggle to overcome the effects of economic depression have urged their mills to utmost capacity. The result of this is overproduction and a series of lay-offs and low wages."

Geer's Four Points

Assuring his audience that he approached the subject "in a spirit of friendly tolerance," Mr. Geer outlined "four prerequisites for an intelligent understandng of the textile situation in the South."

He dealt first with the growth of the industry, pointing out that it is still a comparatively new industry that has grown up in the South since the Civil War and that it cannot be judged properly "unless we take into consideration the conditions that obtained in the South throughout the period of its development which has been less than four decades."

Secondly, he pointed out a knowledge of the people was essential for an understanding of the problem. From the beginning of the textile industry and even now, he said, the workers in the South come from the farms.

"Cotton mill workers compete only with people from farms for jobs in the mills," he said, "and there is no way to improve the conditions of Southern cotton workers until something has been done to improve the condition of the Southern farmers."

The earnings of the average mill worker are greater than those of the average farm worker, Mr. Geer said.

Discusses Mill Leadership

The third prerequisite, Mr. Geer stated, is an understanding of the management, the people who founded and operated the mills. "Just now," he pointed out, "we are emerging from the first generation of textile leaders in the South, and it should be borne in mind that most of these men were born and reared on farms and were brought up under conditions no better than conditions that prevailed for the workers in the mill villages at the outset."

Explaining his fourth point, Mr. Geer cited reasons for the growth of the textile industry in the South. This growth, he said, "was the result of the deplorable conditions of agriculture and the complete economic breakdown following the Civil War. The South was forced to turn to something to give employment to its people, and we turned to textile manufacturing because of the equable climate, reasonable and dependable power, and abundance of labor potentially of the very best quality."

Spanish Club

A. K. Shields, of the romance language department, will present an illustrated lecture on Seville to the Spanish club this evening at 7:30. Instead of meeting as usual in the Y. M. C. A., the club will assemble in room 314, Murphey hall. All students interested in this lecture are urged to attend.

Academy President

Dr. William Frederick Prouty (above), of the geology department, will preside over the annual meeting of the North Carolina Academy of Science, which opens at State college in Raleigh this morning. Professor Prouty is president of the Academy.

TRACKMEN CLOSE SEASON AT PENN STATE SATURDAY

McDowell, Penn State's sensational timber topper, meets Rip Slusser in the low hurdles, and Don Waugh and Archie Davis in the highs. McDowell should cop the highs, but Slusser stands a slight favorite to defeat him in the lows.

In the shot put, javelin, and high jump, the Nittany Lions should take first places without much difficulty. Musser, Penn State javelin thrower, won his event against Syracuse last Saturday with a distance of 199 feet 1 1-4 inches. Theron Brown and Stuart Chandler are the Tar Heel's best bets in this event.

FRENCH ETCHINGS TO BE DISPLAYED

"Porte Gothique" are especially striking as examples of what French artists are doing in this field.

This collection of French etchings was made available for exhibition here through the courtesy of a European student who is doing research work in the University and who is a personal acquaintance of the four etchers represented.

The public is invited to attend the exhibition which will be open in Smith building today, tomorrow, and Sunday.

DINNER DANCE TO START WEEK-END SOCIAL FUNCTIONS

Mrs. H. S. Dyer, Mr. and Mrs. J. Maryon Saunders, Mrs. C. H. Harding, and Dr. and Mrs. J. C Lyons.

Girls Invited

The following young ladies have been asked to the dinner dance: Mary Jane Wharton, Greensboro; Alice Houston Quarles, Charlotte; Martha DeLaney, Charlotte; Electra Waggoner, New York City; Louisa Howard, Wilmington; Alice Alexander, Charlotte; Romaine Clark, Wilson; Francis Weddington, Concord; Nonie Withers, Charlotte; Lilliamn Johnson, Southern Pines; Rhody Henderson, Southern Pines; Lib Nunn, New Bern; Phoebe Randolph Harding, Charlotte; Nora Browning, Littleton; Charlotte Wilkinson, Rocky Mount; Angelia Morrison, Charlotte; Helen Royster, Henderson; Agnes Pollock, New Bern; and Virginia Turner, Weldon.

ALL NIGHT LONG he gambled in vain!

At daybreak he returned to say goodbye. A great romantic picture of Arthur Schnitzler's soul novel!

MAY NUMBER OF ALUMNI REVIEW JUST OFF PRESS

Issue Contains Plea for Class '31 to Join Alumni Association.

The May issue of the Alumni Review, the eighth number in the present series has just been distributed. The cover of the issue carries a picture of New East and Davie Hall, with a section of the wisteria arbor in full bloom, a very appropriate picture to signify the fruits of the abundance of rain we have been having here.

The first article in the magazine is one on the statue of Sir Walter Raleigh that has been presented to the University by Colonel Owen Kenan of the class of 1894. The statue is a life-sized figure, carved from a solid pine log. This bit of seventeenth century art is now on exhibit in the Library.

The next article is a very important appeal on the part of K. P. Lewis, President of the Alumni Association, to the members of the Class of 1931 to join the Alumni Association and keep in touch with the University. Mr. Lewis' letter points out the slackness of classes in the past to recognize the benefits obtained from keeping their alumni contacts. He pleads for a high percentage of the 1931 class to join the Association and thereby be the first one in recent years to do such a thing.

The program of the graduatting exercises is outlined next, with a picture of Rev. E. McNeill Poteat, Jr., who has been chosen to make the baccalaureate address on June 7. The Commencement exercises are scheduled to begin on Saturday, June 6 and run through Tuesday, June 9.

A story of the election of Dr. Julian A. Moore as successor to Dr. Frank C. Smith, '21 as president of the Medical Unit of the Alumni Association is also contained in this issue. The other newly elected officers are: Dr. William M. Copperidge, '17, was elected vice-president, and Dr. L. E. Fields, '21, secretary-treasurer. At a luncheon given for the medical graduates, Dr. Issac Manning, dean of the University school of medicine, Professors C. S. Mangum, and W. de B. McNider of the medical school faculty made speeches.

Order of Sheiks To Banquet Tonight

The members of the Order of the Sheiks will give their annual banquet tonight in the Carolina Inn at 7:30, at which a part of Emerson Gill's orchestra will render music. The affair is to be strictly formal and all members are required to bring their dates. No stags will be admitted.

GRADUATE STUDENT GETS FELLOWSHIP APPOINTMENT

Abram Gustavus Bayroff, candidate for a Ph.D. degree here at commencement, has received notice of his appointment to a national research council fellowship for next year. This fellowship will permit him to devote full time to the continuation of his researches in the field of animal behavior at any laboratory in the country. Bayroff will probably continue his work at either California, Stanfard, or North Carolina.

Josephus Daniels

Josephus Daniels will act as toastmaster at the international relations luncheon when Professors James T. Shotwell and Harold J. Laski will speak.

Clinard Chosen Head Of Music Fraternity

The annual election of officers of Alpha Rho Chapter of Phi Mu Alpha sinfionia took place in the music building this week. The following officers were elected: John W. Clinard, of High Point, president and supreme councilman; W. T. Whitsett, Jr., of Whitsett, vice-president; John Miller, of Winston-Salem, secretary-treasurer; and Wofford Humphries, of Asheville, chapter historian. This is the second honor to come to John Clinard for leadership in musical activities on the campus, as he was elected president of the university band at the last business meeting. Twelve rising juniors and seniors have been pledged by the musical fraternity, and will be initiated May 17.

As was announced recently in this paper, Phi Mu Alpha is to bring the famous coloratura soprano, Amelita Galli-Curci, to the campus for a concert on January 27, 1932.

T. E. P. Entertains In Varied Program

Many and varied social events will feature the annual Tau Epsilon Phi house party, which starts tonight and lasts until Sunday evening.

The party will be opened with a formal dance at the Carolina Inn, beginning at 9:00 p. m. this evening and lasting until 1:00 a. m.

For Saturday the program consists of a swimming party in the afternoon, followed by a tea dansant. In the evening there will be an informal dance on the veranda of the chapter house. The lawn will be decorated with lanterns and gayly decorated benches. This dance is given only for members of the fraternity.

The music for the formal dance tonight will be furnished by Ty Sawyer and his Carolina Buccaneers. All decorations for the week-end are being supplied by the committee of Sam Breen, Mayne Albright, and Red Greene.

CREECH GETS FELLOWSHIP

A fellowship for the study of romance languages at the University of Lyons was awarded to Walter Creech of the French department, by the French ministry of public instruction.

Joseph T. Wilson, Jr., Thomas W. Teer, and Oliver Cromwell were confined to the infirmary yesterday.

LASKI TO CLOSE INSTITUTE TODAY

Professor Shotwell Speaks in Memorial Hall at 10:00 This Morning.

This morning at 10:10 o'clock Professor James T. Shotwell, professor of history at Columbia University, will deliver the last morning address on the Human Relations Institute program as the Institute closes tonight. Professor Shotwell will speak on "The New Era in International Relations, or The Greatest Resolution in History."

A public forum on international relations will take place in Gerrard hall at 12:00 with Professor Shotwell as leader and President Graham presiding, and at 1:00 o'clock a luncheon on international relations will take place with Professor Harold J. Laski and Professor Shotwell as the honor guests. The Honarable Josephus Daniels will act as toastmaster.

At 8:00 tonight Professor Harold J. Laski, professor of political science at the London School of Economics, will deliver his third and final address on "The Expert in Democracy." This will be the final meeting of the Institute.

DANCERS ENJOY ANNUAL FROLIC

Luncheon, Afternoon and Evening Dances Will Include Festivities To be Staged Today.

The second annual May Frolic began last night in the Tin Can with Emerson Gill and his Columbia recording orchestra furnishing the music.

The festivities are sponsored by seven fraternities: Delta Kappa Epsilon, Sigma Alpha Epsilon, Kappa Sigma, Beta Theta Pi, Zeta Psi, Sigma Nu, and Sigma Chi and consist of three dances in the Tin Can and one in Durham. The dances in Chapel Hill include the one last night, and an afternoon and evening dance today. There will be a luncheon dance this afternoon at the Washington Duke hotel from 1:30 to 3:00.

The Tin Can was secured to provide ample dancing room and was decorated in much the same manner as for the Junior-Senior ball. Black and white is the motif, and the building is divided into sections; one large space in the center for dancing, the end farthest from the entrance for the tea garden, and the left side, upon entering, for

Debate Team Lists Interesting Experiences On Western Tour

Slaughter Gives Account of Trip to Cincinnati, Evanston, Chicago, And Cleveland, and Tells of Impressions of Western Universities.

(EDITORIAL NOTE: The following article tells of the experiences of the Carolina debating team which has just returned from an extensive northern trip to Kentucky, Ohio, and Illinois. Carolina debaters making the trip were Bert Haywood and J. W. Slaughter.)

By J. W. Slaughter

Arriving in a strange town at 4:30 in the morning with only a disinterested mail carrier to answer questions isn't the pleasantest thing about debating trips. At Asbury College in Kentucky a sleepy-eyed but very courteous manager instigated a series of hospitalites which were unexcelled by any other college visited on the trip.

College life at Asbury is truly communal. Everyone eats under the same roof at the same time—with a surprising degree of civility and quiet. Even the Philomatheian banquet in honor of the visiting debating team was no exception.

The proposal of having carefully thought out questions fired at one—having to eat one's own words as one of the judges put it—was very popular with the audience of more than 400. It was the team's first encounter in Oregon style, but not nearly as bad as imagined. Questioning works both ways.

Radio Debate

The debate with the University of Cincinnati was staged in the studios of WLW. Here, if anywhere in the world, is one amazed at the precision and significance of the time table. After the radio-debate, the team was conducted through the studios where we could watch the various mechanisms of broadcasting at work.

Chicago, with gangs and beef-yards, was next. At Evanston, however, debating seems to be a major interest. Five debates were scheduled for that one week; and the opponents had represented Northwestern in twenty-three inter-collegiate contests this year. The lake-shore school is indeed beautiful, serene, and serious. The relief comedy was supplied by a fellow Tar Heel after the debate as we were being introduced to the night life of the windy city.

High School Audience

The last and most interesting debate of the series was held before a high school audience in Cleveland. More than 500 boys and girls were present. And if one is to judge from audience questions after the discussion, these students are far above the average when it comes to economics as well as ability to speak decisively from the floor.

Later in the day while being introduced to other phases of Western Reserve University life, the team was attracted by a noise strangely like that of a baby chick. One of the botany professors had managed to rob a nest of the American eagle and two of the eggs had been hatched in captivity. That, is is believed, is the first time baby eagles have been hatched in captivity. The fuzzy little fowl had almost no use of its feet but very strong wing movements. Western Reserve is too mixed up with Cleveland to enjoy the beauty of Northwestern or the serenity of Asbury.

This trip was the third and last of a series of trips taken this year by various members of the University debating team. The other trips extended to Boston and Texas.

Results

The debate at Asbury College was won by Asbury by judges' decision while there was no decision at Cincinnati. Northwestern was to have been a shift of audience opinion; but, due to a shortage of ballots, it was made a no decision debate. Western Reserve was a shift of opinion and was won by the University.

Hickerson's Book To Be Ready Soon

Professor T. Felix Hickerson of the engineering school will leave for New York soon to arrange with the McGraw-Hill Book company for the publication of his new book "The Analysis of Continuous Beams and Frames," and for a second edition of his "Highway Curves and Earthwork."

Dr. Hickerson, although on leave of absence from the University since Christmas, has remained in Chapel Hill to work on his book, which will be completed shortly. After spending most of this month in New York and after stopping a while in Washington he will probably be back here for Commencement.

LASLEY REVIEWS LIFE OF DR. CAIN

Dr. J. W. Lasley, of the mathematics department, delivered an address yesterday afternoon in Raleigh at the annual meeting of the North Carolina Academy of Sciences on the late William Cain.

In his talk, Dr. Lasley gave a history of Dr. Cain's life from his birth until he passed away on December 6, 1930. Dr. Cain was the only native North Carolinian to be a director of the American Society of Civil Engineers. He was also a fellow of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, a member of the Elisha Mitchell Scientific Society, and a member of the North Carolina Academy of Sciences.

In 1923 the American Society of Civil Engineers presented Dr. Cain with the Cross medal for his paper on "The Circular Arch Under Normal Loads."

Dr. Cain first came to this University in 1888 as an instructor in mathematics, and worked here as such until his retirement in 1920. He was one of the five original Kenan professors at the University. In 1920 the University conferred on him a Doctor of Science degree.

Fannie Wilson Dies Here Last Thursday

Miss Fannie Legrand Wilson, youngest daughter of the late Dr. and Mrs. T. J. Wilson died here Thursday. Funeral services were held from the residence yesterday at four. Rev. C. Excell Rozzelle and Rev. Eugene Olive conducted the services.

Miss Wilson had been an invalid for many years. She was in her fifty-fifth year and was highly esteemed by her numerous friends. Surviving are her three sisters, Miss Alice Wilson and Mrs. H. N. Brown; Mrs. Braxton Craig of Monroe, and one brother, Dr. T. J. Wilson, Jr.

Evans To Study History of Chicago

J. G. Evans, Jr., of the economics department, has been granted a research fellowship for the ensuing year by the University of Chicago. This fellowship is to study and write a report of the economic history of the city of Chicago from 1890 up to the present date.

Senior Regalia

Today will absolutely be the last opportunity for seniors to obtain their "beer suits" for senior week which will be May 18-25. Orders for the regalia may be placed at Randolph-MacDonald's clothing store.

NEGRO EDUCATOR GIVES CAUSE OF RACE PROBLEMS

Religious, Political and Economic Aspects of Question Explained By Dr. Mordecai Johnson.

"When one thinks of North Carolina, South Carolina, and the rest of the South, one thinks immediately of the race problem," stated Dr. Mordecai Johnson, president of Howard University of Washington, D. C., the largest Negro university in the world, in Memorial hall yesterday morning before a full house. "Negroes are an unknown race, even to-day. What will they become? The Negro is in poor economic condition, and his limitations are rooted in economic trouble, but there are a great many white people in this country in the same condition. Slavery impoverished, depressed, and mutilated not only the Negroes, but also these whites. Four and a half million slaves were hurt by slavery, but more than five million "poor whites" were hurt at the same time. There are over twenty million people in the United States, white and black, who have never led a normal economic life because of slavery. We are now passing through a period of economic depression. Following the war the economic danger to whites was the surplus of negro labor. White men were paid $1.25 a day for common labor, whereas Negro men were paid $1.00 for the same amount of labor. When the Negroes wanted more money, they were told that they wanted as much pay as the whites, but when they were allowed $1.25 per day the whites wanted $1.50. They were then told that the Negroes were getting only $1.25 for the same amount of work. Slavery caused poor wages to be paid then, and the country has never recovered from the effects of it."

Political Aspect

Not only the Negroes, but the "poor whites" have had little to do with the political life of the country, since thousands of the latter had been disfranchised, according to Dr. Johnson. Taking Mississippi as an example, he said that no presidential candidate has visited that state to speak to the voters since 1865. The reason for this is that there is no free, bi-partisan political discussion in that state. "The struggle to secure the Negro political rights in the South is also a struggle to secure the same for the white man. The Democratic party has a fine chance to make itself the con-

Koch To Teach at California Both Summer Sessions

Professor Frederick H. Koch is going to Los Angeles to teach in both sessions of the summer school at the University of Southern California. For the past few summers the professor has been in Los Angeles teaching drama, but until this summer he always taught at the University of California.

The subjects he plans to teach there are Comparative Drama, Playwriting, and Play Production.

On the way to Los Angeles Professor Koch will stop at the New Mexico Normal University where he will lecture on folk drama as a guest of Professor Lester Raines.

Beer Suits

With the announcement of what is to constitute senior regalia for the graduating class of this year, we hasten to congratulate the committee upon its judicious selection of such appropriate and conservative apparel. No doubt long and diligent search was necessary before such original and fitting costume could be hit upon.

Of course the inutility of garments which will serve the wearer for one week is readily apparent; granted that the lordly seniors will vie with frosh in the process of initiation for honors as the most conspicuous "shines" on the campus; admitted that we but continue the long-followed custom of aping the habits initiated by northern collegians; and not denying the obvious absurdity of supposedly mature near-graduates parading about in more or less juvenile costume. But consider the satisfaction to be gained from serving as the center of attraction in what will probably be a long-remembered event.

Perhaps, judging from the name attached to this particular haberdashery, the class of '31 desires to promote a gentle campaign vaguely connected with the "noble experiment" so familiar to good, law-abiding Americans. Or is it to aid the cotton farmers in their perennial attempts to popularize garments from home-grown material? Why not also, then, wear placards boosting optional attendance, carry apples as reminders of the present unfortunate "repression," push baby carriages as a protest against restrictions of dissemination of birth control information, or carry alarm clocks in protest against 8:30 classes?—J. M. L.

A Quarter Or A Half?

Professor Laski makes the interesting, and largely justifiable, comment that American colleges and universities place too much emphasis on lectures and examinations. The result is a confused mass of largely unrelated facts being mastered by the student, with little conception of their deeper significance. In other words, the American system makes for shallow education.

If there be any truth in this initial premise it would be well for the faculty and students of the University of North Carolina to consider the merits of the quarter system, and whether we should return to the semester system.

Under the quarter system there is a rush to complete the subject matter of the course—high pressure is the order of the day. University life is one midterm, one examination after another. There is some monotony about this business of attending lectures on a given course five successive days in every week. Too much of the work given here and in every other American university is the so-called "spoon-fed" variety. The quarter system accentuates this tendency.

It is true that the quarter system fits into co-ordination with the summer school better than the semester system. On the other hand Saturdays are largely employed under the semester system, and generally not used under the quarter system. Let us consider the question in all of its phases; if a change is desirable in this respect, or others, let us have the initiative and courage to make them.—W. D. H.

With Contemporaries

Is the Game Worth the Candle?

The same do-or-die spirit in which our fore-bears drank themselves under the table persists today; it has become woven into the very pattern of our national life. Never a foreign cruiser looms on the horizon, but our navy howls to match it with 10. Our schools, our churches, our public buildings must awe the beholder with their magnificence and with their modern plumbing. Millions must be amassed. Faint heart never won fair fortune; the race is to the swift, and to the crooked. And now that we have our money, let us exult, oh let us build the most commanding structure in the world.

In college too, as well as in life, there are many games to play. We play them. We more than play them. We play them to the death.

First, there is the fraternity, that institution that has undertaken to teach us the social graces in return for $100 down and the balance to be paid in monthly installments. How faithfully like loyal sheep, do we flock to the holy portals every Wednesday to be re-injected with a dose of brotherly spirit. How ardently, and with what scheming wiles, do we seek to bring the lamb into the fold for the glory of God and of Chi Beta Phi.

Secondly, there is the game of marks, indulged in to excess by many, and moderately by the law. Here and there may be found a choice spirit who is getting an education in spite of the fact that he has come to college. He finds adventure in dipping into books. He takes delight in savoring the substance of this or that teacher, as one would sip an old wine, holding it up to the light and enjoying the flavor. But the nature of things makes this course a dangerous one. Marks rule in our college. We must grind, cajole, threaten; we must worship the mark.

Not the least harmful of games is competitive sport, as anyone will agree who troubles himself to look into this matter, consider it, and weigh the factors involved. Men come to college for an education; they find their values reversed, culture connived at marks bowed down to, and the all-powerful "D" adored. They are puzzled for a while, until sufficient college spirit has got into them to send them out on the football field in the performance of their doubtful duty. If all the sweat, blood, and muscle employed in pursuit of the "D" were laid end to end, something useful might be accomplished; if all the whipped-up savagery of old grads at football games were directed into other channels, and damned, and converted into power, it would light the entire city of New York for perhaps a day.

Of course, winning is some justification for effort and nervous power expended during a game. But there are times when even this consolation is not to be had. In England life goes on evenly, peacefully under the quiet of old elms in the quad. Shells glide along the river, soccer is played for the joy of it, and rugby for its own sake. No highly-paid coaches "exhort their mettlesome charges." From Oxford a lacrosse team, 10 pounds lighter to the man, comes to run circles round our corn-fed stalwarts; to the mournful tune of 12 to 1 they defeat us at our own American game.

In review, what is the price of being socially among the elect? One hundred dollars down, ten dollars a month, and a college career spent in trying to mould oneself to the accepted pattern. What is the price of a Phi Beta Kappa key? Self-imposed confinement in a narrow cell while spring unfolds her miracle on the other side of the dusty pane. What is the price of a "D," symbol of rugged manhood, key to the charmed circle of campus popularity? Three hours a day of heart-breaking competition, until the body becomes a machine and the mind part of the team-minded, while the nerves cry out under the strain and are not heard.

Is the game worth the candle? Have we Americans forgotten, or have we never known the value of balance? This editorial is a plea for moderation, and a warning.—The Dartmouth.

The Suppression of Student Opinion

Opinions from the student public on any question are continually being frowned upon by the staid and sedate elder generation. Whether the scoffings arise from the alleged inabilities of our tender age or the flippant attitudes of the typified collegian, is not our concern since such excuses will never force us to rebuff or retrace our ideas until they are proven false.

An opinion because it is founded in the mind of a collegian should not be the cause of its immediate dismissal. If the idea is false, correction is a necessary and valuable factor at that particular instance; if it is correct, the indication of thought is admirable. The greatest task of education is to entice mental contemplation; destructive criticism of such manifestations are seriously detrimental.

If we were to introduce an editorial policy which lacked opinion, it is not presumptuously difficult to conceive what the result would be. Without correction, errors remain; without expression, though is nil.

If opinions are to be stifled, education might just as well be discontinued, but if opinions are to be compared and discussed, they will eventually lead to a conclusion. If there are those who feel that they are qualified to offer decisions on opinions it remains their duty to encourage and correct student thought. Encouragement has led to many wonders; likewise have opinions.—Daily Californian.

DAVIDSON HONOR SOCIETY TAPS ELEVEN STUDENTS

The Davidson college chapter of Omicron Delta Kappa, national honorary leadership fraternity, tapped seven members of the junior class, four members of the senior class and three members of the faculty Tuesday morning.

The juniors, chosen as leaders at Davidson include Don S. King of Bristol, Tennessee, president of the student body; Roger P. Enloe, of Buchanan, Georgia, president of the Y. M. C. A.; Donald M. MacQueen, president of the athletic association; D. Grier Martin, of Covington, Georgia, editor of the Davidsonian; J. H. McKinnon, Jr., president of the senior class; E. C. Dwelle, Jr., of Charlotte, editor of Quips and Cranks, the annual; and R. W. Gorrell, Jr., of Winston-Salem, manager of the football team and leader in other activities.

Seniors selected for membership included Jas. A. Jones, of Laurinburg, intercollegiate debater and religious leader; J. Archie Cannon, of Concord, business manager of the Davidsonian and president of the Pan-Hellenic council; H. S. Covington, of Red Springs, president of the "D" club; and J. L. Smith, of Dunn, student store manager and R. O. T. C. leader.

Lieutenant-Colonel Scott, commandant of the R. O. T. C. unit at Davidson, Dr. C. K. Brown, Davidson graduate and head of the economics department; and Professor K. J. Foreman, of the Bible and philisophy department, were the three faculty members tapped during the ceremonies.

Duke Commencement Plans Are Complete
